LEGISLATING UNION DEMOCRACY

By

PROFESSOR CLYDE SUMMERS

"To protect the labor movement from any and all corrupt influences....To safeguard the democratic character of the labor movement..." These are stated objectives of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. Six codes of ethical practices have sprung from these seminal clauses. At the same time the Senate Committee on Improper Practices has spread before the public vivid evidence that the record of union democracy is badly blotted. The Federation is dedicated to cleaning its own house. The committee is insistent on giving a helping hand.

The hour is too late to debate whether the law should intervene in internal union affairs. The common law has long reached into unions to compel compliance with the constitution and also to enforce certain minimum standards of fairness and decency. Federal and state statutes already stand on the books reaching admission and expulsion rules, elections, financial affairs, and qualifications for union office. Whether we like it or not, further legislation is a foregone conclusion. The critical problem at the present is to establish the guide lines for that legislation in order that it may improve and strengthen democratic unionism to the benefit of the whole society. All that can be said here is mere prologue to that difficult task.

I

At the outset, certain underlying questions which reach deeply into our basic premises must be faced. How we answer them greatly affects how we legislate.

First, why do we seek to make unions democratic? In part this is because the labor movement itself demands that unions be democratic. In the words of the Ethical Practices Committee, "Freedom and democracy are essential attributes of our movement. Labor organizations lacking these attributes....are unions in name only. Authoritarian control....is contrary to the spirit, the tradition and the principles which should always guide and govern our movement." Our reasons, however, strike much deeper than this. They cut close to the center of our system of government.

Unions do double duty in our democratic structure. They provide a device, through collective bargaining, of protecting and promoting the interest of workers with a minimum of governmental action. Free collective bargaining shortens the reach of central legal control in the economy by establishing a separate structure of industrial government--a kind of economic federalism. Unionism and collective bargaining reduce the need for regulating the terms and conditions of employment and thereby provide an alternative to suffocating statism. This, however, is but half the job, for unions are also instruments through which workers can gain a voice in determining their terms and conditions of employment. They extend the principle of self-government by carrying a measure of democracy into industrial government. If unions are to fulfill both of these functions they must be both independently strong and internally democratic.

The highest function of the law is to protect and foster the democratic process. When the law gives affirmative sanction to the right to organize and bargain collectively, it helps create institutions of government outside the state and thus protects against overreaching state control. When the law promotes union democracy, it injects into industry an element of self-government and thereby fosters an extension of the democratic process. Indeed, the law can not properly do otherwise, for a democracy can not create institutions and vest in them the power to govern without insisting that such power be exercised democratically.

From this premise, which is but an unprovable personal conviction, two general guides begin to evolve. One is that we defeat ourselves if unions are regulated in such detail that they become captives of the state. The other is that the standards of democracy which we seek in unions are analogous to those which we seek in other instruments of government.

The second question is, how do we measure whether unions have fallen short of these standards? The measurement is not merely in numbers or percentages. It is conceded by all that only a minority of unions discrimate against Negroes, ballot boxes are seldom stuffed, political opponents within the union are only occasionally expelled, rebellious locals are not always placed in receivership, and out of billions of union funds only a few million have been filched. The overwhelming majority of union leaders are completely honest and dedicated to improving the lot of their members, and are far more concerned with combatting apathy than curbing criticism.

However, oppressive and corrupt use of power does exist and is not confined to the Teamsters Union. In the Bakery Workers, for example, Secretary Sims charged President Cross with misuse of union funds, including maintaining an expensive "lady organizer" on the union payrolls, purchase of cadillacs, and accepting gifts and loans from employers. The General Executive Board, a majority of whose salaries Cross controls, heard these charges, cleared Cross and summarily suspended Sims for making them. Recent revelations have uncovered misconduct in the United Textile Workers, Distillery Workers, and Allied Industrial Workers. In the past disturbing examples have occurred in the Building Service Employees, Hodcarriers, Iron Workers, Longshoremen, Operating Engineers and Stagehands. Even the Auto Workers, the Garment Workers and the Steel Workers have not been immune to such charges.

The relative number of such instances is small, but it is not insignificant. Nor is the number the full measure, any more than the visible portion of an iceberg measures its full size. Expulsion of one critic may silence a hundred others; suspending one local may be sufficient lesson for all; and rigging one election may discourage opposition in a dozen. More subtle but far more pernicious is that such practices encourage the members to look upon the union not as a democratic institution but as simply a business device to increase their paychecks. Cynicism destroys all sense of responsibility and futility replaces faith in democratic processes. Thus even single instances of oppression feed the apathy and hasten the hardening of the oligarchic arteries.

We are dealing here with the civil liberties of union members--free speech, fair trial, honest elections and equal treatment within the structure of industrial government. Even a single violation is a matter of public concern. We cannot wait to act until violations become commonplace.

It is necessary to recognize that although there are no overt acts of oppressio the form of democracy may be but a thin shell covering a congealed oligarchy. Leadership, once elected, may become entrenched too deeply to be removed except by violent upheaval. The bureaucratic structure, created to make the union efficient and effective, tends to centralize power at the top, creates a one-party political organization, and monopolizes the union newspaper and other methods of communication within the union. The last election in the Steelworkers vividly illustrates the obstacles faced by an opposition in unseating the leader of a national union. In spite of the honesty and dedication of union leaders, these forces feed, and in turn feed upon, the apathy of the members. Organized opposition withers and the democratic process wastes away.

It is self-evident that the law can deal most effectively with overt acts of oppression, and that these are the first order of business. However, we ought not discard the possibility that certain measures, legal or institutional might have significant impact on the drift toward bureaucratic centralism in unions.

The third question is whether there is any base of common understanding or attitudes from which legislation can proceed. It is a traditional tenet of union faith that unions should run their own affairs. Outsiders are at best officious inter-meddlers, mistrusted as potential spies or saboteurs. Any legal intervention is anathema. This attitude is in part a product of union nationalism,--an expression of organizational independence and sovereignty. It is reinforced by the compelling fear born of experience that intervention may be only a device to weaken the union and threaten its survival in collective bargaining. The leaders of the AFL-CIO openly admit that corrupt and undemocratic practices persist and that they lack power to eradicate the evils. However, the traditional union distrust of any regulation of internal affairs still prevails.

Conterbalancing this attitude is a growing one outside the unions, that the public has an interest in how unions conduct their affairs. Corruption and oppression in unions is no longer a private matter, for we have entrusted unions with public responsibilities. Union members must be guaranteed the elemental rights of citizenship in the union. The demand for legislation is spurred by a conviction that the AFL-CIO cannot clean its own house alone. Al Hayes, Chairman of the Ethical Practices Committee has himself said, "In a very real sense the expulsion of a wayward affiliate from the AFL-CIO does not solve the problem of unethical practices at all. It is a sort of handwashing ritual by which the great labor movement publicly absolves itself of any blame for the situation, a situation which continues to exist." Such handwashing does not satisfy. Too many feel that the dirty spots need scrubbing with strong soap.

A third attitude, less openly expressed, is that union abuses should be solved by reducing union power. The grudging acceptance of collective bargaining is but a veneer concealing deep hostility to unions. These people are less concerned with eliminating undemocratic practices than exploiting them to weaken unions as effective bargaining agents. Thus, Senator Goldwater, while denouncing the "unbridled, uncontrolled power" of union leaders and advocating that the anti-trust laws should be applied to labor, congratulated Jimmy Hoffa for his union philosophy and wished him success in his conflicts with Walter Reuther.

Between these attitudes there is no real common ground. However, responsible union leaders now recognize that they can no longer insist on immunity from legal control. To do so would strengthen the appeal of extremists for crippling legislation. There is within reach a working compromise between conscientious union leaders and those whose genuine concern is to protect and foster union democracy. Legislation so conceived cannot be successfully resisted by those whose hidden or subconscious goal is not to strengthen the democratic process but to weaken unions.

II

Let us turn now to the more difficult question, the core of the problem--what guides should we follow in developing such legislation? The purpose here is not to present any detailed proposals, but to suggest certain broad principles which we should follow.

The first and most fundamental guide line is that legislation on internal union affairs should be completely segregated from legislation on union-management relations. We are concerned with the rights of union members in their union, not the right of the employer to be free from the union's economic force.

Proposals to prohibit organizational picketing, curtail secondary boycotts, or outlaw union security clauses must be excluded. They may at times contribute to a pattern of corruption or oppression, but they are primarily directed toward the process of collective bargaining and involve considerations far beyond the problems of union democracy.

This segregation of issues is of greatest practical importance. To intermingle the problems will stir the deepest fears in unions; cooperation in developing the law will dissolve; and antagonism will crystalize. The McClellan Committee has already jeopardized its usefulness. In February, in opening the investigation, Senator McClellan listed seven subjects for investigation--all directed toward internal union problems. President Meany offered and gave the Committee full cooperation. In July the Committee listed eleven areas of study. Three of the new areas were secondary boycotts, organizational picketing, and union political action. Whole-hearted cooperation is now made impossible, and color is given to the smoke screen defense that the Committee is engaged in union busting.

A corollary to this first principle is that the employer should never be made a policeman of the union's internal affairs. Union members will close ranks behind the most dissolute and dictatorial leaders when the employer intervenes. For the opposition, employer aid is the kiss of death. Furthermore, employers do not make reliable policemen, for their objective is profitable production, not civil liberties. Section 304 of Taft-Hartley required joint administration of welfare funds in the naive belief that employers would protect against raiding or arbitrary denial of claims. Ten years of experience has shown that most employers exert no effective control, preferring to avoid unnecessary friction. There is no evidence that employers prefer democratic unions, but there is substantial evidence that at least some employers find it profitable to deal with racketeers and union leaders who need not consult their members.

The second major principle in legislating for union democracy is that legal intervention should be kept to a minimum. This is not so much a defining rule as a guiding attitude-- the declaration of a central value. This follows from the basic premise that the power of the state should be kept confined. It is also dictated by the traditional distrust of unions of such regulation.

More concretely, this principle requires that we do the most we can through laws now in effect. More effective enforcement of laws against embezzlement, bribery, extortion, and racketeering might skim some of the worst scum from poluted unions. At this point it appears evident that it is not enough merely to prod the overworked police and prosecutors. New methods of enforcement need to be devised. Small modifications in existing laws might make large differences, without substantially increasing intervention. The filing requirements of Taft-Hartley might be given flesh and blood by requiring that financial reports be supported by a detailed audit, by imposing substantial penalties for false statements, and by providing some check on the accuracy of the statements.

This principle further requires that any additional legislation should attempt to isolate the specific points at which legal measures will best reach recurrent evils. For example establishing adequate protection of members' right to criticize their officers, and creating channels through which they can learn what the officers are doing, might reduce the necessity for regulating the officers themselves. The approach suggested is the exact opposite of that of Representative Landrum who heard the complaint of the Los Angeles Musicians that they were being compelled to contribute to the musicians trust fund from which they received no benefit. He introduced a bill "to increase employee participation and control over collective bargaining." By the terms of his bill he would require individual authorizations from each employee for contributions to health and welfare funds! This is to burn the barn in order to roast a few pigs.

The third guiding principle in developing legislation is that the law should encourage and strengthen the union movement's efforts to clean its own house.

The leaders of the AFL-CIO are genuinely resolved to use the utmost of their power and influence to purge the labor movement of misleaders and malpractices. The Longshoremen have been expelled, the Allied Industrial Workers, Laundry Workers and Distillery Workers have been ordered to clean up or get out, and the Teamsters have been served with charges. Beck, Dorfman, Naddeo, Cilento and others have been removed from positions of responsibility. Six ethical practices codes have created an extensive body of private legislation governing internal union affairs. No stone should be left unturned to discover or develop devices through which the law can help implement such self-regulation.

One method which offers substantial promise is to design legislation so as to postpone active legal intervention until the unions have had adequate opportunity to act. The jurisdictional dispute provision in Taft-Hartley requiring that the unions be given ten days in which to act on the dispute points the way. It vastly reduced the necessity for Board action and induced the unions to establish for the first time a workable device for settling such disputes internally. Legal action is a last resort, but its immediate prospect can provide a prodding reminder to the unions against complacent inaction or idle excuses.

The Federation's codes set forth in considerable detail the standards which it believes unions should maintain. These should be given the greatest weight in fixing the standards which the law should enforce.

The fourth principle is that the law is of limited worth without proper methods of enforcement. This is obvious, but some of its implications are not so obvious. There is no need here to elaborate on the problems of enforcing criminal sanctions. Alternative methods must be examined with care for booby traps. For example, Minnesota passed a Labor Union Democracy Act which regulated union elections and required unions to give financial reports to their members. To enforce this, the statute provided that the state conciliation commissioner, if he believes a union has failed to comply, should certify that fact to the Governor who can then either appoint a referee to investigate or order the matter closed. The task of initiating proceedings against a union is thus put upon a man whose public duty requires him to maintain a friendly and confidential relationship with unions. The ultimate sanction is apparently to deprive the union of protection under the state labor relations act -- a sanction that would scarcely frighten Mr. Brennan of the Minneapolis Teamsters.

The Taft-Hartley filing requirements are enforced only by denying the non-complying union access to the Board. This gives the members no remedy but enables the employer to play policeman by refusing to bargain with the union. It contaminates the collective bargaining process with internal union problems, with little gain either to collective bargaining or union democracy.

Legislating union democracy is at best difficult, for there are no simple formulas. However, we can greatly increase the likelihood of getting sensible legislation if we keep steadily in mind these four guiding principles. First, keep separate the problems of internal union affairs from the problems of collective bargaining. Second, keep legal intervention to a minimum. Third, encourage and implement union self-regulation. Fourth, make the method of enforcement appropriate for the good sought.

III

These broad principles give us a sense of direction, but they do not get us through the thicket. There is a confusing array of paths open, many leading to dead ends, some with treacherous pitfalls, and none without thorns. I have no map, know of none, and suspect that none has yet been even roughly sketched. All that can be done here is to suggest four paths which seem worthy of exploration.

The first possible path which might get us past the underbrush is to take profit making out of union leadership. The Senate Committee hearings have graphically revealed how union officers can exploit their position for personal gain. Treasuries can be plundered to buy homes, cadillacs, race horses, and even "lady organizers." Union funds are "borrowed" without interest or security, and with no due date except that fixed by the danger of discovery. If the treasury is bare or guarded, other sources are available. Vice President Kralstein of the Bakery Workers cooked up a testimonial dinner in his honor and solicited contributions from both members and employers. Grateful for favors past and future, they contributed over $60,000. It has been testified that Beck's son made $19,000 selling toy trucks to Teamster's locals and Hoffa's wife shared profits of $125,000 from contracts made with trucking firms with which Hoffa negotiated contracts.

The immediate vice in these transactions is that it converts the union officer from a democratic leader into the operator of a business enterprise. His personal interests are placed in conflict with his union responsibilities. The ultimate vice is that the ease of exploitation attracts ruthless pirates like Johnny Dio whose sole objective is plunder and whose methods destroy every semblance of democracy.

Does this not suggest one direction in which the law might move--to seek to make more difficult the exploitation of union office for financial gain. This may require more explicit legal statement of the fiduciary position of union officers. It may involve establishing minimum accounting standards, or requiring detailed financial reports. These and all possible methods of insuring financial honesty should be fully explored to determine their potential usefulness.

In defining the standards of financial integrity, should we not seriously consider making the law conform to the standards set forth by the Ethical Practices Committee? Code IV states, "In a sense, a trade union official holds a position comparable to that of a public servant. Like a public servant, he has a high fiduciary duty not only to serve the members of his union honestly and faithfully but also to avoid personal economic interests which may conflict or appear to conflict with the full performance of his responsibility to those whom he serves." Ought we not weigh the possibility of enacting a conflict of interest statute which will enforce the standards there prescribed?

If we have such a statute need we stop with criminal prosecution? Could we not also compel the culprits to disgorge the loot? Should not those who knowingly participated in the transactions be held equally responsible?

A second possible path which may prove promising is insuring that union members be adequately informed of what is being done in their name. A member of the Operating Engineers was expelled because he asked for information about welfare funds. Two officers of the United Textile Workers used $57,000 of union funds to buy themselves homes and hid it under the heading of organizing expense. Members have been denied copies of their collective agreements or union constitutions and misinformed about executive board actions. These are only the most gross examples of defeating the democratic process by keeping the members in ignorance. Might it not prove fruitful to devote earnest attention at this point? What values may be gained in filing requirements, in compelling furnishing reports to members, or in protecting members rights to inspect union records? Are other more effective devices available?

Even though disclosure rules such as filing requirements may seem waste motion, we may underestimate their usefulness. When rumors fly or charges are made concerning a particular union, the file may provide leads or valuable information. Brewster's misuse of Teamsters funds was discovered, at least in part, through the financial report filed under Taft-Hartley. Even more important, such reports may help the unions to police themselves by making possible criticism within the union or providing evidence for disciplinary action by the Federation.

A third possible path, which is closely connected to the first two, is protecting members in their right to criticize union officers and union policies. The fate of Secretary Sims of the Bakery Workers is symptomatic. One of the customary weapons of corrupt or dictatorial leaders is the silencing of their critics and the dismantling of all organized opposition. The methods may vary from threats of physical violence to placing local unions in receivership. If the freedom to criticize is impaired, then union democracy is impossible. On the other hand, if criticism flows freely then the members themselves have some chance to challenge abuse of power and clean out corruption.

This is undoubtedly a most difficult and sensitive point for any legislation, but ought we not study every conceivable aspect to determine whether and how the right to criticize can be protected without destroying union discipline? Should we use the leverage of legal intervention to induce the union movement to establish a system of appeal boards patterned after those in the Auto Workers and Upholsterers Union? Should we consider defining legislatively union members civil rights and minimum procedural standards which the courts could enforce? If we can adequately protect freedom of speech within the union, might we be able to avoid the necessity for much other regulation?

The fourth possible path which might be explored is aiding the unions to obtain evidence of wrongdoing within the movement. One of the reasons given by the AFL-CIO Executive Council for its failure to take earlier action was that it lacked the power to subpoena witnesses. Rumors of corruption floated about, newspaper and magazine stories charged malpractices, but tested evidence was lacking. The Senate Committee has served as broker, providing the Federation with evidence on which it can act. This, however, is an unsatisfactory episodic stop gap. Inquiries into the business activities of Big Helen and Small Helen, chasing a bouncing local union charter, and stories of wiring grand jury witnesses for sound may make excellent television screen play, but it contributes little to union democracy or to enabling labor to clean its own house. Ought we consider the possibility of creating some continuing structure less tinged by the temptations for publicity and political capital which could serve the function of providing evidence which the unions need to police themselves? Would it be feasible to establish some public commission or agency which could act as watch-dog and make investigations where necessary?

These four potential paths, which are not mutually exclusive, are presented not as solutions but as possible starting points. They may one or all prove to be dead ends, but we need to explore and examine thoroughly. There may be other paths even more promising, and some new ones may open which we are unable to see. The purpose here is only to try to make some beginning in the hopes of stimulating serious thought and constructive suggestions.

Conclusion

"Legislating Union Democracy" -- the title bears the seeds of its own undoing. No one understands better than a lawyer the limitations of the law in solving social problems. We can not compel union members to attend union meetings or cast wise ballots. We can not decree that union leaders shall be selfless servants without the love of power and prestige. We can not with words wipe out our social cannibals. If we expect the law to bring into being a model union democracy, we are doomed to disappointment. If we attempt to reach so far we shall destroy more than we create.

Although the law has limitation, it need not be an exercise in futility. We can create structures and procedures which will reduce the temptations and opportunities for selfish men to satisfy their greed. We can establish devices to identify the social cannibals so that they may be cast out. We can create channels through which union members can gain some facts which will enable them to vote more wisely.

The most that the law can do is to aid those forces within the labor movement which seek to build and protect honest and democratic unions, to give shields and swords to those who would overthrow corruption and authoritarianism, to assure workers that the desire for democracy shall not be wholly frustrated.

We have a public interest in union democracy, for we seek through unions to give added breadth to the democratic process. The unions have recognized this special responsibility. The law should do what it can to help achieve this high purpose.

ments I've seen put out of our congress—which summarized their thinking on this problem. I would like to read you just one section of that report:

> "There were differences of opinion on how to forecast the consequences of further testing. The differences . . . appear to be those concerning the biological effects of radiation. Pending a resolution of differences, it would appear from the information presented that the consequences of further testing over the next several generations at the level of testing for the past five years, could constitute a hazard to the world's population."

This is the unanimous statement by the Republicans and the Democrats on the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy—the best informed group on this subject in the United States Congress.

ETHICAL PRACTICES

Arthur J. Goldberg

Special Counsel AFL-CIO, Washington, D. C.

Introduction by CARL WINN,
Regional Director AFL-CIO:

I well know that it is customary to introduce a guest speaker to his audience and the audience to our guest speaker. But, inasmuch as you already know about our speaker from advance conference publicity, I'd like to change the procedure today and introduce our guest to the University of Minnesota. On the basis of my experience with state universities, which I admit is not extensive, I'd like to say that I have reached the firm conclusion that this great university is one of the few state-supported institutions that is still one of the great seats of academic freedom left in this country. So, Arthur, at the University of Minnesota, you can express your beliefs and your opinions without restraint. I will not guarantee that you won't wind up in argument but I will guarantee that you won't wind up in the columns of censorship. I think this is a great tradition of which this University can and should be proud. I am glad that it is a great seat of freedom for teaching in accord with the conscience of the individual professor. As an example, let me mention that in the school of law there is at least one professor who is an active officer in the American Civil Liberties Union. I know of other universities where professors were fired for belonging to this organization. I think further typical of the freedom that is exercised in this great school is the knowledge that at least one of the professors in the school of Political Science describes himself as a socio-philosophical anarchist—whatever that is.

Our guest will speak to you today on the topic of "Ethical Practices." I am firmly convinced that he is well versed on this subject. I have read the reports of the Ethical Practices Committee of the AFL-CIO and more than occasionally reference is made to the staff reports. Inquiry has revealed to me that the staff reports were prepared by Arthur Goldberg and his associates. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to present to you today, Mr. Arthur Goldberg, General Counsel for the United Steelworkers of America and Special Counsel for the AFL-CIO. Mr. Goldberg.

ARTHUR J. GOLDBERG

It is a very great pleasure for me to be here today. I was very interested, as we all were, in Carl's "commercial" for the University. I note that there are a couple of mavericks here from other universities today. They don't exactly fit your description of a "philosophical anarchist," but my old friend and colleague from Chicago, Maynard Krueger, is a fellow who has always been a pretty independent citizen throughout the years. In fact, he is Chairman of the Independent Voters in Chicago at the present time. Another great man of American letters and economics, whom you heard this morning, is Professor Colston Warne.

After meeting with the AFL-CIO Executive Committee last week I went to Detroit to meet with Mr. Reuther. As you may know, his union is to be "investigated" by the McClellan Committee. Our big difficulty is determining what relationship a strike situation has to the announced purposes of the senate committee on improper activities. We have not yet assumed in America that engaging in a strike is an improper activity. Apparently, some members of that committee—Messrs. Goldwater, Mundt and Curtis—cannot claim that the Auto Workers Union is corrupt or crooked or racketeering or dominated. Nevertheless, for political reasons of their own, they feel they have to conduct an investigation of that union. I think that union will and can speak for itself. It has a most articulate spokesman, as you know, who will have plenty to say before the Senate Committee when it convenes to discuss the Kohler strike on the 24th.

I shall start my discussion on "Ethical Practices" by telling you of an incident that occurred in Washington several months ago. The Ethical Practices Committee had just met for lunch. As we were leaving we ran into the man with the bushy eyebrows, John L. Lewis. He looked at us and in his very polite and dignified way bowed and said to Al Hayes, the Chairman of our Committee, "Al, have you found any ethics in the labor movement yet?" Had I anticipated what Mr. Lewis subsequently said on a television program, we would have had a pretty good answer. I happened to hear Martin Agronsky interview Mr. Lewis. Mr. Lewis was asked what he thought about this whole question of ethics and morals. He made what was to me an astonishing statement in which he said that morals are the function of the church and of our religious leaders and that the labor movement has nothing to do with morals. Had I known his position when I heard his remark, I would have said to John Lewis that I had heard that comment to Mr. Hayes and that I couldn't disagree more heartily with him.

Ethical Principles Basic

If I have felt anything about the labor movement it is that the whole basis for the American labor movement is founded in ethics and in morals, and that if it does not rest upon ethical and moral principles, it has no lasting foundation. I say this because I want to tell you right at the outset that I view the problem of ethics in the labor movement in a special light. I'm not so sure that all of the officials of the labor movement necessarily agree with me. I think most of them do. I think that the labor movement has a special responsibility by its very nature, to dedicate itself to ethical concepts and to carry on its work by ethical means. I know it is popular in labor circles to say in response to criticism about the ethics of the labor movement: Why don't the critics criticize the ethics of management groups? Frankly, while that is something we all might want to say, I don't think it is an adequate answer to the question of ethics in the labor movement. Let me put it to you very simply, making a fast buck may be a good concept for business—it can never be a concept for the American labor movement. While all of us as citizens would welcome a little more morality in the business community, nevertheless, the standards that apply to the business world—a world dedicated under our society to profit-making—are not the standards which can be applied to the labor movement at all. The labor movement has separate standards and must be governed by separate principles.

Abuses Imperil Reputation of All

Now in analyzing the position of the labor movement, as it stands today in a very difficult position as a result of disclosures on the Hill and elsewhere, we must always remember that the vast majority of labor people—and I speak now of labor people both on the national level and on the local level—are dedicated people. They are trying honestly to safeguard the rights and forward the interests of the members of their unions. Yet, we must be equally frank and acknowledge that the reputations of these thousands of labor leaders, both national and local, are being questioned because of the actions of some leaders. You know the statistics. There are over 70 thousand local unions in America, ranging all the way from locals with few members to some local unions with thousands of members. But the reputations of all those people are imperiled by the dishonest, corrupt and unethical practices of the men who have betrayed their trust as labor leaders. I was in the company of a very distinguished and honest labor leader whose organization is a beacon for progress in the labor movement. I was with Mr. David Dubinsky—riding up the elevator with him in the ILGWU Building. The elevator operator, his own employee, said to him something like this: "Well, you labor leaders, you're all right—you take care of yourself." I must say that was quite a shocking statement; but to me it indicated a lack of confidence in the labor movement on the part of the general population.

Let's take a look at some of the factors related to ethical practices. First of all, the problem is generally discussed in terms of individual moral standards of labor leadership. To me that's too simple an analysis. I must state frankly that union members who fail to exercise their responsibilities as union citizens likewise bear a high degree of responsibility for abridgement of their rights. A very great clergyman, Monsignor Higgins, in addressing the Auto Workers Convention made what I thought was a significant observation in this area. He said that, by and large, labor unions and labor union memberships get better leadership than they deserve—and I agree with him. You who are leaders of your unions at the local level know how difficult it is to get participation on the part of your membership in the day-by-day activities of your unions. This lack of participation, this willingness to let somebody else do it, is in my measure more responsible for the delinquencies that have occurred in the labor movement than any other single factor.

What is involved is an attitude of understanding that the labor movement requires support and participation by its membership. Now the problem of ethics in the labor movement requires an understanding of what we are talking about in the terms of rights and responsibilities of people who gather together in unions. This is what we have attempted, for the first time, to define in the ethical practice codes to which Carl referred a few minutes ago, a fairly unprecedented undertaking, by the way. I don't know very many groups other than the churches in our society which have attempted to set up the ethical principles which should govern their own association. I had the pleasure of addressing a national meeting of the United States Chamber of Commerce not long ago. I asked those in attendance whether they did not think the time was overdue for a statement of moral principles by the American business community. I was not referring to the "better business" groups that exist. I was referring to some basic postulates of American business—the postulate of profit—the postulate of prices— the postulate of business practices—which raise important questions of moral standards. The Chamber does not and has not attempted to deal with that problem.

Concepts of Ethical Practices Code

We have tried to analyze for the leadership and the membership of the American labor movement, certain important concepts and I am going to enumerate what I think the concepts are as stated in our ethical practices code. In the codes of the AFL-CIO we have attempted to define the rights of a union member and his union. The First right is the right to a democratic union. The Second right is the right to due process of law in union disciplinary proceedings. Third is the right to a clean honest union. Fourth is the right to an effective union. Fifth is the right for a union free from discrimination because of race, creed or color. Sixth is the right to a responsible union—responsible not only to its members and to its employers but to the community and the nation as a whole.

Now let's analyze what this means, and what we say in the codes about them. We all say we're for a democratic union. The American trade union movement is proud of the fact that we call our union movement a democratic and free trade union movement. Basic to the democracy of the trade union movement is both internal democracy and external democracy. Authoritarian control of the union, whether it is inside of the union or imposed from the outside by government, is contrary to the tradition and the principles of unions which call themselves free and democratic. What do we mean when we say we ought to have a democratic union? I'll give you a very simple description. You can test any union in America and determine for yourself if it is a democratic union by whether or not these principles are followed. The essence of democracy in the trade union is the right of full and equal participation by each member in the affairs and processes of union self-government. This to me includes the right to vote periodically for local and national office. It isn't important to me what the form of that vote is—the substance is important. Some unions practice referendum votes for their national elections. Some practice delegate votes after they have votes by their membership. It's not important which form they follow. What's important is the right that every member must have to free and full participation in that process. The second thing is honest elections. Elections, whatever their form, should be conducted honestly. That's self-evident. The third thing is that every union member ought to have the right to stand and hold office subject only to fair qualifications uniformly imposed. The fourth is that every member ought to have the right to voice his views as to the way in which the union affairs should be conducted. This seems to me to be the essence of a democratic union. We said so in the code on democratic practices which the AFL-CIO had adopted. The directive is going out to every international union of the AFL-CIO saying among other things that this is the policy position of the federation and it is now binding upon all affiliates. The day when a union could hold an international convention once every 20 years must be a past chapter in American life. I'm glad to report that when we made a survey of all of the unions we discovered that this was no longer the practice in American life. As a matter of fact we have said in the codes that the maximum period for conventions should be four years and the maximum term for holding national office in a union should be four years. There should also be limited terms of office for local officials.

Trusteeship Problems in AFL-CIO

Another problem is that of trusteeships or administratorships of local unions. Now it is very popular in certain circles to say there never ought to be a trusteeship of a union. Not long ago, I had a meeting with some very distinguished senators who are good friends of labor. They raised that question of trusteeships and said that they were considering enacting legislation that would make it impossible to establish trusteeships over local unions. Whereupon I raised this question to them: One of my functions for the AFL-CIO has been to act as Special Counsel for President Meany. The AFL-CIO, while it is not a national union, nevertheless has local unions directly affiliated with it. We had a situation in Philadelphia where there was a federal local, dominated by an official of the Laundry Workers Unions, which did not have a local union meeting in over five years. The man who was running this outfit was running it out of his vest pocket. Meany served charges and then, exercising his rights under the AFL-CIO constitutions and the rules, he appointed a trustee of that local union. I asked the senators whether they did not believe that was a justifiable trusteeship. There was a unanimous agreement that such a situation warranted a trusteeship. It was necessary to appoint a trustee so as to assure the members of that local their basic elementary right to hold and conduct meetings and elect their own officers. Mr. Meany told me the other day that the trusteeship is going to be terminated very shortly because the local people have been participating effectively in local union affairs and they are now in a position to run their own business.

I happen to know of a local in the Steelworkers Union, where the local union divided on racial grounds. I'm not talking in terms of Negro and White race relations—I'm talking about racial (or actual, nationality) conflicts based on what section of Eastern Europe the membership came from—whether it was Yugoslavia or Poland. The local union had adopted seniority rules which preserved seniority only for people of a certain racial background. On top of that they had a key club and the only people who could come into the key club were the people of the same national origin. I asked the senators whether they didn't think the international union had an obligation in that area to straighten out that situation. The only way it could be straightened out was by an educational process under the leadership of the international union. They agreed with me that that was a proper activity for an international union.

There are many other illustrations I could cite as to where imposition of a trusteeship would be necessary, in order to assure democratic rights but at the same time I want to add that the AFL-CIO code in talking about this subject goes on to say this right, which is an extreme right, ought to be exercised sparingly and that trusteeships ought to be terminated quickly. It is not necessary or desirable for trusteeships to be continued indefinitely as they have been in certain organizations.

Democratic Rights and Responsibilities in Unions

I am aware that there has been a lot of talk about legislation to insure union democracy. I want to say frankly to you that I have more faith in the actions being taken by the AFL-CIO in this area. There is a tendency in our life—we all have it—when we encounter a problem to say let's have a law to solve the problem. My experience with regulatory laws in this area is that very often they are not effective. What you need is something more and I'll talk about that when I talk about the responsibilities of union members, because just as eternal vigilance is the price of liberty so, to me at least, the constant exercise of the rights of union citizenship is the price of union democracy.

Another right that I feel is basic in this area is the right to due process of law in union disciplinary proceedings. There's been a lot of talk on this subject and a great deal of misunderstanding. First of all, many of you who participate actively in local union affairs will bear witness when I say that I have studied the record of many union disciplinary cases.

Professor Taft wrote a book on this subject at Brown University. I have practiced in the courts for about 30 years. I can tell you that the substantive due process, that is a fair trial, is probably accorded more effectively in our local unions than it is in some of the law courts. I do not say this in any disrespect for the judges. Common assumption that a man does not get a fair trial in a local union is not justified. Local union people hear the people, they have trial committees, there are appeals to the membership and, by-and-large, in every American trade union, there is a method of appeal to a higher body to insure that the local judgment is not the result of bias or prejudice. I remember a very interesting appeal case that we heard in the Steelworkers Union under Phil Murray's leadership. It shows you how a union operates. There's an old fellow in one of our steelworkers unions in Pennsylvania. He comes from the old country and he was probably a little bit to the left of left—probably an old regenerate radical. I don't know in what category he fit but this was my judgment in hearing the appeal. He was a good union man. He used to walk about eight miles to attend a union meeting. He came to a local union meeting and the local had rented its hall that morning prior to the local union meeting to some ladies war veterans association and they were having their meeting as he walked in. The union meeting had not yet started. The old fellow sat in the back of the room and the meeting concluded with the playing of The Star Spangled Banner. The old fellow did not take off his hat and rise. His colleagues who were gathered around him got justly infuriated about his lack of respect for our flag and charged him with conduct unbecoming a union member. They convicted him guilty and he took an appeal to the International Executive Board. Mr. Murray was presiding over this appeal and he leaned over to me in the course of it and said, "We can't convict this old codger. He's dead wrong, but he's a good union man—he's supported the union for all of these years. Can you help out?" I had to do some fast thinking, so as Legal Consultant to the Board, I finally came to what I thought was a Solomon-like decision. I said, "It seems this fellow was guilty of disrespect to the flag, but it didn't take place at a union meeting—the ladies were still meeting at the time. I think what we ought to do is chastise him and tell him that he offended everybody's sensibilities and never let it happen again but reinstate him to membership in the organization," which the board did.

I think that that was a good decision for that particular case and I only cite it as illustrative that there are mechanisms in this area of the trade union movement. Having said that, I want to add that the machinery will be self-destructive if the trade union movement doesn't see that it operates fairly. If Executive Boards of unions do not exercise their responsibilities to provide corrective relief when relief is justified; if union officials log-roll with each other in the disposition of these cases, then laws will be passed, and more than that. Even now the courts have intervened to prevent injustice. As we lawyers know, there is a whole body of case laws presently in existence that says that while no particular form is required, the substance of due process must be accorded any union member when he is tried by his union. That is as it should be.

The third right I mentioned was a right to a clean, honest union. This is set forth in plain and specific terms in the AFL-CIO codes. But beyond that the AFL-CIO codes have set very high standards. For example, conflicts of interests in the investment and business interests of union officials are prohibited. The standard used (and this a new concept for the labor movement but an important one) is one applicable to public servants, which is a recognition of a quasi-public character that the trade union has now assumed in American life. In other words, we are applying virtually the same conflicts of interest rules to the trade union movement that have been applied to the Civil Service.

I was interested to note that in the paper today, Mr. Hoffa has stated in Miami at a meeting of the Teamsters Executive Board (which appropriately is taking place at a motel called "The Castaways") that his officers and he, himself, are going to comply with the "conflicts of interest" codes of the AFL-CIO. It's a little bit belated in his case, because we pointed out 8 or 9 months ago what we thought was the most damaging allegation against the Teamsters' leadership. That is, that the leadership of that union, including Mr. Hoffa, had personal financial interests in companies with which their union bargained collectively. It is the feeling of the AFL-CIO that that is intolerable.

"Conflicts of Interest"

We have another code in the AFL-CIO that goes beyond the codes that are applicable to corporate trustees. The code says this, and many business men don't like it. We say that when a man is a union official, he ought not get paid extra money for administering his union's welfare funds or acting as a trustee for the union. Corporate officials take these assignments all the time without any hesitance. The very cases we heard before the Ethical Practices Committee (a laundry workers' case, bakers' case and other cases) involved joint trusteeships of their welfare fund—business trustees and union trustees. We said that the union trustees could not accept extra compensation because the union was paying them full-time pay for doing a union job and we didn't feel that extra compensation from the welfare fund was required or justified. We said that this was an obligation that they were performing for the union. At the same time, the employer trustees, who were all full-time officials of their respective companies, without restraint or inhibition were drawing the same fees from these welfare funds. We can't tell the business community what to do but we don't think it is a proper or good practice for the labor community.

You know, of course, that we don't believe crooks or racketeers have a place in the labor movement. We have said that a practical test ought to be applied to this. We don't think it necessary to wait for a conviction to determine whether or not a man is a crook or a racketeer. We believe that it is possible to make those determinations as a matter of common sense and at the same time with due regard to the rights of labor unions and the individuals involved. I am aware that the mere adoption of the rules or the codes standing alone will not eliminate corruption. You must remember that the AFL-CIO has done far more than merely adopt high-sounding rules. We've thrown the largest affiliate out of the AFL-CIO. There's a school of thought that says: "Well, suppose you have. How is that effective? The teamsters are still in existence and operating. You're not going to challenge them. What have you accomplished?" I think we have accomplished a great deal. By setting a moral standard, by doing what we could to police that standard, we have had a substantial impact upon the operation of unions which have been expelled from the organization. Do not minimize the value of affiliation with the labor movement in that connection. Any labor group which traditionally has played a part in the labor movement does not want to be isolated from the main stream of the American labor movement. Being isolated today from the main stream of the American labor movement means isolation from not only the industrial scene but from the community scene and the national scene as well. Our labor movement today is part of the community and part of the national community.

Basic Rights of the Union Member

Another right that is implicit in the code and spelled out, too, is the right to an effective union. The primary function of American unions, in spite of their broadened scope of activities in recent years, is still collective bargaining. A good contract is the fundamental object of every union. Each member has a right to efficient and effective representation at the bargaining table. He should be able to expect that when his union meets with the employer, it is armed with all of the techniques of this important process. He has the right to expect that, in addition to his officers knowing the facts, professional and technical assistance is available to his officials so that legal and research and education and public relations techniques are utilized as fully as possible. This is very important because one of the things that I discovered in preparing the cases for the Ethical Practices Committee, is that more benefits were lost and more funds were dissipated by unions out of ignorance than through corruption. After all, the recent period has been a great period of advances by unions in areas in which they traditionally didn't do much. Pensions, S.U.B. benefits, welfare funds, insurance, are a relatively new area in American labor history. If a union is to function effectively in these areas, it must have the benefit of expert advice. Several of the cases we heard in the ethical practices field demonstrated to us that it was the failure to have effective help and assistance which resulted in lack of adequate protection for the members of the unions involved. It seems to me it is basic today that good unionism be effective unionism, and effective unionism requires the use of these resources to which I have made reference. Conferences like this one can play an important part in giving union leaders additional insight on their problems.

Furthermore, it seems to me, that unions must recognize that every member has a right to a union which doesn't discriminate because of race, creed or color. The day of "second class" membership in any union has got to be a thing of the past. The day of restrictive clauses in union constitutions fortunately is close to the twilight. Nevertheless, it would be unrealistic to say that we have reached our goal in this area. There are still pockets of discrimination in unions which have got to be eliminated.

Finally, the right which is looming larger and larger in American life, and which is expected by the public, is the right to a responsible union. Responsibility means responsible to the membership, to employers, but perhaps more important—responsible to the community and to the nation at large. Labor is rapidly losing its status as a special interest group. We can not afford to let a situation develop in which there is a difference in the mind of the public between desirable goals for the whole society and desirable goals for the labor movement. Not all labor leaders understand this. I think the leadership of the AFL-CIO does. It's for the best interest of unions and their members that they must now live in the goldfish bowl of national curiosity. That isn't a bad symbol for any institution in American democratic society. You know, we said of the labor movement (contrary to some corporate slogans) that what is good for America is good for labor. That's a good slogan. Glib as it sounds, it voices a fundamental truth that our labor movement must never forget.

Members Set the "Climate" in the Union

Now, I've dealt with the rights, but the codes also indicate that correlative to the rights are certain responsibilities. This is an area which has been ignored in the press because the press has been more interested in the doings of the leadership than in the lack of responsibility on the part of union membership. I have already stated what I think is the first important responsibility of union membership and that is the responsibility to participate. Lethargy in unions and in all aspects of American life is one of the problems that our whole democracy must cope with. When union members regard their unions as slot machines, which may pay back a quarter for each nickel invested or as an insurance policy that can be attained at a cheap cost—then that union membership is devaluating the union. It's a continuing problem which taxes the best resources of all of us in the academic area, in labor and among the membership. I think the union membership has a responsibility to help set moral and ethical standards. It isn't enough just to expect that the leadership will be ethical. The members ~~set~~ a climate in this area. If the climate they set is an ethical, moral climate then I think there will be better leadership on the part of American labor unions. The membership has to create a public opinion of their own. This is a very troublesome problem because the membership often doesn't do this. Let me illustrate what happens. The AFL-CIO had a finding about the Laundry Workers Union. The leadership of that union, conniving with an insurance broker in New York, stole a million dollars of welfare funds which the members never got. You would have thought that the membership of that union would have taken those fellows lock, stock and barrel and booted them out of the trade union movement. They had a convention—they had an opportunity to do this. I don't think their convention was a packed one as some people assert, but I do think their convention was a very indifferent convention to a point where nobody had the courage to stand up on the floor and say, "Read us the report of the Ethical Practices Committee." It was never read to that convention. You may say, maybe they were intimidated. Part of the responsibility of union membership is to have a little courage. We haven't forfeited our heritage just because people are in the labor movement.

I think the third responsibility is that just as their union has the obligation of according civil rights to everybody, union members have a responsibility to respect civil rights. Very often they don't exercise that responsibility. Take the situation in some of our southern communities. The leadership of the American trade union movement has been far in advance of their membership in this area. Too many union members joined the white citizens' councils and did not accord to their fellow union members, with whom they work in the plants, the same rights they expect the union to accord to them.

Union membership is often called upon to make decisions, recognizing that a union is not an island unto itself but must work within the framework of the national community. Just as we expect union leadership in unions to be responsible, union members have a responsibility to recognize the union's obligation in this area. This is very tough, because union membership necessarily is engrossed in its own problems. Before you can have a nationwide steel strike it is important for every union member to know the seriousness and the consequences of that in relation to the whole nation. We have had several very difficult situations in an organization like steel in this area. Our fellows here from the steel plants know how important that responsibility is. In 1952, when the Korean War was going on, the union membership of the United Steelworkers union had to recognize its responsibility and I must say did, when it postponed that strike over 100 days because there was a great conflict and in response to a plea from the President of the United States.

The final responsibility is to be loyal to the union. You'll remember I emphasized that a union member should be able to express himself any way that he wants to. That's his right. He has a right to run for office. He has a right to campaign. He has a right to criticize union leadership. But, I think he has the responsibility to be loyal to his union. I think he must do that as we do it in American society within the framework of our society. It means that he must be willing to support the union as an institution, even though he may disagree with his current leadership. It means that if he expects his union to be an effective union, he must support the services which make the union effective. You can't have actuaries, economists, lawyers and other experts to represent your union at the collective bargaining table and not provide the union with the means to support these activities. Very often, since we are all subject to the same vices, all of us would like to buy cheap, but sometimes you can't buy cheap in these important areas.

I have stated these observations about rights and responsibilities because this is what is spelled out in the AFL-CIO codes very often, because we must use language that is descriptive in detail. What I have talked about today is in the codes. It represents the ethical and moral standards which the labor movement has agreed upon should govern its own operations. In my opinion, while the labor movement is going through very difficult times indeed, perhaps the outcome will be for the best interests of our labor movement and for America at large. I think the movement has gone through a necessary evaluation and revaluation of its fundamental principles. I, for one, am entirely confident that this period will be one which, while it has been painful, has served to build a better and more forward looking labor movement in this country.

CURRENT IRC RESEARCH

Walter H. Uphoff

Assistant Professor of Industrial Relations, University of Minnesota

There have been so many inquiries as to the specific functions of the Industrial Relations Center and there is not enough time for a detailed report on current research projects, so it seems desirable to clarify the Center's main functions, to discuss its relation to other University departments, and to tell of a few research findings on our Union Membership Participation research—one of the studies in the Union Studies Laboratory recently completed.

The IRC was established as an inter-disciplinary department in 1945, governed by a Faculty Committee drawn from the following departments:

Economics and Business Administration Psychology
Law Engineering
Sociology
Political Science

IRC Administration

In addition to the Faculty Committee which recommends the broad general policies, the Center receives suggestions and support from its Advisory Council of about 25 community leaders from labor, management, and the general public who are interested in improving industrial relations.

The senior faculty of the Center, known as the executive staff, is assisted by the research staff and clerical staff in carrying out the work of the Center.

Center Functions

The Center's program includes (1) Training students for careers in industrial relations—with industry, unions, government and educational institutions; (2) Providing service to the citizens of the state primarily through the facilities of the IRC Reference Library; and (3) Carrying on both basic and applied research in the major areas of industrial relations.

EMERGING REPUBLICANISM IN THE SOUTH

George L. Grassmuck
Professor of Political Science
The University of Michigan
Ann Arbor, Michigan

Prepared for delivery at the 1964 Annual Meeting of The American Political Science Association, Chicago, Illinois
Pick-Congress Hotel September 9-12, 1964

In July of 1960 in Chicago, during the turmoil of shaping and then reshaping the "liberalized" Republican platform, I. Lee Potter, director of the Republican National Committee's "Operation Dixie," turned to a companion and remarked, "I just hate to see ten years' work go down the drain." In July of 1964 Mr. Potter reviewed his party's record in the South and observed that in the light of present circumstances his remark of four years ago must have been a bit overdrawn. Then he offered two statements that add further current dimensions to emerging Southern Republicanism of the sixties. He stated that the 1962 election of five brand new Republican Congressmen from the South brought a national gain of two for the Republican House of Representatives delegation instead of a net loss of three, "and the boys on the Hill know this." And thereafter he noted that in the 1964 presidential election the Southern states are on the spot. The Republicans "need South Carolina, Texas and North Carolina," in addition to Virginia, Florida and Tennessee, if the Southern development is to justify and merit the approval of the national party.[1]

Potter is an affable Virginian who has been in both state and national Republican politics for well over ten years. His manner and approach are direct and forceful, and his methods are more traditional, perhaps, than those of the Republican State Chairman of Texas, Peter O'Donnell, Jr. Mr. O'Donnell is a younger man of some wealth and a business education. His zealous campaign methods, like his personality, are crisp and direct. He employs electronic data processing in his organizations and campaigns, and consequently is able to produce reams of data about the upsurge of his party in Texas. Here are some of his figures:[2]

In 1956 there was only one Republican office holder in Texas. In 1958, there were two. In 1960, three. In 1961, six. In 1962, GOP officeholders had increased in numbrr to 32, and in 1963, 40 Republicans held office in Texas. In 1964 Texas will have some 300 Republican candidates for offices throughout the state, including a Republican candidate for each of the 23 Congressional seats. One candidate, not for Congress, will be a convert. He is a six-term Democratic state legislator from Dallas who is running as the Republican candidate for lieutenant governor.

In 1960, six hundred people attended the Republican State Convention in San Antonio. In June, 1964 in Dallas, 12,000 attended the state convention, including 2400 delegates and 2400 alternates.

Participating in a Republican primary in the South has long been an exercise in individuality. According to O'Donnell, only 1600 voters cast ballots in the Republican gubernatorial primary of 1934. Twenty years later 3,000 voters in 83 counties participated in the 1954 Republican gubernatorial primary. In 1958, 11,000 Republican voters in 61 counties took part, and in 1962 115,000 citizens in 216 counties voted in the Republican gubernatorial primary. This year 145,000 voters, in all 254 counties, participated in the Republican primary which selected a party candidate for governor.

These data, plus Texas' recent willingness to vote for a Republican for President, and her even more recent selection of a Republican to be a United States Senator, plus the organization which the O'Donnell group has established and motivated in Texas lead some to surmise that perhaps Texas and other parts of the old Confederacy are becoming, or will become, Republican territory. Has the Republican party, as a political and of course a social institution, obtained a status and position of prominence in these states?

Standing alone, the Republican increases in party primary participation and in county organization appear significant. But they describe only insufficiencies when contrasted with hard figures on Democratic strength. Thus in 1962, nearly 1,500,000 votes were counted in the Texas Democratic gubernatorial primary, about ten times the number the Republicans drew in 1964. Nor is there any sign yet of other than fragmentary GOP representation in the Texas state legislature. Here appears the sharp difference between the contest for national government office and that for leadership and control of the state. And here too appears evidence of the split image of the political parties which seems to gain acceptance in the South.[3] Increasingly, Southerners appear to be voting Republican for national office candidates and voting Democratic for state candidates, giving little thought to the implications or ultimate consequences of such ballot splitting.

The voter's assumed lack of speculation on the abstruse meanings of his action does not extend to the research and writings of students of politics, however. In the fifteen years since the time of the pioneer regional analysis by Professor V. O. Key with Alexander Heard, this part of the country has been subjected to repeated examination, conclusion and prognostication. Advanced techniques, interdisciplinary alliances, and new approaches have carried social scientists into types of electoral and organizational analyses that have revealed much about the area in general and its voting habits in particular.[4]

This short paper springs in part from, and hopefully adds something to, these previous works. It recounts a few of the changes in minority party development in the South, evaluates them primarily concerning their meaning for the national Republican party and for the two-party system in the United States, and raises issues that may provoke discussion and controversy--but not necessarily solutions. The stress in the paper, if such there be, is on the Republican Party institution as one of the parties in a national two-party system, and on changes in activities and relationships within the party and between the Republican and the Democratic parties which may ensue from the emergence of Republicanism in the South.

How Far Has Republicanism Emerged?

An old English writ of law once enabled a man, after coming of age, to recover lands which he had aliened during infancy.[5] If the GOP had the advantage of such a writ, its recovery in the old Confederacy might be faster in the twentieth century. Up to 1950 Republican gains there were insignificant, and were usually results of resistance by minority enclaves of Appalachian holdouts in North Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia or reluctant Germans in Texas, or newly arrived Northerners in Florida. In these islets being a Republican was accepted and perhaps preferred. But hardly elsewhere in the South.[6]

In 1950 Professor Key's Southern Politics included 21 out of 675 pages as "Chapter 13, A Note on the Republican Party," and his second paragraph there revealed his distaste for this infantile, powerless assortment of the forties.

> One never knows who is and who is not a Republican. The party places no imperative obligation of constancy on its communicants. It scarcely deserves the name of party. It wavers somewhat between an esoteric cult on the order of a lodge and a conspiracy for plunder in accord with the accepted customs of our politics. Its exact position on the cult-conspiracy scale varies from place to place and from time to time. Only in North Carolina, Virginia, and Tennessee do the Republicans approximate the reality of a political party. Party or not, they are elements of the political landscape and some account has to be taken of them.[7]

Key did see some possibilities for the southern Republicans, though, in the quadrennial significance of the "presidential Republicans" and the potential for organizing a stronger and more effective faction.

> Prevalence of the presidential Republican in considerable numbers in Texas, Florida, and Arkansas makes it relevant to point again to the significance of the Presidency as an organizing influence in state and local politics. The issues of the Presidency are dramatic enough to reach down into traditional one-party states and divide the voters. If Republican leaders of Texas and Florida had either incentive or ability, they might over the long run build a Republican party or the midwestern variety by using the pulling power of the presidential campaign.[8]

In 1952 Professor Heard's A Two Party South? gave far more extensive attention and treatment to GOP possibilities in the region; but he also conveyed some lack of confidence in Republican efforts to quickly acquire virility.

> Looking across the nine presidential elections between 1916 and 1948, one can see in the graphs no sustained tendency toward an increase, or a decrease, in southern Republicanism. . . . Among the three states most strongly Republican, Virginia gained in Republicanism and the other two lost; among the four states next in Republican strength, two gained and two lost; among the states most solidly Democratic, the Republican percentage increased in three and declined in one.[9]

> southern conservatives will find neither in a separatist group nor in the Democratic party an adequate vehicle of political expression. If this is true, they must turn to the Republican party. . . . Such developments depend essentially on the evolving nature of the South and the evolving nature of the American party system.[10]

Professors Key and Heard wrote prior to the 1952 election, and offered hints that were then appropriate about how far the Republican party of the South needed to go, the direction it should take, and how it should pursue electoral prosperity. Whether it heeded this or similar advice or not, the GOP has since gained in each of the eleven states and now shows signs of continuing to gain. The questions that remain, of course, are: what did this party gain, where did it gain, how much did it gain, and how durable are these advances. On these points there are various answers, there are differences and there are disagreements. Moreover, many of the differences are caused by the variety of indicators used and emphasized, and by the differences in methods of assessment.

On Measuring Republican Emergence.

Broadly, we may assay what has happened in four ways:

(1) according to election statistics and related census data--the use of aggregate data;

(2) according to survey research returns from interviews with a scientifically set sample of adult citizens who reveal their doubtful or their firm party allegiance--or lack of it;

(3) according to the level, kinds and number of offices each party gains, holds or loses;

(4) according to the nature and strength of the party institution as an active organizational structure.

Since 1952 election statistics have prompted the reports of greatest change in Southern Republicanism, and usually the presidential returns are easiest to note. Even as we recognize that presidential Republican votes greatly exceed the party returns for state or local offices, the submission of electoral advances in other races tends to support conclusions that the GOP is now a serious contender. In 1962 the Republican candidates for governor in North Carolina and Texas each obtained 45 percent of the vote. In 1963 the Republican candidate for governor in Mississippi received a 38 percent vote and provided the first serious challenge since Reconstruction. Candidate Rubel Phillips was a Jackson, Mississippi lawyer and a former Democratic officeholder who switched to the Republicans and was defeated by Paul Johnson.

"Mr. Phillips won a moral victory, however," was The New York Times evaluation, "by establishing a two-party system in the state."[11]

In 1964, on March third, a Shreveport oilman and former Democrat, Charlton H. Lyons, Sr., ran as the Republican candidate for governor of Louisiana. He obtained 293,000 votes, or over 38 percent of the ballots. This too appeared to be a moral victory for the Republicans.

Political analyses by Professor Donald S. Strong take these and all other electoral returns into account and follow some generally accepted procedures to correlate them with other aggregate economic and social data. His conclusions are carefully founded and guarded. Yet despite his reservation, he notes:

> Moreover, since 1960 there have been some surprising manifestations of Republican state and local activity. Now that the South has rejoined the Union in terms of presidential elections the national GOP can no longer afford to ignore its Southern converts. Instead, it will have a real motive for keeping its Southern organizations vigorous through grassroots activity. The results may be a much more rapid growth of a real two-party system than occurred in the Eisenhower years.[12]

As might be expected, analyses of this type are comprehensible and readily acceptable to party leaders and political workers. Such findings have great impact on groups, such as these, that are primarily concerned with election returns and immediate electoral problems.

In rather sharp contrast to the specialists in electoral returns, those who employ survey research methods find that the politics of the South are changing quite slowly. In one of their recent reports on party realignment Professors Matthews and Prothro declared,

> Only 15 percent of the white and 14 percent of the Negro respondents report ever having changed their party identification. Of those who have changed, about 14 percent of the whites changed from Democratic to Republican and 17 percent from Republican to Democratic. . . . The small net effects of these changes among southern whites is in sharp contrast to the massive shifts in party identification that some have read into recent presidential election returns. Moreover, among Negro changers the Democrats enjoy a net advantage of over two converts for every one lost to the GOP. . . .

> It should be remembered, however, that these are changes in party identification which have occurred over the entire lifetime of the respondents. This plus the very small percentage of southerners who have ever changed their party identification means that the net movement would make only small and slow changes in the overwhelmingly pro-Democratic distribution of southern party loyalties. On this level, the Republican tide is sweeping over Dixie at glacial speed.[13]

In his assessment of party affiliation and change therein, Professor Philip E. Converse states firmly that survey data accumulated by the Survey Research Center at The University of Michigan offers little evidence of an emerging Republican party in the South. There is sample interview evidence of a slight increase in Republican identification, but the trend is little more than discernible in the fifteen states (the Confederacy plus Kentucky, Maryland, Oklahoma and West Virginia) surveyed.

> From this point of view, the likelihood that the South as a region will undergo any distinctive and major party realignment is probably less in 1962 than it was in 1948, and is continuing to decline.[14]

Here is further support for the finding based on interviewing in the South in 1961 that over 60 percent of the white respondents think of themselves as Democrats compared to about 14 percent who consider themselves Republican; and the further finding that 51 percent of voting age negroes classify themselves as Democrats while 10 percent call themselves Republicans.[15] The idea of emerging Republicanism in the South needs to be strictly delimited if survey data is accepted as prime. As national electoral activity indicates, though, there must be many politically minded individuals who are either uninformed about or unpersuaded by, reports of the futility of expanding the Republican party in the eleven states of the old South.

As often happens in politics, those who look at the levels, kinds and number of offices held divide into those who seriously acclaim the gains, or view them with some alarm, and those who note how small the encroachments are on the whole region, and in turn applaud or despair. Members of both groups hold forth in each political party among its "professionals" and "amateurs" alike. For Southern Democratic contestants, however, the Republican victories are somewhat alarming because they represent a threat that is unprecedented and because they require altered electoral tactics and additional expenditures of time and effort.

Formerly the Democratic primary and its subsequent run-off, if on was needed, meant election to office. Now, because of the new Republi can organization, small as it may be, there is a third and final electoral contest against a different kind of opposition and under a different set of ground rules. The coming of two-party competition means more than the mere adding of another slate of candidates. It calls also for drastic external and internal changes in the party that has long dominated the field.

For Republicans who have worked long and seemingly in vain toward Southern successes, the electoral victories they have had loom large indeed. A United States Senator John B. Tower from Texas and an almost senator, James D. Martin (who received 49 percent of the 1962 Alabama vote competing against incumbent Lister Hill) are more than isolated individuals. Senator Tower is living proof that Republicans can win statewide office in the South, and Martin has shown, it is felt, that a party candidate can now hope to carry a black belt state.

Yet, the GOP is still only a threat rather than a power within the eleven states, because the party holds slightly over five percent of all state legislators' seats in the old Confederacy. Indeed, recalling the Prothro estimate that fourteen percent of the Southern whites are Republican, one can deduce that the GOP has fewer legislators than its supporters deserve, and the number might possibly be expected to increase.

Withal, since 1960 there have been gains which party officials cal. significant. The offices won include those of congressmen, state senators and representatives, mayors, city councilmen, county commissioners, school board members, judges and district attorneys. They include most levels and varieties of positions, but the positions remain few. The party feels that it is still hurting.

If we grant that the Republican National Committee and the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee are legitimate spokesmen for the national party, then we should accept as official their persistent plaint that the Democratic party has a built-in advantage of 100 sure Southern congressmen. In 1964, say GOP brochures, there are 177 Republican members of the House of Representatives, there are 158 Northern Democrats, and there are 100 Southern Democrats--all despite the fact that Republican candidates received 47.7 percent of the total 1962 vote for Congress. If the GOP could gain as few as 41 of those Southern seats, while holding the 177, the party could gain control of the House. This now appears to be one of the forceful arguments issuing from Washington and accepted by some in the South. The Southern state organization to that end is much more thorough than it has been before, and there is prospect that the one-eighth or more of Southerners who identify themselves as Republicans may be organizing and campaigning so as to gain one-eighth or even more of the region's congressional seats.

Organization for Emerging Republicanism in the South.

As a social institution the Republican party has long been beset by recognized handicaps in the South, and they are not easily overcome. Perhaps they are typified by the contrast between these two excerpts from 1960 presidential campaign speeches.

At Laurel, Mississippi, Senator Lyndon Johnson contended for the Democratic ticket:[16]

> But we are the only national party. We don't rest on any one state. We have men in all states. We follow the old prophet Isaiah's advice and come and reason together. . . .
> . . . .I have come to ask you to support the party of your fathers and your grandfathers. I have come to ask you to support the party that you have in power in Washington; the voice of your own senators; the voice of your own congressmen.

In contrast, the Republican presidential ticket was promoted on a "bipartisan" basis. Vice President Richard Nixon rationalized:[17]

> I want to say right here at the outset that I recognize that in this State, as in virtually all of the States of the South, if we were to count simply on the Republicans, those who are registered Republicans, to vote for us we wouldn't have a chance. I realize that the reason President Eisenhower carried Louisiana in 1956 was that thousands of Louisiana Democrats put their country first and their party second and elected the best man for the job.
> I believe that in Louisiana along with other States in the South and even in the North, this is very healthy, that there is beginning to develop a two-party system, and I want to give every support to that that I possibly can.
> Today I want to direct my remarks not only to the Republicans who may be here. I want to direct them particularly to the Democrats who are here, and in directing them to the Democrats, I'm going to do it in this way: It seems to me that when we elect a President of the United States the standards that we apply are quite different from those that we usually apply to local office.

The statements are ample evidence of the difficulties besetting a GOP organization. Yet it should be remarked that even the possibility of Republican victories in Louisiana represent change that was already underway. It is doubtful that a national Republican candidate could have found it advantageous to go into the Deep South before the fifties, and before the developments that took place then in local Republican organization.

The transition that began after 1948 and became evident during the following decade can be described as a shift from "post-office Republicanism" to a contesting Republicanism. It represents a shift in objectives from that of controlling federal patronage when the party came to power in Washington, to the definite objective of winning elections and political posts as the result of local political accomplishment. It also represents a change for Republican organization from pursuit of survival to pursuit of effectiveness.[18] The change took place at both the local and the national levels.

A transition in the region is well recorded by Kenneth N. Vines in his case study of the establishment of the new GOP in Louisiana. The case study centers around Tom Stagg, Jr., now the Republican national committeeman, who changed his political allegiance in 1949. Other businessmen and men in professions associated with him to launch an "Americans for Eisenhower" campaign in Shreveport. By 1953 Caddo Parish had the beginnings of a Republican committee and a Women's Republican Club was underway. In April of 1956 organization bore fruit. The first Republican local official in 75 years was elected to the parish police jury, as a segregationist along with 13 Democrats who were all segregationists. In November of that year Louisiana voted for Eisenhower.[19] To bring the story up to the present Louisiana voted strongly Democratic in the 1960 presidential election, but in March, 1963 the local organization was again successful. Caddo Parish elected the first two Republicans "in history" to the state legislature.

As in Louisiana, so in some other states, the Republican revival began several years before the national party sent assistance. Republican Congressman Bruce Alger was elected to represent Dallas in 1954, and in the same year William Cramer was elected to Congress as the first Republican from Florida since 1875.

Operation Dixie.

With the South already taking steps toward conversion, the Republican National Committee decided in 1957 to send missionaries there. Chairman Meade Alcorn, a Connecticut lawyer who was often challenged for his "liberal" views, established the Southern Division as part of the committee staff shortly after he began his duties. He put Lee Potter in charge and gave him a secretary and Operation Dixie was underway.[20] Potter had little else to guide him except his own considerable knowledge of the region and the not inconsiderable fact which the committee research staff, mainly Dr. William Prendergast, emphasized, that "The Southern States /region/ which they lost in 1952 this time gave them /Eisenhower-Nixon/ a slim majority of the major party vote (50.6 percent)".[21] But as Professor Wilder has said:[22]

> Under Potter's direction the Southern Division provided a center for invigorating and coordinating Republican activity in the South. Each of the eight incumbent Republican congressmen from the South was reelected in 1958--strong ammunition for the forces within the party which contend that the South should be courted vigorously and continuously.

Even as the party headquarters in Washington began to bolster Republicans in the South, it also continued to emphasize Civil Rights and to encourage Negroes to vote Republican. The events at Little Rock in 1957, some strong expressions on civil rights by Alcorn, and extended efforts by the Minorities Division of the Republican National Committee, all combined to pull the party toward civil rights and away from most white voters in the South. It can be said that party organization was somewhat handicapped during this period of multiple, and sometimes cross, purposes. A decision on direction began to loom for the GOP--a decision major parties in a two-party system do not like to make.

The 1958 election proved unfavorable to the Republicans, and it brought no resolution to the issue of whether the South and conservatism or civil rights and benefits from the national government should receive prime attention. National committee research staff statements could be quoted to support both positions. First there was the comment:[23]

> Holding the line in the South in 1958 was an accomplishment in view of the trend in most other parts of the country, in view of Little Rock, and in view of the fact that in 76 Southern Districts there was no Republican candidate for the House of Representatives. (In 1954, 67 Southern districts had no Republican candidate.)

And then a few pages later in the analysis, under the heading, "Voting Behavior of Negroes":[24]

> Returns from areas in which Negroes predominate, though somewhat fragmentary, tend to confirm the conclusion of the Gallup Poll that a larger percentage of Negroes voted Republican in 1958 than in 1954. It should be emphasized, however, that an overwhelming majority of Negroes still vote Democrat (70 percent in 1958 according to Gallup) and that Republican candidates did not get as large a share of the vote of Negroes in 1958 as in the presidential year of 1956.

The party continued to support both Operation Dixie and the Minorities Division, but commitment was apparently not full toward either one.

In 1959 and 1960 the White House appeared to be definitely on the civil rights side. Vice President Nixon advocated a strong position too as he became the party's apparent presidential nominee. Yet during these years, whether despite or because of these stands, the GOP continued to gain strength in the South, and its organization there continued to grow.

The Republican convention of 1960 brought together strong and organized advocates of the opposite sides of several questions. During the year 1959 the name of Senator Barry Goldwater began to rally strength in the South, and during the same year Governor Nelson Rockefeller's reputation grew in the northeastern part of the country and in many metropolitan areas. The formulation of the platform brought major clashes between the "incompatibles." Southerners and conservatives considered the final draft of the platform, including its civil rights plank, a defeat for their point of view. It also placed responsibility for winning the election on those who hoped to carry the contest into the metropolitan areas, particularly those of the north and east.

Then, the next month, Vice President Nixon campaigned in several Southern localities and was surprised, as was some of his staff, at the magnitude of his reception. But again, despite the recent Republican advances in voting, in offices, and in organization, analysis and reanalysis indicated that 1960 was primarily a contest for states with large electoral votes. The electoral college emphasized, if nothing else did, that in reality a presidential election is fifty elections; and winning a large number of votes in a region does not guarantee winning its electoral votes, as the 1956 election had shown.

A maximum effort was made in the South, of course, and this was the great significance of the nominee's "fifty state campaign;[11] but there was no consciously intended change in the position or program of the Republican ticket. In all, however, the party organization appeare to be balancing on a knife-edge throughout the campaign--awaiting the outcome on November eighth.

After any contest there is commentary on what particular action the winner took to gain victory and on what the loser did that brought defeat. The closer the contest, the greater the number of possibilitie until a hairline decision like that of 1960 makes any action or any decision by either candidate chargeable. The analysis of results which the researchers of the Republican National Committee released did not give credit or place blame, but it did reveal sectors in which votes were lost or won.[25]

When the 1960 results were compared with those for 1956, big losses appeared in metropolitan areas. The Republican labor vote was down. The religious issue was considered a variant factor. There was a serious loss in the Negro vote. In the South, in contrast, Republican returns were considered reasonably strong.

> An especially bright spot showing a growth in GOP support was in the five gubernatorial contests in the South during 1960. The Republican candidates for governor increased their vote 105 percent above the 1956 level or by over one million votes.
> Organizational effort at least in selected areas in the Southern states to expand the base of the Republican Party is clearly justified by the 1960 results.[26]

While many analysts may disagree with all or some of these findings, it is important to remember here that these are the work of the national committee staff and that they are generally accepted within the party, particularly by those who make decisions.

One such decision called for a careful study of the metropolitan losses with hopes that they might be recouped. State chairman Ray C. Bliss of Ohio supervised the task and prepared a report which guided efforts to strengthen party organization in cities.

Another decision evidently called for building up Republican organization in the South. The Southern Division bent to the task.

Operation Dixie Expanded.

For Operation Dixie the 1960 election was far from a complete failure. It left stronger electoral organizations in the South and it changed the order of priority for the states. South Carolina and Texas now began to receive a great deal of attention, but so did all of the states of the South.

Lee Potter's staff was bolstered in April 1962 when newsman Hal Dunham was added. He worked exclusively in the Southern Division and his major projects were keeping abreast of Republican news in the South and of comment about the GOP. He produced the pamphlets and releases sent into the area by the Southern Division. Outstanding among these was his effort under Potter to expand The Republican Southern Challenge. In June of 1962 it was a four-page brochure which was stuffed into envelopes. It had a circulation then of 5,000. By June of 1964 the publication had trebled in size and went to some 39,000 addresses every month. In both format and editorial care Southern Challenge became a more stylish, more expensive, and probably more effective publication than any of the others which the national committee distributed widely.

Editorially, the publication emphasized "conservatism," and it pushed hard for a two-party system in the South. It quoted the "conservatism" scores which Americans for Constitutional Action released on Southern as well as on other congressmen. The publication argued that Democrats from the South betray their constituents by supporting the liberal policies of the Democratic White House and of their Northern Democratic colleagues. The paper carried much news and many names related to Republican organizations and organizational drives in the South, as would certainly be the function of such an organ.

In March 1963, Mrs. Mary Ellen Miller, president of the Alabama Federation of Republican Women, became field representative for Operation Dixie and began her rounds of the eleven states plus Kentucky. This completed Lee Potter's staff of four and emphasized his drive for organization.

Through the sixties the Southern Division strove for organization at state and local levels, and in doing so, brought some of the first line talent of the party to organizational and training meetings in the region. For example, in November, 1961 a two-day Republican Regional Conference for Southern States convened at Atlanta. Among the speakers and discussants were the national chairman, public relations experts, researchers, organizers, and one presidential possibility. Senator Goldwater spoke there as the Chairman of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee.

A similar regional strategy conference took place in November of 1963 at Charleston, South Carolina. Both this gathering and the previous Atlanta meeting were covered extensively by the local press, which editorialized on the advantages of a two-party South.

Individual state organizational meetings also occurred from time to time under national committee auspices. In March, 1963 veteran worker Ray Humphreys introduced the perhaps typical MORE (Mobilization of Republican Enterprise) promotion program at Birmingham, Alabama.

However, here again, this is not to say that impetus came from Washington alone during the period 1961-1964. State organizations now included full time field workers, finance chairmen with effective plans, and dedicated county and precinct workers. State chairmen such as Wirt Yerger, Jr. of Mississippi, John Grenier of Alabama, Drake Edens of South Carolina, and Peter O'Donnell of Texas gave full time as well as the enthusiasm of youth to their work, and prompted Lee Potter to remark in January, 1964 that, "all of our Republican Southern State Chairmen average just over 36 years old."

It was apparent as well, to the young Southerner who hoped to enter politics, that he could rise much faster in the new and under-manned GOP than he could in the long-established and heavily populated Democratic organization. Becoming a county chairman in the Republican party might be merely a matter of a few years, or even less. So although he could not offer assurance of electoral victories, a Republican field man could clearly offer an enticing package to young leaders in the Southern states.[27]

By 1964 some national committee records showed that all but 138 of the 1140 counties in the eleven Southern States were "organized."[28] In the following table, the states and their organized counties are ranked according to per cent of counties organized.

Southern State	Total Counties	GOP Organized Counties	Per cent of Counties Organized
North Carolina	100	98	98.0%
Tennessee	95	93	97.9
Virginia	131	128	97.7
Arkansas	75	73	97.3
Alabama	67	64	95.5
Texas	254	237	93.3
South Carolina	46	42	91.3
Florida	67	59	88.1
THE SOUTH	1140	1002	87.9
Mississippi	82	71	86.6
Georgia	159	122	76.7
Louisiana	64	15	23.4

Here is some statistical indication of the increase in party organizational strength and of the status of the party in the region as it prepared for the 1964 presidential race. By way of comparison, in the late forties Professor Heard found that twenty-eight of Florida's 67 counties lacked GOP chairmen and that a spokesman for the Republican National Committee "conceded at the close of 1950 that in 1,220 counties in twelve southern states there were 113 vacancies among county chairmen and 840 among the women vice chairmen."[29]

Fifteen years later the Republicans had footings in nearly all counties of the South, except for a large number in the states of Georgia and Louisiana. In those states too, though, there appeared more competitive enthusiasm than the organizational figures indicated and there was promise of further extension during the coming presidential campaign.

Operation Dixie Disbanded.

While it is surely too early to assess the effect which the 1964 convention and its results have had on emerging Republicanism in the South, a few major changes can at least be marked. The nomination of Senator Goldwater for the presidency appears to have given greater position and prestige to Southern leaders. The voice of the South is now strong in Republican national headquarters, and it speaks with the authority which organizational success and winning the nomination bestow. Some of those who were responsible for organizing the old Confederacy have assumed responsibility for organizing the nation on behalf of the presidential nominee.

In August, 1964 Operation Dixie was disbanded and its personnel, including Lee Potter, assumed other responsibilities in the ongoing campaign. There were those who commented that the Southern Division had worked itself out of a job--and there was also the comment that the Republican National Committee was all one big Operation Dixie now.

SPECULATIONS

In light of the obvious facts of American politics, it seems reasonable to posit that the Republican Party has immediate need for considerable growth. Growth, as Professor Simon Kuznets explains it, is an increase in ability to achieve the goals which have been previously chosen. As a party, the GOP hopes to gain or maintain control of the national and local governments by putting or keeping its men in office. Obviously, in order to do so it needs to increase its size and support.

Considering the Republican party as a social institution that is subject to the demands which theorists currently see placed upon institutions if they are to function and to survive, the party's exclusion from the South has been a serious, perhaps vital, handicap that needed to be overcome if the party was to enjoy consistent presidential and congressional success after World War II. To this end the GOP has needed to develop goal-changing ability and a learning capacity about the South, and the South has reciprocated--else there would be little success. The changes have taken place since 1952, and through the years since then a place in the South has been a long-term Republican objective; an objective which involved some measures of novelty, initiative and creativity; an objective which has been achieved in some measure.[30]

It needs hardly to be remarked that the movement has social implications for both parties, for the country as a whole, and for the region of the South as well. The weight of Southern ideas and demands now seems evident in 1964 Republican politics, and will probably remain influential in coming years. A reverse effect now takes hold too, and the South may become involved and responsible in the national two-party scheme in ways that were not known up to now, or at least not until recently.

One study of 1960 presidential voting among Negroes and whites in a Southern city of 50,000 yielded a conclusion that the whites felt there was no difference between Kennedy and Nixon on civil rights. So the white vote was split about evenly between the candidates. The Negroes saw Kennedy as the more militant on civil rights, however, cast their ballots for him, and thus helped to provide the Democrats with a majority from the city.[31] The same kind of division is quite possible now in other parts of the South in other contests such as those for Congress and for the governorship of a state.

With a 1964 presidential candidate who appears to be more solicitous of Southern expectations, the 1960 results may not be anticipated in the South, and they also may not be anticipated in the rest of the states of the union, perhaps to the immediate disadvantage of the GOP. The long run organizational gain for the Republican party may be of another cloth, however.

Perhaps the strategic thinking of Senator James O. Eastland is apropos to this speculation. In a 1960 television hour a local journalist asked the Mississippi Democrat what he expected if a two-party system were established in his state. Said the Senator:[32]

> I think that the two-party system would destroy this state because of our peculiar institutions....We've got a conservative state, and when you split the conservative vote between Democrats and Republicans, the liberals will take over. That happened in Tennessee, where they are split between Republicans and Democrats, and it's happened in Texas.

In explaining the significance to the South of its one-party senatorial delegation the Senator contended:[33]

> The Southern states must lead from a position of strength. We must have legislative position. I don't think there is any question but that if the eighteen Southern senators, which is the hard core of Southern resistance, were crushed, that the total defenses of the South would collapse like a stack of cards.

If the two-party system has appeared, the Southern congressman and the Southern senator are no longer invulnerable. On the contrary, the Democratic legislator will need and ask for support from the national party and from its leaders, as does the Republican candidate for Southern office today.[34] The result should be greater cohesion within both parties, and perhaps a closer adherence of Southern office holders to the national policies of both parties.

Not to be overlooked in our narrative is the pattern of organization and movement which Operation Dixie symbolized, or embodied for the national Republican party and its Republican National Committee. The national committee gestures toward the South were admittedly lacking in virility, as are so many activities of our major party national committees. Yet they were persistent, they were attuned, and they were received by voters and groups who already considered themselves "alienated" or nearly so.

Perhaps the outstanding characteristic of the Southern effort was its duration. Seven years is a considerable span for a national committee program, and it is a long time for one man, in this case I. Lee Potter, to be in charge of an operation. Its results and its conditioning effects on both the whole party and the southern extension of the party were shaped by him in considerable measure.

SOUTHERN CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS

Milton C. Cummings, Jr.
The Brookings Institution

Prepared for delivery at the 1964 Annual Meeting of The American Political Science Association, Chicago, Illinois
Pick Congress Hotel September 9-12, 1964

For three generations observers of American politics have either been commenting on the existence of a solidly Democratic South or else drawing attention to threats to its solidarity. Yet both in discussions of the latest challenge to southern solidarity and in assessing the consequences of that solidarity within the Congress, it is well to remember that the South has not always been dominated by one political party. In the 1830's and the 1840's there was spirited competition between the two major parties in the South; and this competition was based on tangible social and economic differences within the population of the region. "The economic and political interests of the southern Whigs were the 'special interests' of the slavocracy. During the early 'forties the Whig party was frequently denounced as the aristocratic party of the slaveholders." The Democrats, by contrast, drew on "the opposite side of the social scale -- especially upon the small farmer of the back hill-country who could always be reached by the party's appeal to the agrarian spirit." [1] At the national level, southern electoral votes were cast for Whig as well as for Democratic presidential candidates; and Whig Congressmen, as well as Democratic Representatives, were sent to Washington by the voters of the South.[2]

2. As Charles Grier Sellers summarizes the balance of power between the two major parties during this period: "Of the 425,629 votes cast in the slave states at the election of 1836, the Whigs had a majority of only 243 popular votes. In this and the three succeeding presidential elections, a total of 2,475,171 votes were cast, but the over-all margin, again in favor of the Whigs, was only 66,295, or 2.4 per cent of the total votes. In these four elections the Whigs carried a total of twenty-seven southern states and the Democrats twenty-six. An equally close rivalry is evident in congressional representation. In the five congressional elections between 1832 and 1842, southern Democrats won an aggregate total of 234 seats, while their opponents captured 263. Whigs predominated among southern representatives in three of these five Congresses, and Democrats in two. In three of them the margin between the southern wings of the parties was five or less. We have, then, a picture of keen political competition, with a vigorous Whig party maintaining a slight ascendancy." Charles Grier Sellers, Jr., "Who Were the Southern Whigs?" American Historical Review, Vol. 59, No. 2, January 1954, p. 336.

Then came The War. Except in a few isolated enclaves of Republican strength in the Appalachian Mountains, where Unionist sentiment was strong, southern white electors coalesced with extraordinary unanimity behind candidates of the Democratic party in opposition to the party of Lincoln and Grant. From Richmond, Virginia, to Brownsville, Texas, and from Tallahassee, Florida, to Little Rock, Arkansas, two common factors peculiar to southern society -- the Negro, and memories of a losing Civil War and the Reconstruction which ensued -- combined to produce a superficial picture of political unanimity. In the vernacular of American politics, the "Solid South" became a commonplace.

It was the southern whites in the black belt -- areas where the Negro population was largest -- for whom this sectional solidarity was of greatest importance. And their determination to preserve a one-party system was made plain when the Populists attempted to provide an alternative to the Democratic party in the South in the 1890's. As V. O. Key wrote in 1949: "In the fight against Populism and in the subsequent agitation about the place of the Negro, the black belts strengthened their position by re-enforcing the South's attachment to the Democratic party. The raising of a fearful specter of Negro rule and the ruthless application of social pressures against those who treasonably fused with the Republicans under Populist leadership put down for decades the threat of the revival of two-party competition.

"Two-party competition would have been fatal to the status of black-belt whites. It would have meant in the 'nineties an appeal to the Negro vote and it would have meant (and did for a time) Negro rule in some black-belt counties. From another standpoint, two-party competition would have meant the destruction of southern solidarity in national politics -- in presidential elections and in the halls of Congress. Unity on the national scene was essential in order that the largest possible bloc could be mobilized to resist any national move toward interference with southern authority to deal with the race question as was desired locally." [3]

This "unity on the national scene" was a potent defense mechanism for the South during the long years when the Republicans dominated the national government. It meant even more when the Democrats became the normally majority party in the House and Senate in the aftermath of the Great Depression. The Congress, of course, is a body where in recent political history a lengthy period of service is usually a crucial prerequisite for a member's effectiveness. It is thus an institution singularly well designed to maximize the benefits accruing to regions whose elections for Senators and Representatives have consistently been dominated by one party. And the benefits to the South since 1932 have been many.

SOUTHERN CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS, THE TENURE OF SOUTHERN CONGRESSMEN, AND COMMITTEE CHAIRMANSHIPS

The point that safe electoral constituencies in the South have benefitted the region is a familiar one. Even so, a brief look at the facts reveals some of the differences of degree in the consequences this has had for the House and for the Senate, as well as underscoring what is at stake in the recent Republican challenge to the South's solidarity in congressional elections. As the data presented in Table 1 indicate, nearly half of the House seats that remained consistently Democratic between 1952 and 1960 were in the 11 states of the former Confederacy. The South and the Border States combined contained well over half of the consistently Democratic House districts during this period. Nevertheless, during these years another large bloc of 80 districts outside the South and the Border States -- many of them northern big-city constituencies -- also were consistently Democratic. No other single region has come close to controlling the number of committee chairmanships the South has controlled. But in 1961, as in 1951 and in 1941, Representatives from these non-southern districts shared with the South a significant number of the chairmanships of the standing committees of the House. (Table 2.)

Thus, in the House, the large bloc of consistently Democratic southern House seats has been partly counterbalanced by another sizeable, though smaller, bloc of consistently Democratic House seats from non-southern districts. But in the Senate, the South's advantage over all other regions in the number of consistently Democratic seats is enormous. In all, there are 38 Senate seats where there has been no change in party control between 1942 and 1962. Of these, eight were consistently Republican, and 30 were consistently Democratic: 21 in the South, another 5 in the Rocky Mountain States (which also have fared well in Senate committee chairmanships), and only four more from all other regions of the country: (Table 3) In January, 1963, the average number of years of consecutive service of the southern Democratic Senators was 16. For the New England Democrats it was three; for the Mid-Atlantic and the Midwestern Democratic Senators it was five.

These discrepancies are amply reflected in the chairmanships of the standing committees of the Senate. In 1951 the South shared with the Rocky Mountain States control of all but one of the standing committee chairmanships. In 1961, all but two of the standing committees had a southern or a Rocky Mountain State chairman. (Table 4) One can well understand why Mississippi's Senator James O. Eastland stressed during the 1960 election campaign the advantage the South derived from its one-party senatorial delegation:

> The Southern states must lead from a position of strength. We must have a legislative position. I don't think there is any question but that if the 18 southern senators, which is the hard core of southern resistance, were crushed, that the total defenses of the South would collapse like a stack of cards. THE EROSION OF SOUTHERN SECTIONALISM
AT THE PRESIDENTIAL LEVEL

The question of whether this overwhelming Democratic domination of the South's elections is nearing its end has aroused interest for a number of years. In 1955, V. O. Key addressed himself to the problem, in an article prepared for the readers of the Virginia Quarterly Review. He began:

> A meteorologist of the Ice Age could predict tomorrow's weather with a high degree of confidence. "Continued cold" usually turned out to be a safe prognosis. Let us pause a moment to marvel, however, at the reputation a primitive weatherman could have made for himself by forecasting the retreat of the ice cap to the polar regions.[5]

Key then stressed the "impressive staying power" of the dominant party in a one-party region, noted that it would be even harder for the Republicans to make inroads in the South at the state and local level than at the national level,[6] and declared that "the fulfillment of tendencies now at work will probably require decades rather than years."[7] The growth of Republicanism in the area, he suggested, would at best be a "spotted sort of development." Nevertheless, he clearly expected that the Republican party's strength in the region would grow:

> A summary balancing of the interplay of the variables at work can only lead to the conclusion that internal cleavages within the South will deepen, that both the sentiment and the reality of sectionalism will decline, and that kindred interests in South and North will become more and more interwoven.[8]

In the intervening nine years, the Republicans' gains in the South have been sufficiently widespread that their pattern can be clearly traced -- both at the presidential and the congressional levels. For several decades after Reconstruction, the South's solidarity was reflected in full at the presidential level. In the 1920 Republican landslide, Harding carried Tennessee; but it was not until the Democrats nominated Al Smith -- a wet, a Roman Catholic, and a New Yorker -- that a Republican was able to poll a heavy vote for President in the South. In 1928, Herbert Hoover ran ahead of Smith in five of the region's 11 states. The Republican's share of the total presidential vote in the area was 47.3 per cent. Within a year, however, the Great Depression had begun; and in 1932 the southern states were once again solidly Democratic. As late as 1944, Franklin Roosevelt received more than seven of every ten votes cast for President in the South.[9]

By 1948, however, the political climate below the Mason-Dixon Line had changed considerably. A hastily constructed States' Rights presidential ticket, headed by South Carolina's J. Strom Thurmond, gave a third choice to southerners who were dissatisfied with the national Democratic Administration of Harry Truman. The results of the balloting must be interpreted with some care, because it was in the four states where Thurmond ran as the Democratic nominee that the South Carolinian made his best showing.[10] Nevertheless, when the votes polled by the G.O.P. candidate and by Thurmond were subtracted, the national Democratic presidential nominee was left with barely half of the southern popular vote. The Republican share of this turnout, however, was still a meager 26.6 per cent of the total.[11]

In 1952 it was different. Republican national leaders decided to make a determined bid for southern votes. In a precedent-shattering move, the new G.O.P. presidential nominee, General Eisenhower, began his campaign in Atlanta, deep in the heart of the Southland. Even the most optimistic Republican strategists must have been gratified by the region's response. Between 1948 and 1952, the number of southerners who voted for President increased by two-thirds. Nearly half of this record number of votes -- 4.1 million out of 8.5 million -- went to General Eisenhower, a showing which enabled the G.O.P. to carry four states with 56 of the region's electoral votes.[12] Four years later, Eisenhower solidified his strength in the South. For the first time since Reconstruction, a Republican presidential nominee polled more votes than his Democratic opponent in the 11 states of the former Confederacy. The 1956 popular vote in the South was:

Eisenhower (Republican)	4,211,461	48.9 per cent
Stevenson (Democrat)	4,122,778	47.8 per cent

In 1960 Nixon, undoubtedly helped by his opponent's Catholicism, ran almost as well as Eisenhower had run in the South, polling about 46 per cent of the region's vote.[14]

THE EROSION OF SOUTHERN SECTIONALISM
AT THE CONGRESSIONAL LEVEL

The potential appeal in the South of a G.O.P. presidential ticket is now taken seriously by managers of both parties. But until recently discussions of the electoral prospects of southern Republican congressional candidates were frequently greeted with chilling skepticism. Since World War II there have been only four southern senatorial contests where the Democratic candidate failed to get more than 60 per cent of the vote -- Lyndon Johnson's 1960 Senate race in Texas, the special election contest in Texas in 1961 when the Republicans elected Senator John Tower, and the hard-fought contests by South Carolina's Olin D. Johnston and Alabama's Lister Hill in 1962. But in a growing minority of southern House districts, whose smaller areas permit and sometimes foster the kind of spotty development V. O. Key envisaged, G.O.P. congressional aspirants are becoming a real threat to their Democratic adversaries.

1952 was the year of the first great Republican breakthrough in southern presidential voting since the New Deal. It was in 1956, however, that the first large gains were registered by G.O.P. House candidates in the South. This upsurge of the popular vote for Republican congressional nominees is underscored by the data in Figure 1. Between 1944 and 1952 the vote polled by would-be southern Republican Congressmen increased substantially. On the other hand, between 1948 and 1952 alone, the G.O.P. presidential vote in the South more than trebled. In 1956 President Eisenhower received about the same number of southern popular votes as he polled four years earlier. But between 1952 and 1956, the vote cast for Republican House candidates in the region increased by two-thirds.

This narrowing of the gap between the southern Republican vote for President and for Congressmen took place even though President Eisenhower was on the ballot in all of the region's 106 House districts while southern electors could vote for a G.O.P. congressional candidate in only 42 districts. In part, the increased House vote reflected greater organizational activity by the G.O.P. In 1956 the party contested 10 more seats than it had four years before. But the respectable showing made by Republicans in several of the newly contested districts also indicated that increasing areas of the South were becoming receptive to active two-party competition at the congressional level. Even in districts which had been contested earlier, however, G.O.P. House nominees reduced the gap separating their own vote tallies from those of President Eisenhower between 1952 and 1956.

In the mid-term Democratic landslide of 1958, the Republicans' share of the House vote dropped in the South, as it did elsewhere in the country. The party scored a defensive victory in the region, however, by retaining control of all seven of its southern House seats, including the five it had captured since 1950. In 1960, the party's share of the southern House vote again moved upward; and in 1962, the party made its best showing in the South in this century while polling nearly 32 per cent of the region's vote. At the same time, four more southern Republican House seats were added to the seven that the party had previously controlled. (Figure 2.)

There were 26 districts in the region where Republican House candidates polled 40 per cent or more of the two-party vote in 1962. By study of these, the two major sources of strength for the Republican party in southern House contests can be traced. Data which bear on these constituencies appear in Table 5. The great majority of the southern districts where the G.O.P. made a respectable showing in 1962 were located either in the Appalachian Plateau region embracing western Virginia, central and western North Carolina, and eastern Tennessee, or in rapidly growing industrial and urban enclaves scattered from Richmond, Virginia, to Miami, Florida, and Dallas, Texas. The existence of some Republican strength in the uplands of the South has a long history, although since the Second World War it has been increasing. The emergence of Republicanism with mass support among the professional and middle classes of the region's economically expanding urban centers, on the other hand, is a more recent phenomenon. And it has profound implications for the future of southern politics.

In many respects, the land which in popular lore is ascribed to the "hillbilly," and the respectable urban neighborhoods of an emergent middle class are worlds apart. But nearly all of these districts representing the twin strands of persistent southern Republicanism have one factor in common: a smaller Negro population than average for the South. In only two of the 26 districts did the number of Negroes in the population substantially exceed one in four. In nearly two-thirds of the districts, it varied from one in five to one in 40. As the proportion of Negroes in southern districts increased, by contrast, the number of respectable Republican vote tallies and even candidates became few and far between.

This association between the black-belt districts and continuing Republican weakness at the congressional level in 1962 is brought out by the data in Table 6. In all of the nine southern districts where the 1960 Negro population exceeded 40 per cent, the G.O.P. did not even run a House candidate.[15] In the 1960 presidential balloting, five of these districts were carried by the Democratic presidential ticket, two went Republican, and two supported an unpledged presidential electors ticket. Wherever an unpledged or states' rights ticket alternative was available, the voters in these black-belt districts gave it considerable support. The recent election returns suggest, however, that in the immediate future these dissident presidential protests will not affect the voting for Congressmen. Probably a prime reason is that black-belt electors' views on racial issues are already forcefully represented by their incumbent Democratic Congressmen.

In 1952 President Eisenhower drew upon three major sources of support in the South -- traditionally Republican areas in the Appalachian Plateau, urban voters registering a protest against the economic policies of the Fair Deal, and black-belt electors expressing their disapproval of the national Democratic party's stand on racial issues.[16] In 1956 President Eisenhower had lost the support of many in this last group, but his gains in the cities and in the uplands more than made up for their defection. The significant fact about the Republican congressional strength is that, with but few exceptions, it has never stemmed from the black belt -- although the time may come when it will.[17] Its base has lain primarily in the Appalachian Plateau and the cities.

15. For the record, perhaps it should be noted that in most black-belt House districts relatively few Negroes voted in 1962.

16. Samuel Lubell, The Revolt of the Moderates (New York: Harper Brothers, 1956), pp. 179-180. Donald Strong has pointed out that in 1952 the black-belt counties swung to Eisenhower in South Carolina, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Alabama, while supporting Stevenson in North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia. Stevenson did well in the black belt in the latter states, Strong suggests, because some Negroes voted in these areas, and because the white voters' attachment to the Democratic party was reinforced by the presence of a relatively strong Republican opposition within the state. See Donald S. Strong, "The Presidential Election in the South, 1952," Journal of Politics, Vol. 17, No. 3, August, 1955, pp. 343-389.

17. In the 1962 Alabama senatorial contest, the Republican nominee, who sought consistently to tie Senator Hill to the national Democratic Administration, ran well in the black-belt districts.

These are, in fact, the only areas of the South where support for national Republican office seekers has manifested itself with any continuity. In recent years, the white voters in black-belt districts have been highly volatile in their voting for President. In 1948 many of them supported J. Strom Thurmond's third-party presidential candidacy. In 1952, Eisenhower, a Republican, did well in a number of black-belt constituencies, particularly in the Deep South. But in 1956, some of these voters, perhaps disenchanted with the General, were supporting a third-party presidential nominee again.

PRESIDENTIAL REPUBLICANISM AND CONGRESSIONAL REPUBLICANISM

Given a national Republican presidential nominee whose views on racial matters the black-belt voters find congenial -- an event that may not be repeated again soon if the ticket runs badly in the nation as a whole, these districts may support the Republican presidential ticket in 1964. Moreover, the consequences at the polls if the Negroes in these constituencies should begin to vote in large numbers are even more difficult to predict. This much, however, is clear. Southern Republicanism has no history of gradual, steady growth in the black belt -- either at the presidential or the congressional level. But in the Appalachian Plateau and the cities where it does, the evolution of Republican strength for President and Congressmen deserves treatment in somewhat greater detail.

As early as 1944, there were 22 districts in the South where Thomas E. Dewey was able to poll more than four votes of every ten for the Republican presidential ticket. Most of these constituencies were scattered throughout the Appalachian Plateau. But there also were harbingers of the Republicans' growing urban strength in the South. Dewey did fairly well in the less rural districts of Florida, and in scattered constituencies which included the cities of Chattanooga, Tennessee, and Dallas, Texas. In nearly all of these districts, however, the vote received by G.O.P. House nominees lagged well behind the Republican presidential poll.

In Table 7, an analysis is presented which makes it possible to follow the fortunes of subsequent G.O.P. House candidates in these southern districts where Dewey did best in 1944. By 1948, only three Republican congressional nominees polled over 45 per cent of the vote in these constituencies. And the only ones who were elected came from the two longtime Republican strongholds of eastern Tennessee. By 1956, however, the fortunes of Republican House nominees in the southern districts where Dewey had made his best showing in 1944 had improved markedly. In 13 of the districts, the G.O.P. House vote exceeded 45 per cent. In seven of the constituencies, a Republican Congressman was elected.

Every southern Republican Representative who was sent to Washington in 1956 was elected in a district where Dewey had polled over 40 per cent of the presidential vote in 1944. Moreover, the larger Dewey's vote had been earlier, the better a Republican House candidate was likely to do in the district in 1956. In the Appalachian uplands and the cities of the South, lines of cleavage that were etched by the presidential battle of 1944 were being paralleled in the contests for Representative more than a decade later. The G.O.P. House vote still lagged behind the party's presidential poll, but the Republicans' congressional gains in the South followed in the wake of G.O.P. successes at the presidential level.

SOUTHERN CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS AND THE FUTURE OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY IN CONGRESS

The obstacles encountered by the Republicans in their quest for southern House and Senate seats are enormous. In some southern states, the state legislatures pass laws designed to hinder the growth of the minority party. For many voters the tradition of voting Democratic dies hard. The advantages the southern Democrats derive from their special position of strength within the congressional wing of the Democratic party are still substantial. In many districts incumbent Democratic Congressmen make unusually formidable opposing candidates. Moreover, southern white voters can support the Republican presidential nominee without disturbing the local one-party domination which precludes two white parties from having to bid for Negro votes. While two-party competition at the congressional level would not strike directly at these delicate local arrangements, a strengthened Republican party at the state level clearly would.

The obstacles besetting the Republicans' drive for votes in the South call attention to the peculiar dilemma which the G.O.P. faces in its bid for control of the House of Representatives in the 1960's. Areas outside the South that were once heavily Republican (aside from the peak years of the New Deal) are now sending substantially more Democratic Congressmen to Washington than they did in the 1920's or even in the early 1950's. In 1954 the New England House delegation contained 18 Republicans compared with 10 Democrats. In 1962 the Democrats held a margin in the region of 15 House seats to 10. In 1954 Republican Congressmen from the Pacific Coast states outnumbered the West Coast Democrats by 28 to 13. In 1962 there were 10 more Democrats than Republicans in the area. And between 1954 and 1962 the Republicans' edge over the Democrats in the number of Congressmen elected from all areas outside the South and the Border States dropped from 85 to 21. (Table 8.)

This erosion of sectionalism in the North has gone far to deprive the Republican party of its overwhelming domination of its traditional regional strongholds above the Mason-Dixon Line. The result is that the Republicans have lost their top-heavy margin of House seats in their former northern sectional strongholds. But they have not yet registered the corresponding gains in the South that would be theirs if the tempo of change were the same throughout the country. Until the G.O.P. adds substantially to its strength for the House in the South -- as it already has for President, the party faces formidable obstacles in its bid for control of the House of Representatives. Yet if the portents of recent election returns are fulfilled, in time these gains will come.

A Council to attain the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South

During the week of October 25 the national meetings of the Adult Education Association will be held in Atlanta. On Wednesday morning, October 28, the Labor Education Section of the A.E.A. will have its meeting on the topic of "Labor Education in the South."

I have been asked by the planning committee to invite you to attend this session which will bring together a panel of university, agency, and union labor education practitioners. The session will be informal. It is my hope that this meeting will provide an opportunity for persons in Georgia interested in labor education to become better informed, meet some of the national people in this field, and to raise questions about the prospects of labor education in the region.

The meetings will be held in the Regency Hyatt House and will run from 9:00 a.m. until noon.

I urge you to join us for these deliberations.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director

Labor Snubs Wallace At Alabama Meeting

Montgomery, Ala.—Top aides of Alabama's presidential candidate, George C. Wallace, hovered on the outskirts of the State AFL-CIO convention here, passed out tickets to a Wallace dinner—but left without a labor endorsement for the third party candidate in his home state.

The 500 delegates representing Alabama's growing union movement ignored the former governor's candidacy. But they called for action at the state level to repeal anti-union legislation and to set up a medicaid program to meet the health needs of Alabama's low-income families.

Delegates called for legislation to permit public employes to organize and bargain collectively.

Present Alabama law declares that any state employe or worker in a state-supported institution who joins a union loses the protection of the merit system and may be summarily fired.

And state courts have held that counties and cities do not have the right to recognize or deal with a union unless the legislature passes a law specifically authorizing it.

Forty states presently receive federal matching grants to provide medical care for the needy. The convention delegates said in a resolution that Alabama should do likewise.

Delegates unanimously re-elected Barney Weeks, who has been a symbol of labor-civil rights cooperation in the Deep South, as president of the state federation, A. G. Trammell as secretary-treasurer and William Mintz as executive vice president.

Weeks, in his report to the convention, said new organizing in the state by AFL-CIO affiliates has added 10,000 union members in addition to increases in already-organized plants.

He urged as a major legislative goal a "little Norris-LaGuardia Act" to restrict state court injunctions used repeatedly "to break strikes."

In other areas, the convention called for federal and state action on consumer protection, including an end to auto insurance abuses.

It urged passage by Congress of occupational safety and health legislation, preservation of the TVA fertilizer plant, and tax reform.

Delegates voted strong support for the California grape boycott and for the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee.

CLARK, HATCHER, CHISHOLM TO ADDRESS CONFERENCE

Ramsey Clark

Richard Hatcher

BOND TO KEYNOTE FOUR-DAY MEETING OF BLACK OFFICIALS

U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark, Gary, Ind., Mayor Richard Hatcher and New York Congresswoman-elect Shirley Chisholm will address the Voter Education Project's Southwide Conference of Black Elected Officials in Atlanta the second week in December.

Attorney General Clark will speak at a banquet Friday night at the American Motor Hotel. Hatcher, the first Negro mayor of Gary and one of two black mayors of major U.S. cities, will participate in a public forum Thursday night at Clark College.

Mrs. Chisholm, who won election Nov. 5 in New York's Bedford-Stuyvesant area, is the first Negro woman ever sent to Congress. She will address the conference's closing luncheon Saturday, Dec. 14.

More than 380 Negro officeholders from across the South have been invited to attend the conference Dec. 11-14 at the Dinkler Plaza Hotel. VEP records show that there are currently 151 Negroes elected to city offices, 78 to law enforcement positions, 72 school board members, 55 county officials and 30 state legislators in the South. Workshops will be held on Thursday and Friday afternoons for officeholders in each of these categories.

Julian Bond, the 28-year-old Georgia state representative nominated for vice president at the Democratic National Convention in August, will give the keynote address at the opening dinner Wednesday night.

Atlanta University students and the public will be invited to attend Mayor Hatcher's speech and panel discussion afterwards. Panelists will be Mississippi state Rep. Robert Clark; Richmond, Va., City Councilman Henry Marsh; Georgia state Rep. J. C. Daugherty, and John McCown, newly elected commissioner of Hancock County, Ga.

Other speakers at the four-day conference will be Dr. Kenneth Clark, director of the Metropolitan Applied Research Center (MARC) in New York, and Dr. Samuel Cook of the Duke University political science department.

Three black financial experts and officeholders—Gerald Lamb, Connecticut state treasurer; Theodore Jones, director of revenue of Illinois, and Alfred Pelham, chairman of Great Lakes Mutual Life Insurance Company in Detroit—will be

BY JANET WELLS

At least 107 Negroes won public office in the South Nov. 5, a Voter Education Project survey shows.

About 80 of the officials have not held an elected office before, and the rest were re-elected to new terms or to new offices. The election brings to 385 the number of black elected officials in the 11 Southern states.

Approximately 280 Negroes ran in the general election. VEP records show that at least 310 Negroes were candidates in Democratic and Republican primaries this year, and a large number of others ran as independents or on third-party tickets.

The general election brought the desegregation of three state legislative houses. Negro representatives were elected for the first time to the Tennessee Senate and the North Carolina and Florida houses of representatives. Southern state legislatures will have 30 black members when their new terms begin.

Three independent candidates for the U.S. House of Representatives in Virginia and candidates for the U.S. Senate and House on the National Democratic Party of Alabama

FELDER RESIGNS AS SCVEP HEAD

James L. Felder, director of the South Carolina Voter Education Project since June, 1967, has resigned to take a job with the Scholarship, Education and Defense Fund for Racial Equality (SEDFRE).

Felder will direct a two-year program of technical and legal assistance to Negro officeholders throughout the United States. He said the position will give him an opportunity to continue on a national level the work he has done in South Carolina for the past year and a half.

The SEDFRE project will sponsor seminars to advise black officeholders on the problems of conducting their offices and their campaigns, as well as on public issues.

Felder said he will continue to make his home in South Carolina while traveling around the country to meet black officials. SEDFRE is headquartered in New York.

Felder's successor in the South Carolina VEP has not yet been selected.

A native of South Carolina, Felder attended Clark College in Atlanta. He assumed the directorship of the South Carolina VEP immediately after his graduation from Howard University Law School.

JOLLIFF REINSTATED IN MISSISSIPPI

James Jolliff Jr. of Woodville, Miss., has been reinstated as supervisor of Wilkinson County after the Mississippi Supreme Court cleared him of a criminal conviction.

Jolliff, a Negro and a civil rights leader, was removed from office in March after he was convicted of interfering with the investigation of a state alcoholic beverage control (ABC) agent.

The incident occurred in September of last year, two months before Jolliff's election as supervisor. The ABC agent charged that Jolliff blocked him when he attempted to check the beer stock in a Woodville cafe Jolliff was attending. Jolliff was arrested when he demanded a warrant before allowing the agent to search the cafe.

The state Supreme Court Oct. 28 ruled unanimously that the ABC agent was "not in discharge of his lawful duty" in searching the establishment. The court declared that state law does not give ABC agents the authority to enforce the state's beer laws.

DIRECTOR'S DIRECT LINE

Southwide Meet Designed To Aid Black Officials

Three years ago, just after passage of the Voting Rights Act of 1965, the Southern Regional Council compiled a list of elected Negro officeholders in the South. The list totaled just over 70 names.

Today, counting some 80 black candidates elected for the first time in the Nov. 5 general election, the list totals over 380 names. The roster thus is more than five times as large today as it was just three years ago.

This dramatic increase is one of the more significant developments in Southern politics today. Not even the fact that five Southern states gave George Wallace his only electoral votes can overshadow the deepening involvement of black Southerners in the region's political process.

It is true, of course, that most of these officials were elected by predominantly black voting lists and are a result of heavy increases in Negro registration. Indeed, many represent all-black districts—as do, for example, the mayors and councilmen in all-black towns. Nevertheless there are some black officeholders—notably several of the legislators—who represent districts in which large numbers of white voters live. In any event, the list of black officeholders is growing very rapidly and will continue to do so in the months ahead.

This rapid growth in the number of Negro officeholders poses a new issue for Negroes in the South—a welcome issue, but an issue nevertheless. That issue is how to make these new officeholders as effective as possible in filling their offices. Like politicians of all races, black officeholders must be able to produce in behalf of their constituents. But Negro officeholders face several additional problems.

Black voters often feel that black officeholders should produce instantly, almost magically, all those benefits and services that had been denied down through the years by callous white officials. Usually—almost always—this is impossible.

In many cases the Negro officeholder finds himself serving Negroes who live outside his district but have no spokesman. Thus a Negro legislator—to use that office as an example—might find himself speaking on some issues for all the Negroes in the state.

The Negro officeholder is being observed closely by both races. Some of the watching eyes are friendly, but many are hostile. Often the new Negro officeholder will be measured by yardsticks far more exacting than those applied to his white predecessors. The difficulty that Julian Bond had in claiming his seat in the Georgia Legislature stands as an example of the sort of roadblocks that can be thrown in the way of black elected officials.

Finally, most of the newly elected black officials carry a heavy burden of political inexperience. Historically, the white political structure of the South has deliberately and systematically denied blacks the opportunity to gain experience in the political process.

This is the sort of practical problems we will be dealing with here Dec. 11-14 at the first Southwide Conference of Black Elected Officials. We will not solve all the problems at one conference. But we hope to establish, at this conference, some machinery for dealing with the problems on a continuing basis in the future, as the number of black elected officials continues to grow.—VERNON E. JORDAN JR.

TWO LEGISLATURES ARE DESEGREGATED

The state houses of representatives of Florida and North Carolina have been desegregated following the election of one black member to each Nov. 5. In Tennessee, where the state House was desegregated in 1964, two Negroes were elected for the first time to the state Senate.

The election brings to 30 the number of Negroes serving in Southern state legislatures. The only states remaining without black representation in either house are Alabama, Arkansas and South Carolina.

Georgia, Texas and now Tennessee have both houses integrated.

The new Tennessee senators are J. O. Patterson, who had served one term as a state representative, and Nashville attorney Avon Williams.

Williams defeated state Rep. Dorothy Brown in the Democratic primary. With the defeat of Dr. Brown, A. W. Willis and Russell Sugarmon by Negroes in the primary and the elevation of Patterson to the Senate, the House acquired four new Negro members but did not have a net gain of Negro-held seats.

The new members of the Tennessee House are Nashville City Councilman Harold Love and Alvin M. King, James I. Taylor and Ira H. Murphy, all of Memphis. Robert J. Booker and M. G. Blakemore were re-elected.

Joe Lang Kershaw, 57, will be the first Negro to serve in the Florida House of Representatives since Reconstruction. Kershaw, a Miami junior high civics teacher, worked as a janitor in the House chamber when he was a college student. He defeated his white opponent by 60,000 votes.

Henry Frye of Greensboro, the first Negro elected to the North Carolina House since 1898, was an unsuccessful candidate for the office in the Democratic primary two years ago. He is a former assistant U.S. attorney and law instructor at North Carolina College law school.

The Georgia General Assembly will have 14 black members in January, an increase of three over the last term. The two incumbent Negro senators, both from Atlanta, and the eight incumbent representatives who sought re-election won.

Two Georgia counties will send black representatives to the 205-member state House for the first time in January. James E. Dean defeated a Negro write-in candidate in suburban Atlanta DeKalb County, and Bobby L. Hill was elected from coastal Chatham County (Savannah). In Fulton County (Atlanta) E. J. Shepherd was elected to the seat held by retiring Rep. J. D. Grier, and Clarence G. Ezzard won a formerly white seat.

The two incumbent state representatives and state senator in Texas were re-elected.

panelists in a discussion on "Revenue and Taxation and the Elected Official."

Five Negroes who undertook and lost exceptionally difficult races will speak at a luncheon Friday. The five—each of whom will speak briefly of his campaign—are Charles Evers, candidate in 1968 for U.S. Congress from Mississippi; Maynard Jackson, candidate for the U. S. Senate from Georgia this fall; George A. Payton, candidate for the U.S. House from Charleston, S. C., and Reginald A. Hawkins, candidate this summer for governor of North Carolina, and A. W. Willis, who ran for mayor of Memphis.

OVER 100 WIN

(NDPA) ticket were all defeated.

Alabama, with blacks running on three different tickets, had the largest number (29) of Negro winners.

Of approximately 90 candidates running the NDPA picked up 17 local offices. In Sumter County—the only county in which NDPA winners had opposition—Samuel Little was elected by 30 votes as chairman of the county school board.

It took a Supreme Court ruling in October to get the NDPA emblem on Alabama ballots. The American Civil Liberties Union plans to bring contempt charges and a suit for a new election in Greene County, where the probate judge refused to put the six local NDPA candidates on the ballot.

Alabamans also elected black candidates on the regular Democratic party ticket and on the Lowndes County Freedom Organization (Black Panther) ticket. Only two of five Lowndes County candidates—both of them unopposed—won, despite a black voting majority in the county.

In other recent elections, G. H. Gause was elected to the Bartow, Fla., city council, and Robert Dean Gray was elected alderman in Shelby, Miss. Gray's election followed four months of store boycotts in Shelby. A white alderman resigned so a black man could be elected to the vacated seat.

INTERNATIONAL CIVIL RIGHTS CONFERENCE

AMALGAMATED MEAT CUTTERS AND BUTCHER WORKMEN OF NORTH AMERICA, AFL-CIO

REGENCY HYATT HOUSE

ATLANTA, GEORGIA

DECEMBER 1 to 4, 1971

PURPOSE OF CONFERENCE

To direct the attention of our membership to the problems critical to the organizational and political progress of our Union -- those of creating by full respect and consideration for the needs of all groups within our Union, that total unity and solidarity which can make us all strong. In these days of Nixon's maximum attack upon the welfare and organization of all working people, such consolidation is not only desirable, but essential to the whole future as a Union.

To help to build on the basis of justice and mutual respect, the coalition of forces which will guarantee the fighting power of our whole Union. Our success in future bargaining and our prospects for victory in the elections of 1972 deeply depend on this.

To develop a summary and conclusions, with recommendations and resolutions which will be presented to the 1972 International General Convention for consideration by the entire General Session. Equal employment opportunity, minority representation, crime and drug addiction, the plight of our cities, womens' rights and poverty are among those issues offered for down-to-earth discussion by delegates in a series of panels and workshops.

DUTIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES

VICE PRESIDENTS

Serve as Chairman of his respective workshop, and open the session with a general statement regarding the scope of the discussion on the workshop topic.

Introduce the Resource Person(s), the Discussion Leader(s) and the Recorder.

In some cases, questions may arise that would require official clarification as regards the Union. It would be the responsibility of the Chairman to respond to such questions.

Participate in the discussions.

RESOURCE PERSONS

Make the initial presentation, which will serve as the basis for the discussions that follow. The presentation should be informative, as well as serve as a challenge to the group.

In conjunction with the Discussion Leader, assist in creating a lively discussion of the assigned topic.

Some suggestions for action should be brought out either in the initial presentation or during the discussion period.

DISCUSSION LEADERS

Serve primarily as a stimulant to keep the discussion moving and in keeping with the basic theme of the workshop.

Involve as many participants as possible in the discussions. Care must be taken to assure that a few participants do not monopolize the time. Focus attention on those not participating, and try to involve them in the discussion.

Achieve maximum and meaningful participation and, together with Resource Persons, arrive at basic recommendations for the summary report to be presented to the General Session on Friday.

RECORDERS

Record the initial presentations of the Resource Persons. (Tape recorders will be provided for this purpose.)

Record discussion highlights and subsequent recommendations. This will be important in developing the summary report.

GENERAL

Each workshop will have time on Friday morning to make a summary report with recommendations and resolutions to be presented to the General Session on Friday afternoon.

Due to the time period allotted for workshops on Thursday, the Chairmen, Resource Persons, Discussion Leaders and Recorders may elect to remain after the session to draw up a preliminary draft of their respective workshop report. Additional members of the workshop may be assigned to assist with the summation.

During the workshops on Friday, the participants may finalize their respective reports. Since some of the Resource Persons may not be available for Friday also, it is suggested that maximum utilization of their services take place on Thursday.

International Civil Rights Conference

December 1–4, 1971
Atlanta, Georgia

Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America afl/cio

Friends:

What we believe to have been a truly historical event in the life of the 550,000-member Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen took place in Atlanta, December 1-4, 1971.

No doubt you will be interested in the conclusions drawn by the 400 delegates who attended the union's First International Civil Rights Conference.

The Conference dealt with the problems of minorities on a broad basis, recognizing that these questions affect women workers, Puerto Ricans, Chicanos, Indians, as well as Blacks.

The political resolution will have special urgency in this election year.The resolution on minorities within the union is probably the most comprehensive in the entire Labor Movement.

The essence of these resolutions will be submitted for consideration by the union's International Convention.

In connection with your own program feel free to seek the cooperation of Amalgamated locals in your area, or contact us at the International Headquarters, 2800 Sheridan, Chicago, 60657.

The solution of our racial problems to a large degree requires solving the economic and social problems of all Americans. Well paid and steady jobs, quality education and decent housing that everyone can afford, create a foundation for the building of a healthy and integrated society. An important and significant means of achieving this is the ballot box. The mobilization of a progressive majority which could elect a President, a Congress, and state and local officials that will promote policies and enact legislation necessary for achieving these goals is crucial.

Minority trade unionists can play a key and unique role in building a progressive majority for racial equality, economic justice and democratic social change by:

1. Applying their union-learned organizing skills and experience in the community in which they live in developing effective voter registration, voter education and get-out-the-vote campaigns with the support of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America and the national, state and local Committee On Political Education of the AFL-CIO.

2. Participating regularly in local union and local, state and national COPE meetings which make decisions to allocate funds and support candidates; thereby increasing the likelihood that such decisions are consistent with the broad goal of a labor-minority political alliance for racial equality, economic justice and social democracy.

3. Supporting the A. Philip Randolph Institute and other such organizations geared to political action as a means of achieving dignity, self-respect and economic and social well being for all people.

Of major importance in increasing minority participation in politics is the elimination of restrictive, outdated election laws. There is an immediate need for laws covering national, state and local elections establishing permanent, personal registration so that a citizen,

once registered, remains registered.

We urge that national, state and local legislation be executed to:

1. Eliminate any residency requirements for presidential and vice presidential voting. This would have to account for those who change addresses within the present 30-day limitation -- by providing for some means of voting from their new address or an absentee ballot from their previous address. (S.2574 now before Congress annuls registration through post office.)

2. Provide a closing date for registration much nearer to election day than most laws now provide, the date to be determined by the minimum amount of time needed to process new registrations and transfers.

3. Provide door-to-door registration and total canvassing of residences, with the government carrying the primary responsibility for accomplishing them.

4. Eliminate literacy tests and state laws that bar from voting such groups as Indians or those living on federal lands.

5. Establish permanent registration by mail and a simplified means, possibly by mail, of transferring or recording a change of name and change of address. (Again covered by S.2574.)

6. Create a national election commission and state election commissions where there are none, to supervise enrollment and to maintain complete and accurate records of all election returns, as well as all laws pertaining to election jurisdiction.

7. Require local election commissions or agencies to keep up-to-date records of registered voters within their geographic area and a master alphabetical list as well as precinct lists; with these records available to organizations that are recognized as having a legitimate interest in them. These records should be regarded as public information.

8. Equip polling places with the facilities needed to eliminate long waiting periods and keep polling places open throughout the day until at least 9 p.m.

9. Require election and registration commissions to furnish interested parties precinct maps, locators, materials and other devices that are used in the determination of registration status. These should be furnished free, or for a fee not exceeding actual cost.

10. Other ideas added by the workshop and visitor Gene Shepherd were:

(a) Adoption of compulsory voting system in effect in New Zealand and Australia.

(b) Support for the caucus of Black congressmen.

(c) Since labor will be called upon to help the debt-ridden Democrats, and since the kind of delegates to the coming convention in Miami will help determine the Democratic candidate for president, we insist or demand that 25 per cent of delegates in each state come from minority groups -- that is, Blacks, Chicanos, women.

(d) To present the proposal of the State Representative from Memphis, Tennessee, H. Tommy Powell, on tax withholding, which he has presented to us.

COMMENTS

It was the opinion of this panel that there is especially today an identity of interest of labor and minorities in these elections.

We all felt that emphasis had to be on "Dump Nixon in '72." If this is to be done, we must form the broadest coalition of labor and minorities. We of labor hold the greatest responsibility to win such a coalition.

If we are successful in turning out the Black and the Brown vote, we must be sure they are given candidates around whom we can rally a vote.

We must make sure there is a party platform and program that the Blacks, the Browns and the working-class whites can support.

We must impress on COPE and, through COPE, the Democratic Party that they cannot take the labor vote nor the minority vote for granted.

Neither labor nor the minorities will enthusiastically turn out unless its voice is heard and heeded.

This is our task!

This we must do nationally and locally!

This is a MUST task before us!

This workshop panel has carefully considered the progress made by our International Union and the problems we still face in order to fulfill our responsibilities to our members and to the labor movement.

Ours is a diversified union covering many industries; yet, we have found that the problems we all face with respect to the struggle for equality have much in common.

We therefore call upon this historic Civil Rights Conference to project a new and bold program designed to meet the needs of our times in order that our International Union may continue to play its leading role in the labor movement and in the community in this crucial area of human relations.

Such a program would guarantee that:

1. Every local union should conduct a thorough survey of the composition of its membership in order to make certain that every minority group within its jurisdiction is represented and participates on every level of the local's activities. There should be an ongoing system of reports on the status of this situation in the local unions, with copies to the District Directors so that a record of progress can be kept -- and we expect and insist that there will be progress.

2. Each department should conduct an examination of the composition of its local unions to determine whether there are any that have either no minority group workers or token numbers and, where they exist, take the necessary steps to eliminate discriminatory practices.

3. Every contract negotiated by every local union should carry a non-discrimination clause to be strictly enforced, including provision for the posting of jobs and job bidding as a basis of advancement.

within our union

4. Each local union should re-examine its apprenticeship programs to see that they are meeting the needs for which they were intended at the time they were instituted.

5. Each local union should open up the question of the upgrading of workers within the shops in order to insure the expansion of opportunity for minority workers on every level.

6. Every local union should seek ways to influence and affect the hiring patterns followed by the company, especially where such hiring patterns are used to deny employment to workers from minority groups.

WORKSHOP
II
Minority Groups
Within Our Union

7. Every local union should insure adequate representation of minority groups at every level of the operation of the local union, whether in elected or appointed positions, including shop committees, negotiating committees, representation at educational conferences and delegations to the International Conventions.

8. Every local union should utilize all of the facilities of the local union to provide for leadership training of minority group workers in order to remove this obstacle in the path of the development of such workers for leadership.

9. Every local union should explore the use of imaginative ideas and techniques in order to bring about maximum participation of all minorities and all young workers in union activities.

10. Every local union, every district organization and our International Union should examine the composition of its leadership, and take whatever steps are necessary to promote the representation of minority groups in the leadership of the organization.

11. We strongly recommend that future civil rights conferences should include a panel conducted in Spanish so that our local unions will be encouraged to send Hispano-American delegates who will be able to meet together and make their contribution to the realization of our civil rights program.

12. Every local union should examine its practices to see if it is providing materials, publications and contracts in languages other than English if this is necessary to reach the members of the union. Our International publication, the Butcher Workman, should similarly provide material to meet the needs of our multilingual membership.

13. We recognize that the real answer to the problem of employment and advancement for minority workers lies in an expanding economy where jobs and opportunities will be available for all workers, regardless of race, color, nationality or sex -- so that black, brown and white workers will not have to compete with each other for a shrinking number of jobs.

This will require an intensified struggle for full employment and

for expanded job opportunities, with the government playing whatever role is required in order to provide these jobs. It will also require that our union take the leadership in a vigorous campaign to end the senseless and immoral war in Vietnam, and to reorder our national priorities so that the necessary funds will be found to provide jobs for American workers and meet the genuine social and economic needs of our people.

14. We recognize, too, that the problems of minority groups within our union cannot be separated from all the patterns of racism that exist in our society. Thus, the fight against discriminatory hiring patterns is inextricably bound up with segregated and slum housing, with separate and unequal education, and with all the other mechanisms of discrimination that plague our nation.

We call upon our International Union to play its rightful role as a leader of the labor movement in the struggle to remove this blight from our land.

status of women

WHEREAS, women constitute more than 37 per cent of the labor force; and

WHEREAS, there are more than 100,000 women members of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America, AFL-CIO; and

WHEREAS, there are currently 300 charges of sex discrimination lodged against our union; and

WHEREAS, women are loyal, dedicated and militant union members united with men in the struggle for justice and freedom for all working people; and

WHEREAS, this struggle has not yet resulted in freeing women from all economic, political and social oppression; and

WHEREAS, women continue to be denied equal pay and equal employment opportunities and rights; and

WHEREAS, it would greatly strengthen our union if all members, women and men, were encouraged to achieve their full potential on their jobs and in their union; and

WHEREAS, three-fifths of working women are the sole support of their families and over one-third of these women live in abject poverty; and

WHEREAS, more than 12 million working women have children under 18 years of age; and

WHEREAS, the continuation of wars deprives women of their sons and daughters, brothers and husbands, and depletes national resources which should be invested domestically to improve the living standards of all people;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED:

1. That the International Union take immediate steps to insure that women have the opportunity, fully, to participate in the government of our union by serving as officers, executive board members, delegates to AFL-CIO conventions, International representatives and organizers, members of International negotiating committees, and in all other positions.

2. That more women be appointed to the International Civil Rights Committee.

3. That the International Civil Rights Committee regularly meet with representatives of womens' rights organizations to discuss matters of mutual concern for women and to cooperate with such organizations in the efforts to achieve equality for women in true partnership with men.

4. That the International Union convene a biennial International Conference on the role of women in the labor force.

5. That the International Union assign a representative of the Civil Rights Department to work with our International Representatives, our District Directors and local leadership to compile annual statistics on each local union with respect to the sex, race, national origin and age of the membership, which report shall be published in The Butcher Workman.

6. That one page in each monthly issue of The Butcher Workman be dedicated to the progress and promotion of women's rights.

7. That the International Pension Survivor Benefits, Hospitalization, Medical and Dental Programs be reviewed and revised to provide equal treatment of men and women.

8. That the International Constitution and Bylaws and model local bylaws be reviewed and revised to delete reference exclusively to men and replace them with terms referring to men and women alike.

9. That the International Union endorse and support federal legislation to prohibit sex discrimination in housing, public accommodation, education, administration of justice, federally assisted programs, taxation, and the social security system.

10. That the International Union endorse and support the Equal Rights Amendment to the United States Constitution without crippling amendments, and further to promote understanding that the International Union sponsor district conferences to discuss and analyze the impact of the ERA upon the labor force.

11. That the International Union endorse and support state legislation which will extend so-called "protective" laws to men as well as to women and also guarantee voluntary overtime for all workers.

12. That the International Union endorse and support comprehensive federal and state child care legislation which will provide twenty-four hour universal developmental child care, adequately staffed with competent men and women and allowing for parental involvement; that local unions be encouraged to support state and local child care legislation; and that both work to insure inclusion of provisions in collective bargaining agreements requiring employers to establish and maintain quality job site child care centers where suitable.

13. That the International Union endorse and support legislation which will vest cease-and-desist powers in the EEOC; but that we do not endorse provisions transferring jurisdiction of the

Office of Federal Contract Compliance to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and prohibiting maintenance of class action lawsuits under Title VII.

14. That the International Union and its locals continue to work for higher minimum wage and broader coverage of minimum wage laws.

15. Because women, employed or unemployed, have been deprived of adequate and equal job training and development of job skills, women are frequently unable to find, retain or achieve good paying employment positions, a fact which frequently has forced women out of the job market and on to welfare. Therefore, the International Union should take immediate steps to promote and sponsor job training and retraining programs for women.

16. That the International Union give special consideration and support to women in poverty, and encourage local unions to participate in and cooperate with organizations seeking to alleviate the burdens of women in poverty, such as Welfare Rights Organization, Operation Breadbasket, and Mothers in Poverty.

17. That the International Union and its locals give special consideration and support for qualified women seeking political office.

18. That the International Union appoint a full-time International Representative who is aware of and sensitive to the special needs, concerns and problems of women, to work full time with the Civil Rights Department to promote the interest of women.

19. That the International Union direct the local unions to police the hiring policies of employers and to recruit women to apply for job vacancies, with particular emphasis on companies which employ only men.

20. That the International Union direct its local unions to give special and immediate attention to sex discrimination grievances in order to attempt to resolve these grievances locally without necessitating governmental action or intervention.

21. That the International Union encourage its members and employees to participate in and cooperate with womens' rights organizations, such as National Organization for Women (NOW), United Union Women, and Network for Economic Rights.

22. That the International Union review, modify and up-date its collective bargaining agreements to eliminate any vestige of inequality and to make them more reflective of the modern needs of women.

23. That the International Union continue to work to bring an end to war, particularly war in Indochina.

24. That this resolution be presented to the International Executive Board for its consideration and action, and also to the International Convention of 1972 for its consideration and action.

25. Mr. Chairman, finally, we commend the International Civil Rights Department for calling this very urgent conference which provided to each of us the opportunity to share information and opinions and to express our feelings about the matters so crucial to our women in our society and in our nation.

This workshop panel covered a wide range of problems in its discussions. There was agreement that the current economic and political situation poses grave threats to all minorities. Repressive legislation, the impact of imports and illegal immigration on established wage economic and social factors

structures and job security, as well as the total Robin Hood-in-reverse economic policies of the Nixon Administration, were all recognized as special dangers to minority groups.

Recognizing the vast range of discrimination and deprival suffered by black, brown and other minorities, this workshop proposes for the consideration of the International Union and all affiliated local unions specific action along the following lines:

1. Intensified political action including voter registration drives, full support of COPE and campaigns of political education aimed for victory in the elections of 1972 and the defeat of Nixon and those in government associated with his policies.

2. Development as a major political issue, of demands for full employment, with the government responsible to provide job opportunities and assume the role of employer-of-last-resort wherever private initiative fails to meet this responsibility.

3. Increased legislative activity by all local unions, including letter-writing campaigns to Congress on such issues as the $2.00 minimum wage, and opposition to the Rehnquist appointment to the Supreme Court.

4. Cooperation with all community groups seeking to expand and protect equal employment opportunity for minority groups.

5. Full assistance to all valid projects seeking to provide economic and social factors improved housing, medical care, public services and cultural opportunity for minority groups.

6. Special cooperation for community action against drug addiction, with local union action to seek out and to find help for members or their families who face such problems.

7. Full endorsement to the leadership offered by our Union on behalf of all labor in fighting the vicious and inequitable wage-price policies of the Nixon Administration.

8. Local union action in defense of the poor and the unemployed, including opposition to such cuts in relief benefits as attempted by the States of Nevada, California and Illinois.

9. Realistic action to meet the problems of crime by attacking its causes and seeking just, honest and impartial enforcement of the law in line with community needs and rights.

10. Special attention shall be applied to the rising flood of imports, which is seriously affecting jobs in many sections of the union.

11. Particular efforts to be made by all local unions to integrate returning servicemen into the national work force.

WHEREAS, members of minority groups in our nation live in conditions which typically cause crime, poverty, unemployment, high concentration in inner city areas, overcrowded and dilapidated housing, defective and inadequate educational, recreational and other community services; and

WHEREAS, our penal system has uniformly failed in its mission of rehabilitation, failed to treat prisoners as human beings who are to be prepared for return to useful life in society; but instead has subjected them to senseless harshness, has isolated them from society and family, assigned them to inactivity or to meaningless tasks, brutalized them by primitive and punitive techniques, including physical abuse and solitary confinement, eventually to release them without support, assistance or guidance, thus creating a vicious cycle which promotes recidivism, pushes minor offenders toward more serious crimes, increases rather than reduces the volume of crime in our society; and

WHEREAS, it is the minorities and the poor who are the major victims upon whom crimes are perpetrated; and

WHEREAS, the agencies responsible for administration of our system of law enforcement -- the police, the courts and the penal system -- are afflicted by the same racism which the Kerner Commission has stated to be characteristic of our society, so that minorities and the poor are more likely than any other segment of our society to be subjected to police harassment and brutality, more likely to be arrested, more likely to be denied bail or be unable to raise bail, more likely to be convicted, likely to receive a heavier sentence, and constitute a disproportionately larger segment of the prison population; and

WHEREAS, the large body of civil rights legislation which we have fought so hard to achieve for the protection of minorities and for the elimination of some of the causes of excessive poverty among minorities by attacking discrimination in employment, housing, education and voting rights have been ineffectively enforced and, in the Nixon Administration, have been subjected to obstruction and heel-dragging; and

WHEREAS, the 1971 Report of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission has stated that "the great promise of the civil rights laws, Executive Orders, and judicial decisions of the 1950's and 1960's have not been realized"; and

WHEREAS, in other areas of law, in their status as tenants, as debtors, as consumers, as persons entitled to benefits under social security and welfare legislation, people of the minorities and the poor are subjected to denials of their legal and constitutional rights and are unable, because of ignorance or inadequate guidance and representation, to enforce their rights; and

WHEREAS, in all aspects of their contact with the law, minorities and the poor are disadvantaged and victimized by their inability to secure effective, competent legal assistance and representation; present systems of public defenders, court-assigned lawyers in criminal cases, volunteer services by some lawyers, and even the best efforts of various legal defense organizations now trying to serve minority groups, do not scratch the surface of the need for legal advice and guidance in the minority communities, and for representation in courts and before administrative agencies, if the language of equality before the law is to have any meaning:

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED:

1. That while our civil rights program must continue to include demands for strengthening and enforcement of civil rights laws against discrimination in employment, housing, education, voting rights, and other areas to which the civil rights movement has directed national attention, it is now necessary to broaden our program so as to cover the full area of equality and justice before the law.

2. We condemn the failure and refusal of the Nixon Administration to enforce existing civil rights legislation, its failure and refusal to exercise its power to withhold federal funds; its powers under federal contracting procedures; its powers with respect to location of federal facilities in order to defeat discriminatory practices in education and employment. We condemn the Administration's efforts to obstruct court enforcement of school desegregation, the Administration's efforts to prevent enactment of more effective enforcement procedures for equal employment, and we support legislation to give the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission power to issue orders enforceable in court.

3. We urge that our locals, our International Union and the labor movement in their political action, in their legislative activity and in their community relationships, should throw full support behind a program for equal justice, which should include:

(a) Demand for the requirement of police education and training in human relations and constitutional rights; for minority representation on police forces; for civilian review procedures and other programs to improve relations between police and community; and for effective enforcement of stated police policies against brutality and harassment.

(b) Demand for review of arrest and bail procedures to protect against long periods of detention without bail; to permit release on personal recognizance or on reasonable bail as quickly as possible; and demand for improvement of court procedures and attitudes to assure proper representation on juries, fair trials, and equal sentencing.

(c) Demand for reform of the penal system, to include: employment of prisoners in useful work which includes training for jobs upon release; establishment of decent minimum pay standards for prisoners' work; establishment of decent and humane conditions of life in prison, including decent food, medical and dental care, access to reading material, opportunity to receive visits from family, and an end to the unconscionable practice of locating prisoners in remote towns far from the prisoner's family and friends; protection of the legal rights of prisoners, including due process of law within the prison operation; guidance, aid, job location, advice and other assistance in qualifying for parole; continuing aid and guidance after release, including help in finding a job, financial support through unemployment insurance or other means until a job can be found, and protection against discrimination and exploitation by employers; representation of minority groups in the prison guard staff, and education and training of guards in human relations, constitutional rights, and in the rehabilitation objective of imprisonment.

We urge the elimination of laws which discriminate against persons who have served time in prison and which disqualify them for various jobs, and we urge legislation to forbid discrimination against persons who have paid their debt to society and are seeking to live a decent life.

(d) Support of organizations of tenants, consumers, and welfare recipients in their efforts to protect the legal rights of minorities and the poor.

(e) Demand for publicly funded legal defense organizations to provide adequate legal advice and guidance and legal representations to minorities and the poor in civil and criminal cases and before courts and other governmental agencies.

4. We urge that our organizations do much more than pass resolutions and make declarations of principle on these matters. In addition to implementation by political and legislative action, we urge that our local bodies organize visits to penal institutions, observe police and courtroom operations, contact welfare agencies and legal assistance offices in direct discussion of their procedures, and otherwise act directly to make the community aware of the problems of minorities before the law, and to organize the community in support of necessary reform.

WHEREAS, we realize that in American life today there are many misunderstandings and misconceptions about various groups making up our society; and

and misconceptions can lead to strife, group hatred, and the denial of rights; and

WHEREAS, such misunderstandings and misconceptions appear between minority and majority groups and between various minority groups; and

WHEREAS, such misunderstandings and misconceptions are found even in our own union and among our members; and

WHEREAS, we cannot build a united and strong union as long as these factors exist, nor can we build a just and peaceful society without better understanding and greatly reduced group prejudice:

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, that the members of the National Civil Rights Conference of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America, AFL-CIO, urge all delegates, the national union and all local unions to work for the eradication of prejudice, and for the ending of misunderstandings and misconceptions between all groups that make up our membership and American society; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that we seek more information about minority groups in our midst, and that we encourage the development of information and programs which will reduce intergroup misunderstanding; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that our International Union and its local unions dedicate resources to achieve the purposes of this resolution toward the end that our organization become a model union which works toward a society that accepts individuals as persons to be respected, which can honor and enjoy cultural differences, but which will accord equality of treatment and respect to all people regardless of racial, religious or ethnic backgrounds.

Dear Emory:

This letter is to acknowledge not only the copy of the pamphlet, "Know Your Rights," which you sent to me recently, but also to thank you for having entered --- last July --- a complimentary subscription to "New South." I appreciate both of these items.

We are about to start some training of brand new staff people --- or, to be more precise, people who we hope will materialize into staff people. We perhaps shall be able to use either one or both of the items in our work. Since we shall be doing quite a bit of work in the area of civil rights, if you have other material which might be useful, we certainly would appreciate samples of it. I do not know now what the character of our participants will be: highly sophisticated or otherwise. Any documents which occur to you will be, therefore, worthy of our perusal.

I have yet to make it to Atlanta, but I have not forgotten the commitment made to you (and myself) to spend some time with you when I do.

Best regards.

Sincerely and fraternally yours,

Dear Mrs. Miller:

Recently I sent to you 25 copies of our pamphlet, "Know Your Rights". Enclosed is a copy of the November, 1966 issue of the American Federationist which I am sure you have already seen. It occured to me that this issue might be of some use to you as well. I gave the magazine a wide distribution in the South and have extra copies to which you would be welcomed if they are not available to you in Washington.

Also enclosed is a copy of Ray Munts' article on "Wages, Insurance and Growth," which deals thoughtfully with problems of unemployment compensation and especially as they relate to the South. Again, I could let you have copies of this reprint.

In a few weeks I hope to have kits prepared which can be used for local organizations interested in a minimum wage enforcement campaign. At least here in the South we are finding that a number of institutions within AFSCME's jurisdiction need attention regarding minimum wage compliance.

Two final things. One is a list of publications for your consideration. The other is to simply suggest that if I can be of further assistance regarding materials, resource persons in the South, or if my own experience working broadly with unions, civil rights groups, and community organizations in the South would be of use, please do not hesitate to call on me.

Elwood Taub knows who I am. Also, Don Slaiman in the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department and Walter Davis in the Education Department both know me and the Southern Regional Council.

Dear Mr. Via:

I am sorry that it is so late for me to acknowledge your letter of February 27. It was received when we were already in the throes of the class sessions of our training program. These lasted through the end of March. Now that the trainees are getting their field experience, there is time to catch up.

The pamphlet, "Know Your Rights", we used in class in connection with Don Slaiman's session on Civil Rights. Incidentally, Don had never seen the pamphlet and was much interested. I didn't have an extra copy so you might send him one.

The November, 1966 Federationist was used as assigned reading. Since I have a close relationship with the Editor, being married to him, I was aware of the material and agree with you that it was worthwhile.

The Ray Munts' article didn't really connect with the subjects we were teaching. But I am very interested in seeing a copy of the kit you are preparing on minimum wage compliance. We are quite concerned with the problem in the South.

Thank you very much for your interest and your assistance. If our training program is to be repeated, we shall surely be contacting you earlier.

Jesse Epps, key Memphis figure, named assistant to Jerry Wurf

Jesse Epps, a key figure in the successful strike of sanitationmen in Memphis in 1968 and coordinator of the Good Friday memorial march for Dr. Martin Luther King in April of this year, has been named assistant to SCME President Jerry Wurf.

Epps was serving as International representative during the sanitation strike for equity and dignity that brought Dr. King to Memphis where he was murdered.

The son of a sharecropper at Clarksdale, in the bayou country of Mississippi, Epps is one of 15 children.

Epps worked at the General Electric Co. plant at Syracuse, N.Y., while going to Syracuse University. He was graduated with a degree in sociology. Meanwhile, he became, successively, a union steward, chief steward, local officer and a staff member of the International Union of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO.

While with the union he became concerned with the movement of untrained black people into the cities.

"I realized that all the rural areas were doing was transplanting their problems to the urban areas," he said. "For instance, the Chicago ghetto is just North Mississippi. If the problem was to be resolved it had to be stopped at the starting point."

Fight for literacy. In 1959 he instituted a fund drive to establish 18 literacy centers in Mississippi.

Epps joined SCME in 1967 and has been organizing in the southern states since.

Epps and his wife, Clotee, live at Clarksdale with their three children. He is an elder in the Seventh Day Adventist Church there.

Florida local will sue to gain bargaining

Miami

Unless good-faith collective bargaining occurs, Miami Municipal Employees Local 1563 will go to court to get an order forcing the city commission and city manager to negotiate on wages, hours, working conditions and fringe benefits, according to Lee Tafel, SCME International vice president and Council 22 director.

General employees of the city have been getting a run-around on realistic negotiations despite a Florida Supreme Court decision that public employees have that right, Tafel said.

Workers have struck twice to bring the city to the bargaining table. They returned each time with the assurance from City Manager Melvin Reese that the city would bargain with the union.

In sympathy. The current struggle began in mid-May when the city's sanitation workers—who are not members of the union—struck for higher wages. The Parks and Streets Department employees, members of Local 1563, walked out in sympathy.

The sanitation men ended their two-day strike after being promised a 30-cent-hourly wage increase. The general employees went back when the commissioners promised they would bargain and would pay employees for the two missed days.

The city manager met with Southern Florida District Council 22 Representative Ed Prata and a Local 1563 bargaining committee, but took the position that the law forbade bargaining on wages and hours.

New strike vote. The committee reported developments back to the local members, who voted to walk out again to emphasize their demands.

This time the strike lasted three days. The members returned to work when they were assured that a case before the Florida Supreme Court would soon decide the legality of public employee bargaining—and that the city would abide by the decision.

Strike exception. The Florida Supreme Court held that "with the exception of [illegible]ight to strike, public employees [illegible]ame rights of collective bargaining as are granted private employees."

Armed with that argument, the Local 1563 bargaining committee confronted the city manager again. But he obtained an opinion from the city attorney that the supreme court ruling meant bargaining on everything except wages and hours.

STRIKING Miami city employees parade in front of the Miami City Hall in a demonstration that added emphasis to their demands for true collective bargaining by the city. They returned to work after the city promised to enter into good-faith negotiations. So far the promise has not been fulfilled.

The copies of "Know Your Rights" arrived right on time. Many thanks as I know they will be useful for the staff interns we are now training. Larry Rogin was right when he said that you could and would help us with this problem.

Dear Dr. Via:

I was certainly heartening to observe the wide participation of labor, education and civic organizations in the Regional Conference of the American Federation of Teachers in Atlanta on March 26th. The contribution of your organization was appreciated by me because even as a northerner I've been aware of the influence of your work.

This summer the American Federation of Teachers in cooperation with the Southern Christian Leadership Conference will strive to establish Freedom Schools in the south. The success of this venture will to a great extent depend upon the cooperation we will receive from local groups. It is because of your liberal record in the past that I am asking you to seriously note the materials I am enclosing about the general nature of our summer project. I shall be in touch with you to share your reactions and suggestions on this endeavor.

Until then I am,

Yours truly,

Richard Parrish

An Introduction to the

Freedom School Project

American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO

The dramatic growth and accomplishments of the Freedom Schools in the South during the last two years have made them a major motivating force in the civil rights movement.

The Freedom School project is now directed by the American Federation of Teachers (A.F.T.) and is financed by a nation-wide A.F.T. sponsored campaign for contributions.

One of the unique features of the A.F.T. Freedom School Project, and also one of the greatest factors in its success, is the living arrangements of Freedom School teachers. Obviously, the ten dollars per week provided to help defray living cost is completely inadequate for independent subsistence. Like the Peace Corps, the major aim of the project is to bring people together in "in depth" living situations which commit them mutually to the task of educating people. Unlike the Peace Corps, Freedom School teachers live in the homes of the local people who share what they have with them in every way possible. Both the teachers-guests and the parents-hosts declare that the experiences of mutual dependence and mutual respect resulting from these relationships are some of the most enlightening and gratifying aspects of the project.

The conditions under which teachers live provide the best way to understand the conditions, traditions, race relations and education problems of the South. However, preparatory orientation sessions are conducted before the teachers are sent to their teaching locations. These orientation sessions must be attended by all teachers sponsored by the A.F.T. to provide the vital insights absolutely necessary for success and safety in the South.

The preparatory orientation provides the teachers with insights into all civil rights activities going on and planned in the areas. The teachers meet key people working in all civil rights activities and gain first-hand information from the leaders via lectures and group discussions. The teachers also get their introduction to the problems of the local areas by the local Negro people themselves. Thus both teachers and students begin their experiences in sharing at the very outset of the program and continue throughout the duration of the summer. The teachers also evaluate one another's attitudes and conceptions of what their roles are and should be in the unique setting of the freedom schools and the purposes for which they are intended by the people who attend them, the people who organize them and those who conduct them.

INFORMATION

The American Federation of Teachers Freedom School Project is a voluntary service arrangement. The funds raised will provide a minimum amount of assistance to the volunteers in terms of (1) reimbursement of transportation cost to and from the southern area of participation, (2) school supplies, (3) small reimbursement for those who use their own transportation in the freedom school area and (4) a small stipend for subsistence to each volunteer. Thus the volunteer must be prepared to live under circumstances much different than that to which they are accustomed.

The only money that will be available for use in the Freedom School project will be that which is raised in the spring and summer A.F.T. Freedom School Fund Drive. This money will be used to provide round-trip bus fare for the A.F.T. sponsored teachers who volunteer to serve in the project. The teachers may use whatever mode of transportation they wish; however, reimbursement for transportation cost will be the equivalent of round-trip bus fare in every case.

School supplies will be purchased with some of the money raised in the fund drive. The kinds and amount of materials will be determined by the availability of the requested materials and the teacher making the request. Teachers must be prepared to exercise their "creative genius and ingenuity" in providing themselves and their students with teaching aids at a minimum cost.

Those teachers who drive their own cars into the South and use them for transportation while serving the Freedom Schools will be provided a small stipend for gasoline purchases. Transportation is a crucial problem for volunteers in the South. However car pools provide a major solution in all areas where Freedom Schools are held. The local citizens involved in civil rights work and who own some kind of vehicle always help as much as possible.

In past summers occasionally a Freedom School teacher has been arrested. We must face the fact that this harrassment tactic may well be stepped up as the diehard segregationists realize the effectiveness of the Freedom School Program in building voter registration and participation in other civil rights activities.

Our teachers therefore are asked to arrange for some one "back home" to be responsible for producing bond money immediately upon request, in the sum of at least two hundred dollars ($200.00), in case of emergency. All such "harrassment" cases are invariably reversed by higher courts and the money returned.

Mrs. Thelma F. Davis, President

Washington, D.C.

We in the American Federation of Teachers are proud of our affiliation with the AFL-CIO. All teachers should applaud the record of organized labor in support of teachers in their efforts to achieve improved status and better schools.

Publications and materials of the NEA and its affiliated organizations on the other hand, have shown a strong anti-labor bias. Derogatory statements have been made about organized labor, and teachers have been strongly criticized for joining and supporting the AFT.

In order to place before teachers a fair statement of the opposing views of the AFT and the NEA on affiliation with the AFL-CIO we hereby are making available to you two pages of the April issue of the American Teacher Magazine in which you can state your views. We will use equal space in the same issue in order to state our views.

Deadline for copy is February 20. May we please hear from you at your earliest convenience?

Your telegram was considered by the Executive Committee of the Department of Classroom Teachers of the National Education Association in a meeting on Saturday, February 13. The Executive Committee is in full accord with the official position of the National Education Association as stated in a resolution passed by its Representative Assembly of over 6000 delegates representing the 50 states, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico, which reads as follows:

The (National Education) Association...declares its intention to continue its friendly and cooperative relations with the American labor movement, as it shall with all other segments of American society, in an atmosphere of mutual respect while also retaining its identity as an independent professional organization.

Why Teachers Need the AFL-CIO

By DAVID SELDEN*

THE AMERICAN Federation of Teachers is one of 130 nationwide unions affiliated with the AFL-CIO. Affiliation is maintained for the following reasons:

1. The interests of teachers are closely allied with those of other organized employees.

2. Only organized labor has consistently fought for increased financial support for schools at every level of government.

3. Teachers need a source of strength from outside the educational establishment.

4. The assistance of the AFL-CIO and the Industrial Union Department of the AFL-CIO (IUD) in organizing and in winning collective bargaining rights enables the AFT to make gains for teachers.

5. The AFL-CIO maintains valuable research and legislative services in Washington, D.C. and in every state capital.

6. Affiliation offers teachers an opportunity to provide leadership outside the educational system.

7. The broad social program of the AFL-CIO merits teacher support.

8. Affiliation gives teachers the right and opportunity to help determine AFL-CIO policy and action.

Voluntary Cooperation, Basis of the AFL-CIO

Outsiders tend to think of the AFL-CIO as a mysterious, monolithic army. Actually, the AFL-CIO is a confederation of unions cooperating voluntarily to provide support and services which they could not provide as well by acting separately. The unions in the AFL-CIO are held together by mutual need and common interest—not compulsion.

Each union governs itself. Each helps support the extensive activities of the AFL-CIO by contributing 7 cents a month on behalf of each of its members. Individuals are members of their own unions only and the AFL-CIO does not have a master membership list. It can exercise no control whatever over any member of the affiliated unions.

Mr. Selden

The AFL-CIO is governed by its biennial conventions, to which each union, including the AFT, sends delegates. The convention sets broad policy guidelines and elects the officers and the Executive Board. On the state level and in most communities there are AFL-CIO bodies in which local unions from the various occupations cooperate, and here again the AFT is represented.

Affiliation with state and local AFL-CIO bodies is entirely voluntary. As is the case with the national AFL-CIO, per capita payments are only a few pennies a month.

American Federation of Teachers Democracy

The government of the AFT is simple and direct and well understood by its members—unlike the complex bureaucracy of the NEA and the state associations. One becomes an AFT member by joining the local union in his school district. New locals are required to have a minimum of 10 members. The local is designed to act as a negotiating agent with local school authorities and to provide benefits and services for its members.

AFT state federations are based on the local units. They are lobbying, legislative, and organizing mechanisms. They set their own dues and pursue their own statewide programs.

The national AFT is governed by its annual convention. Its Executive Council, composed of a president and 16 vice-presidents, is elected every two years by the convention. The convention lays down broad policy guidelines and the Executive Council meets several times a year to carry on the continuing functions of the union within these policies. Day-to-day business is handled by the AFT President and the staff.

The NEA Fosters Anti-Union Prejudices

In spite of the democratic practices of the AFT and most unions, in one collective bargaining campaign after another the NEA has been harping on anti-labor themes. The NEA writers, public relations men, and other staff members, distort the truth to play on what they assume to be an underlying anti-labor attitude among teachers.

Although they know better, they deliberately picture the labor movement as anti-teacher, anti-education, anti-democratic, and anti-intellectual.

A favorite NEA propaganda device is presenting a sweeping generalization based on an atypical example. The fact that one AFT local has a modified union shop agreement is used to imply that all AFT locals favor such an arrangement, despite the fact that the AFT strongly supports freedom for teachers to join the organizations of their choice.

The long and vigorous support of tax measures for education by organized labor is ignored, and the action of a few local and state AFL-CIO bodies who opposed specific regressive and unfair taxes is stressed. The spectre of "union control" is dangled before teachers by reference to "labor bosses." A clause in the preamble of the constitution of the New York City AFT Local, which lists cooperation with organized labor as a purpose of the organization, is quoted in large newspaper ads to "prove" that the AFT is subservient to organized labor.

This propaganda is scarcely worth noting. It reveals more about the fears, prejudices, and isolation of the attacker than it does about the practices of the attacked.

How About an "Independent Union"?

Several arguments against AFL-CIO affiliation do need discussion, however. Most of these revolve around the idea of reforming the NEA and its satellite associations into a sort of "independent union."

Suppose it were possible to place control of the associations in the hands of the teachers, this line runs. Suppose that the NEA Department of Classroom Teachers were to be given real autonomy and democratic structure, with membership in teacher-controlled local associations as the foundation.

Suppose these local units were the basis of each state association, giving the state classroom teachers association freedom from control by supervisors and administrators. Would AFL-CIO affiliation still be desirable?

If such a supposition has any possibility of realization, it is because of the mounting pressure of the AFT. If, as some observers hold, "the NEA is becoming more like a union," this uncertain drift toward collective bargaining (professional negotiations) and a no-contract—no-work policy (sanctions) has come as a result of the AFT threat to the NEA corporate empire.

It is no secret that the AFT would not have been able to offer this challenge without the assistance of the AFL-CIO, and particularly the IUD. Teachers owe their present opportunity for liberation to the labor movement.

Unionism Strengthens Professionalism; AFL-CIO Strengthens Unionism

Those who talk about transforming the NEA into an "independent union" usually take the American Medical Association as their model, even though the NEA as presently constituted would not qualify. The AMA is an organization of equals, the NEA is built on acceptance of the inequality of its members. However, if it were possible to develop an all-inclusive classroom teacher organization, AFL-CIO affiliation would still be feasible and desirable.

The organized doctors have become isolated from the rest of society; teachers should avoid this error.

More fundamental, however, doctors in private practice are self-employed, and they do not feel the need for one of the prime functions of a union, collective bargaining. In contrast, teachers are employed in groups.

The most effective way for teachers to establish professional salaries, working conditions, status, and other conditions of employment is through direct negotiation with the boards of education which employ them.

When it comes to collective bargaining, who knows more about it and who stands more committed to its principles than the AFL-CIO? Organized teachers need all the assistance they can get when they bargain with their employers, just like other organized groups of employees.

Employees who work for the public also gain a support dividend from AFL-CIO affiliation which does not pertain to union members working in private industry. When the local central labor body endorses teacher demands, the superintendent and the board know that the proposals have public support.

It might be argued that the unions should support teachers' demands anyway, without affiliation. Perhaps. But affiliaton gives teachers a direct access to the leadership in other unions. Occasionally, even union teachers are unable to gain labor support, but unaffiliated organizations are far less successful. Affiliation makes it possible to work with other unions on a day by day basis to build cooperation. Thus teachers, through the AFT, share in the formulation of AFL-CIO policy at all levels.

Interests of Employees Served by the AFL-CIO

A common argument against affiliation with the AFL-CIO is that teachers "should not align themselves with a single segment of society." This view is apparently based on the assumption that the AFL-CIO is engaged in some sort of class war in which teachers should maintain strict neutrality.

If those who espouse the "segment of society" concept are suggesting that teachers would inject bias into their teaching, this insinuation is as demeaning to the professional competence of teachers as it is without foundation in fact. This same accusation was made against newspaper reporters when they organized, and against printers before them, yet no one would accuse American newspapers of pro-labor bias.

In actuality, many professional groups — newspaper reporters, radio and television broadcasters, engineers, social workers, musicians, actors — have found AFL-CIO affiliation beneficial. They occupy varying degrees of status in our society, but as employees they have recognized that they can do more by cooperating with each other than they can through isolated associations.

Improvements in social security, medicare, Federal Aid to Education, improvements in laws affecting collective bargaining, tax reforms — the whole broad spectrum of the AFL-CIO program — are designed to help those who work for wages and salaries.

AFL-CIO Affiliation Helps Avoid Strikes

One other misconception needs to be cleared up. No AFL-CIO official can call a strike of teachers, nor exercise any control over AFT policy in any way. Yet, those who set the association "line" continue to insist that AFL-CIO affiliation somehow leads to strikes.

They even state, contrary to fact, that when one AFL-CIO union strikes, all AFL-CIO unions go out. But, as they should know, when a union calls a strike, it takes full responsibility. Other unions decide as a matter of conscience whether they will cross the picket line.

No teacher has ever been penalized in any way for either honoring or crossing a non-teacher picket line, just as no non-teacher has ever been penalized for honoring or crossing a teacher picket line.

While AFL-CIO leaders can never call teacher strikes, they often help settle them. They use their position of trust in the community and among the teachers to bring both parties back to the bargaining table and then to insist upon "good faith negotiations." Even more often, local AFL-CIO leaders use their good offices to win improved teaching conditions that remove the need to strike. Perhaps this is why there have been fewer strikes by union-affiliated teachers than by those without affiliation.

The AFT Spirit

The AFT spirit is spreading. Organized teachers have everything to gain from AFL-CIO affiliation. Anything an unaffiliated organization can do, that same organization could do better with the added advantage of affiliation with the AFL-CIO.

Of all people, teachers should seek the widest possible contact with the rest of organized society.

Dr. Emory Via, Director of Labor Program
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Dr. Via:

I was certainly heartening to observe the wide participation of labor, education and civic organizations in the Regional Conference of the American Federation of Teachers in Atlanta on March 26th. The contribution of your organization was appreciated by me because even as a northerner I've been aware of the influence of your work.

This summer the American Federation of Teachers in cooperation with the Southern Christian Leadership Conference will strive to establish Freedom Schools in the south. The success of this venture will to a great extent depend upon the cooperation we will receive from local groups. It is because of your liberal record in the past that I am asking you to seriously note the materials I am enclosing about the general nature of our summer project. I shall be in touch with you to share your reactions and suggestions on this endeavor.

Until then I am,

Yours truly,

Richard Parrish

Dear Friends:

I have placed several long distance calls and had lengthy conversations but cannot turn up any firm information regarding the labor education end of the AFT Freedom Schools Project in Jackson. Smolen was surveying the possibilities but I have had no call back from him. My guess is that there will not be anything special to do in this project this summer.

My own schedule is such that it seems unlikely that I will have any program activity of interest to you in the latter part of August. As I indicated over the phone this is greatly complicated by my own absence from the office during that time.

I am hopeful that sometime in the future that I will have programs in which you would like to be involved and that you will be available. Please let me know if your fall schedules reveal any likely slack times when you could be made available to us.

Thanks again for taking the initiative in getting in touch with me. Best personal wishes to you both.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director

Dear Mr. Reese:

Under separate cover I am sending you a number of our publications as promised. On a few of them you will want to note the date of publicationsas one indication why a given subject is being covered.

The small descriptive leaflet on the Council itself is also a bit out of date. Our director is Mr. Paul Anthony.

You might want to look over the enclosed publications list and let me know if you feel that anything would be of special use to you.

LABOR EDUCATION PROGRAM
AFT FREEDOM SCHOOLS PROJECT

May 31, 1966

Dear Labor Educator:

This letter is an appeal to labor educators to join in a summer project, a labor education program in an American Federation of Teachers' Freedom School in Jackson, Mississippi. The Freedom Schools are a nationwide AFT project which seeks volunteers to teach in the South during the summer. Originally conceived as a plan to teach deprived children basic citizen rights, the Freedom School is being broadened this year for the first time to include a Labor Education Program. The purpose of this Labor Education Program is to give groups of southern workers and unemployed persons, mostly Negroes, some understanding of and background in the problems and history of the American labor movement.

You are asked to teach this summer in the AFT Freedom School's Labor Education Program. You are asked to contribute your time and your efforts, to supply your own materials and such equipment as you may need to teach more effectively. It is my understanding that the Freedom School cannot supply you with a salary or expenses because there is simply no money available. The School will provide students who are eager to learn what you have to teach them.

Those labor educators who are able and willing to do so are urged to come to Jackson, Mississippi, for a minimum of one week during the period July 1 through August 31, 1966. As far as courses or curricula are concerned, the broadest possible lattitude will be afforded you as a teacher. The School is interested in husband-and-wife teams both in the Labor Education Program and in the Freedom School itself. My wife and I plan to spend two weeks in Jackson in July -- I expect to teach a labor education course while Phyllis will teach a course in more effective reading.

The AFT will hold orientation sessions in five cities for Freedom School teachers; however, it is not absolutely necessary for a labor educator to attend an orientation session. These sessions are currently scheduled as follows: Chicago - June 4; Detroit - June 10,11; Minneapolis - June 17, 18; San Francisco - June 21, 22; New York City - June 24, 25. For further information about these orientation sessions contact the AFT office in the city referred to or Arthur Reese, the AFT Freedom Schools coordinator, whose address is given below.

Send New South

For further information regarding the Labor Education Program at the Jackson Freedom School, contact me or Mr. Arthur Reese, Executive Director, AFT Freedom Schools Project, 8845 Puritan Avenue, Detroit, Michigan, 48238; telephone TO 8 - 7138, area code 313. Mr. Reese and I will be glad to answer any questions you may have about the Freedom School or its Labor Education Program and to work with you regarding the part you wish to play in it. Mr. Reese tells me that after June 28, his address will be 507½ N. Farish, Jackson, Mississippi.

An Introduction to the

Freedom School Project

American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO

The dramatic growth and accomplishments of the Freedom Schools in the South during the last two years have made them a major motivating force in the civil rights movement.

The Freedom School project is now directed by the American Federation of Teachers (A.F.T.) and is financed by a nation-wide A.F.T. sponsored campaign for contributions.

One of the unique features of the A.F.T. Freedom School Project, and also one of the greatest factors in its success, is the living arrangements of Freedom School teachers. Obviously, the ten dollars per week provided to help defray living cost is completely inadequate for independent subsistence. Like the Peace Corps, the major aim of the project is to bring people together in "in depth" living situations which commit them mutually to the task of educating people. Unlike the Peace Corps, Freedom School teachers live in the homes of the local people who share what they have with them in every way possible. Both the teachers-guests and the parents-hosts declare that the experiences of mutual dependence and mutual respect resulting from these relationships are some of the most enlightening and gratifying aspects of the project.

The conditions under which teachers live provide the best way to understand the conditions, traditions, race relations and education problems of the South. However, preparatory orientation sessions are conducted before the teachers are sent to their teaching locations. These orientation sessions must be attended by all teachers sponsored by the A.F.T. to provide the vital insights absolutely necessary for success and safety in the South.

The preparatory orientation provides the teachers with insights into all civil rights activities going on and planned in the areas. The teachers meet key people working in all civil rights activities and gain first-hand information from the leaders via lectures and group discussions. The teachers also get their introduction to the problems of the local areas by the local Negro people themselves. Thus both teachers and students begin their experiences in sharing at the very outset of the program and continue throughout the duration of the summer. The teachers also evaluate one another's attitudes and conceptions of what their roles are and should be in the unique setting of the freedom schools and the purposes for which they are intended by the people who attend them, the people who organize them and those who conduct them.

INFORMATION

The American Federation of Teachers Freedom School Project is a voluntary service arrangement. The funds raised will provide a minimum amount of assistance to the volunteers in terms of (1) reimbursement of transportation cost to and from the southern area of participation, (2) school supplies, (3) small reimbursement for those who use their own transportation in the freedom school area and (4) a small stipend for subsistence to each volunteer. Thus the volunteer must be prepared to live under circumstances much different than that to which they are accustomed.

The only money that will be available for use in the Freedom School project will be that which is raised in the spring and summer A.F.T. Freedom School Fund Drive. This money will be used to provide round-trip bus fare for the A.F.T. sponsored teachers who volunteer to serve in the project. The teachers may use whatever mode of transportation they wish; however, reimbursement for transportation cost will be the equivalent of round-trip bus fare in every case.

School supplies will be purchased with some of the money raised in the fund drive. The kinds and amount of materials will be determined by the availability of the requested materials and the teacher making the request. Teachers must be prepared to exercise their "creative genius and ingenuity" in providing themselves and their students with teaching aids at a minimum cost.

Those teachers who drive their own cars into the South and use them for transportation while serving the Freedom Schools will be provided a small stipend for gasoline purchases. Transportation is a crucial problem for volunteers in the South. However car pools provide a major solution in all areas where Freedom Schools are held. The local citizens involved in civil rights work and who own some kind of vehicle always help as much as possible.

In past summers occasionally a Freedom School teacher has been arrested. We must face the fact that this harrassment tactic may well be stepped up as the diehard segregationists realize the effectiveness of the Freedom School Program in building voter registration and participation in other civil rights activities.

Our teachers therefore are asked to arrange for some one "back home" to be responsible for producing bond money immediately upon request, in the sum of at least two hundred dollars ($200.00), in case of emergency. All such "harrassment" cases are invariably reversed by higher courts and the money returned.

Dear Sirs:

Would you send some general information of the AFT to:

Mrs. James Zorn
185 South Finley Street
Athens, Georgia.

Mrs. Zorn feels that a union is needed in her city. I have talked with her only briefly, but her interest in a teacher organization appears sincere and she seemingly accepts the need for fairness in racial matters.

It is my understanding that she is at present teaching only part-time.

You may indicate to Mrs. Zorn that I requested that the materials be sent to her.

Dear Committee Member,

We were sorry so few of our committee could attend the Local 189 Conference, January 7th and 8th. Enclosed is a short report which will bring you up to date on the History of Labor Education discussion. The Committee has been asked to proceed as far as possible until our yearly conference when we will report our progress.

Our committee is scattered far and wide, and therefore our contacts can be as wide as labor education itself. Be a leader wherever you are - "talk history" and help us get the total labor education story. Who started it and when in your local - your state - your international? What labor leaders do you know who attended Brookwood, a W.P.A. Labor Education Teacher training center? Where are the records? Don't be afraid of duplicating information. Probe and then send us all you can using as far as possible the enclosed questionnaire. I'll send more questionnaires if you need them. Information in any form will help those of us here in Washington who will try to put the story together based on your contributions. Our next meeting of Washington members will be in three weeks. Could we hear from you before then?

CONFERENCE ON 1966 PROJECTS

A F T - L O C A L 1 8 9

January 7 & 8, 1966

Short report form the Committee on Labor Education History

The committee met the evening of January 7th to consider for report to the full conference the next day, suggestions received by mail from nine members in response to a questionnaire sent out previously. Its purpose was to ascertain the interest among Local 189 members, today's leaders in Labor Education, in material about the pioneer period, the records of which are being deposited as archives, thus becoming available for historic study. These materials are labeled for identification and placed with State Historical Societies, University Archives, libraries or other institutions providing this perpetual service.

The return questionnaires yielded three good suggestions for 1966 projects on the history of Labor Education. These were presented to the full conference as follows:

Suggestion No. I from Alice Cook, Cornell.
That tape recorded interviews be arranged with our pioneer leaders to have them tell their own stories.

Suggestion No. II from Hilda Smith & Eleanor Coit.

That as a first step a list be gathered of the materials now available in these historical records telling the story of many of the pioneer efforts of resident and summer schools, institutes, city labor colleges, etc. Some analytic writing will be done by Eleanor Coit, Hilda Smith and others to add to the value of these archives but more evaluation and analysis needs to be added in the future.

The need for such a list was expressed by Larry Rogin who believes it is important for unions and universities who are doing labor education programs to determine what materials should be saved and where they should be sent. He said the matter would be discussed at the gathering of the AFL-CIO conference of Labor Education Directors, March 30-31, 1966.

Suggestion No. III from Dorothy Oko, Librarian.

That she would prepare a bibliography on Labor Education related to the story of its historic development and the available written material.

Two other suggestions received but not presented to the 189 Conference:

1 - Chester Graham who knows rural programs asked that we include joint educational activities of farmers and workers.

2 - Orlie Pell emphasized the need for further analysis of areas in which labor education has made its greatest contributions: its subject matter content, its methods, teacher training, etc. For this writers acquainted with this program should be found.

Discussion by the conference group showed real interests in "our history to date." Several volunteered to become committee members. It was voted that the committee be asked to continue along all three lines, concentrating first on the historical materials -- what they cover, where they are; and showing the development of labor education at least up to the Workers Education Bill introduced into Congress in 1948.

Submitted by

Ernestine R. Friedmann

A longer report including conference discussions and descriptions of materials prepared for archives by Hilda Smith and Eleanor Coit is on file for future committee use.

Smith, Ruth Stack, Ruth Wiencek, Jim Williams, Mildred Kiefer Wurf, William Lang, Joe Suarez, Earl Kipp, Jacob Schilt, Steve Max, Art Kane, Wynn Newman, Marie Olean, Zilla Daniels, Olga Corey.

Friday evening

President Wolfe welcomed everyone to the meeting and opened the session at 8:00 p.m. He introduced several visitors.

PURPOSE: The pre-conference preparations and purpose of the meeting were explained by Hoagy Young. Growing out of the experience of last winter's meeting, these sessions were planned to:

1. Serve as a climax to the work of project committee planning and a beginning to this year's activity.

2. To provide for at least one meaningful face-to-face meeting of the Executive Board and the committees recognizing that we have a widely dispersed membership.

3. To handle as much of the Board's business for the year as possible.

In planning the meeting, the Board established 13 project committees to work on a wide variety of matters of concern to people in our field. These committees were of different types -- speculative -- committees exploring new ideas such as pensions, the new generation, occupation forecast and support of AFT, the history of labor education, materials for international labor education.

evaluative -- reviewing existing programs of the local internship, Viewpoints, salary survey and newsletter.

housekeeping -- dues and constitution and organizing.

This meeting is planned as a meeting and not a conference. We are meeting to discuss what to do about our mutual problems. There are several organizations in our field. Local 189, however, is the organization of individuals -- as opposed to the others which represent programs. Some of the problems we will discuss will deal with our situation as employees. Others deal with the development of our field. As in any skilled trade or profession, those who work in the field have a special contribution to make to the development of the field. And as the field grow in employment if not programs, there will be an increasing role for Local 189 in serving as an arena for exchange of ideas under the director level.

The agenda (reproduced on the opposite page) was adopted.

Mil Lieberthal explained the St. Johns University strike of the AFT and members were requested to sign the petition in support of the strike. A motion was made to donate $100 to the strike.

There being no further preliminaries, each project committee went to work for the balance of the evening and met on their proposals for the next day.

Saturday morning

President Wolfe opened the meeting at 10 a.m.

PROCEDURE -- It was decided that all members present would vote on all motions. This would be considered the sense of the meeting, and a recommendation to the Board. Although a quorum of the Board was present, all members of the Board would be sent a summary of the discussion and be polled.

FINANCIAL REPORT

The report for 1965 was presented by Hoagy Young:

Balance was down to $892.67 from $2,352.47 at the beginning of '65.

Income was up -- $4,731.00 for the year -- $1,400 more than '64.

But expenditures were up even more -- $6,190.80 -- $2,400 more than '64.

This was the result of the programs developed since the present dues were established in 1963:
- Internship ($1,500 in '65)
- Newsletter
- Directory
- Chapter per capita
- Salary Survey

Added to these activities, the AFT per capita increase of 25¢ (costing Local 189 about $1,000) will boost our expenditures to $7,500 by 1967.

The local needs to consider the ways of strengthening its dues structure.

Alternatives are being considered by the Dues & Constitution Committee.

The financail report was accepted.

CHAPTER REPORTS

West Virginia: John MacKenzie reported that the new chapter established in 1965 has six members and is -- affiliated with the West Virginia Labor Federation, AFL-CIO.
assisting fledgling AFT locals in the state.
assisting the AAUP on the West Virginia campus.

IUE: Allan Silberman, newly-elected chairman of the unit and new member of the 189 Board, reported for the chapter:
completed negotiations for its second contract with the IUE.
established the concept of educational leave for study and leave of absence.
currently in a dispute with the OEIU over two people who want to transfer into the AFT unit.
Marilyn Rose is vice chairman and Carl Sampsell, Treasurer.

Chicago: Stan Rosen reported that the chapter has held two meetings and is planning future activity.

Washington: The chapter is going to hold election of officers at a meeting later in January and hear from Norm Hill on the current developments in the civil rights movement.

Hoagy Young introduced the problem of regularly putting aside money for the defense of members engaged in collective bargaining. It came up last summer when there was discussion of arbitration in the IUE unit. Collective bargaining dues are set at $48 with this problem in mind. His original proposal was that $2 of each collective bargaining dues be regularly added to the defense fund for the defense of collective bargaining by members. The defense fund now is $1,100. However, it was felt that the dues of all members should participate.

MOTION #1 - THAT 15¢ OF EACH MONTHLY DUES BE REGULARLY ADDED TO THE LOCAL 189 DEFENSE FUND. -- adopted.

PENSION COMMITTEE: E.K. Kuhns (Chairman); Robert Rodden (Correspondent); Otto Pragan (Executive Board Member); Art Carstens, W.J. Elkuss, Bill Kemsley, Earl Kipp, Sam Mitchell, Robert Ozanne, Gerel Rubien, Brendan Sextion, Haines Turner, Donald Wasserman, Members.

Doug Kuhns and Earl Kipp reported for the committee on pension needs and possibilities. He said that many people in our field as a result of working on several jobs with vested plans end up with no pension at all. The committee had given some preliminary consideration to the types of pension plans that might be possible.

The committee felt that any plan we develop should be a good one -- that is it should provide for an adequate pension -- something like 2% of annual earnings per month. It should also be flexible due to frequent job changes of members between unions, universities, and government.

They pointed out that the new IUD National Small Group Pension has a lot to recomment it for Local 189. The group only needs to be one in order to join into the plan. Any plan of ours should also provide for either employer contribution or employee, depending on the employment situation.

MOTION # 2 -- THAT THE PENSION COMMITTEE PREPARE A PROPOSAL FOR 189 MEMBERS TO BE PRESENTED TO THE EXECUTIVE BOARD. --adopted.

Brother Kipp pointed out that the AFT is thinking about a sheltered anuity which he felt was not the right sort for AFT. It was also moved that the committee notify the AFT of their views on this error so that AFT may have this information in framing their plan.

At 12:00 the group adjourned for lunch. Following lunch we heard a talk by Jean Fairfax, National Director for Southern Programs for the Friends Service Committee. In a talk entitled "School Integration: Little Conflict and Less Integration," she described the continuing need for the civil rights movement to press newly formed government agencies on a wide variety of civil rights fronts. She pointed out that while a great is being done to inform the public about the new Medicare Bill, very little has been done to inform negro citizens about their rights under the new legislation. Possibly citizen pressure will always be necessary regardless of whatever legislation is passed.

Saturday afternoon

LABOR EDUCATION HISTORY COMMITTEE: Ernestine Friedman (Chairman); Hilda W. Smith (Correspondent); Joe Mire (Executive Board Member); Marie Algor, Jack Barbash, Harriet Berger, George W. Brooks, Jacqueline Brophy, Eleanor Coit, Alice H. Cook, Chester Graham, Brownie Lee Jones, Joyce L. Kornbluh, Dorothy Kuhn Oko, Orlie Pell, Philip Taft, Fannie Turkel, Charles C. Webber, Members.

Ernestine Friedman, Hilda Smith and Eleanor Coit reported for the Committee. The committee felt that it is important now to take steps to preserve the records of the past not only for our use today but for the study of people in the future. There are many worthwhile educational developments in this historical material. Three ideas were advanced by members of the committee:

1. Alice Cook suggested that tape recorded interviews be arranged with persons familiar with the early history of the movement.
2. Hilda Smith suggested that collections of the existing historical material be listed with a brief description of their contents, dates covered, where they are deposited. Many materials are now stored although widely scattered.
3. Dorothy Oko said she would be willing to work with Local 189 on a bibliography of material in education. While there are many listings of material, a comphrensive bibliography does not exist.

MOTION #3 - THAT THE LABOR HISTORY COMMITTEE WORK TO EFFECT THESE RECOMMENDATIONS. -- adopted.

President Wolfe also added at the request of the committee Ruth Wiencek, Jack MacKenzie and Joan Kilpatrick to the group.

LABOR EDUCATION & THE NEW GENERATION COMMITTEE: Jim Williams (Chairman); Robert Lieberman (Correspondent); Norris L. Tibbetts, Jr. (Executive Board Member); William L. Abbot, Thomas Hayden, Peter Irons, Hy Kornbluh, Stephen Max, Paula Paley, Glenn M. Parker, Robert Sass, David Selden, Members.

Jim Williams and Steve Max reported for the committee. The generation that has been born since 1944 will soon represent about half of the U.S. population. Most of this group has little experience with the labor movement. Some of it is active in other movements, and has firsthand experience in mass movements. However, most of this activity has brought it into little contact with labor leadership. One area of important activity is on campus. The committee felt that Student AFT Chapters and discussions with other student groups about econmic conditions affecting their careers would be important. One of the things about college students is that they are thinking carefully in terms of their whole lifetime. Another area of activity is the involvement of students in organizing and other union activities. The IUE has had some success with this. Another phase of the problem is to systematically include in labor education activities and consider for work in the field younger people with experiences similar to labor if not with the labor movement. It was felt that Local 189 should make some provision for student memberships.

It was decided that this committee should prepare a report for the Board on the ways Local 189 can usefully work with interested members of the new generation.

INTERNSHIP & JOB CLEARINGHOUSE OPPORTUNITIES COMMITTEE: Marjorie Rachlin (Chairman); Jacqueline Kienzle (Correspondent & Executive Board Member); Albert J. Humza and Mark Starr (Executive Board Members); Helmut J. Golatz, Mary P. Heinemann, D.W. Murphy, Oliver A. Peterson, Lawrence Rogin, Irving Rosenstein, Anthony Sinicropi, Mil Lieberthal, Members.

Marjorie Rachlin & Irv Rosenstein reported on suggestions by the committee in connection with the 1966 internship. The committee felt that the internship should be repeated in 1966. In addition to the activities last year, the programming of the internship should include some experience with local union education activity and a greater opportunity for teaching during the summer. There needs to be a special effort made to work with the intern at schools he attends. Brother Rosenstein also suggested there needs to be a clear definition of the goals of the internship both for the local and for the benefit of the intern. Last year the internship was announced to all AFT locals, all city central and state federations, to 189 members and to the labor press. The scholarship itself cost $800, about $200 was spent for travel expenses and about $600 was spent for printing, publicity and postage. Sister Rachlin felt this counldn't be cut. Some members have suggested the use of foundation funds. However, the committee feels the value of the program is in doing it ourselves. It is a program in which all of us participate financially and many members of the local last year were involved in working with the intern. With a foundation involvement, the experience accumulated would be shifted out of the local and extraneous goals might be introduced.

MOTION #4 - THAT LOCAL 189 SPONSOR AN INTERNSHIP DURING 1966. --adopted.

Jackie Kienzle reported on another concern of the committee for a job clearninghouse. One of the by-products of the internship has been a list of people interested in union education work. There are a wide variety of jobs available today and one of the problems and probably the most difficult problem of job placement in the field is that with bringing in new people. While nothing elaborate is possible, it was felt that Local 189 could do something by accummulating names of people interested in the field and the opportunities available. Members of the local could supply information both of job openings and persons looking.

MOTION #5 - THAT THE INTERNSHIP COMMITTEE BEGIN TO DEVELOP A JOB CLEARNINGHOUSE. --adopted.

MATERIALS FOR INTERNATIONAL LABOR EDUCATION COMMITTEE: Joe Glazer (Chairman); Miles E. Galvin (Correspondent); Agnes Douty (Executive Board Member); Valerio Agostinone, Daniel Benedict, Carleton H. Faler, Michael J. Gross, Emil G. Lindahl, Jack London, Anthony Luchek, Thomas V. Jkller, Thomas L. O'Connor, John W. Piercey, Members.

Joe Glazer, Ben Segal, and Mildred Wurf reported for the committee. One of the needs the committee listed was for EDUCATIONAL materials in international affairs especially on timely situations such as Viet Nam, Santo Domingo, etc. The committee drew the distinction between educational materials and what might be called agitational. That is, the need for materials which briefly describe the background of the situation, the views of different groups in the U.S. on the situation, maps showing the location of the place, resources of the country, etc. Workers tend to be bombarded by propaganda but have little opportunity to have propaganda systematically sorted out.

The committee also pointed to the need for wider knowledge of materials that are available. There should be a brief selective bibliography of pamphlets for example. Or taking one issue, there should be a labor educator's guide to pamphlets, films, maps, and other sources of information which could be used.

Another need which has traditionally been with us is for a good fact sheet on international labor organizations.

It was decided that Brother Glazer should prepare these suggestions in writing for the Executive Board and Viewpoints.

CIRCULATION OF EDUCATION MATERIAL: As a result of the previous report there was a general disucssion of continuing need for circulating education materials to 189 members. Hoagy Young mentioned that any 189 member who has materials that would be of interest to all members can obtain a set of stickers from him for mailing purposes. We usually have an extra set available most of the time. Another way is if there is a group who would like to send materials to 189 members, they could use the Directory.

Sunday morning

The Sunday session was opened with a breakfast talk by Bill Kircher, AFL-CIO Director of Organization on "Education's Role in Organizing Today." He described some of the experiments they have been trying in the organizing field such as the use of volunteers in Iowa, the leaflet of the month program, use of students and younger people, and the city area campaigns. He listed some of the needs in the field including the need for studies of the reasons for success and unsuccess in organizing. Actually very little is known about this.

ANNUAL MEETING ARRANGEMENTS:

President Wolfe opened the business part of the meeting at 11:30 a.m. He reported on the plans for the meeting of the union education directors and the ULEA meeting to be held in Detroit, March 30-31, April 1st, at the Whitier Hotel. He recommended that we hold our annual meeting there on Thursday evening, March 31st.

MOTION #6 - THAT THE NEXT 189 ANNUAL MEETING BE HELD THURSDAY EVENING, MARCH 31, IN DETROIT, MICHIGAN. --adopted.

It was explained that the pattern with these spring meetings has been to hold one in Washington and the next one in some other town, and to alternate between being in Washington and out of Washington.

President Wolfe presented the following assignments for the annual meeting:

Nominations Committee: Ruth Wiencek, Marvin Rogoff and Jack MacKenzie.

Election Committee (to receive and count the ballots): Fred Schmidt, Chairman, Art Carstens, Mary Heinemann, Paul Bullock and other L.A. members.

Annual Meeting Arrangements: Oscar Paskal and other Detroit members.

Resolutions Committee (for AFT Convention to be acted on at the annual meeting): Russ Allen, Chairman and Brendan Sexton

These committee nominations were accepted.

EXHIBIT OF LABOR EDUCATION: The idea was introduced for holding a labor education exhibit at the time of the spring meeting. Such an exhibit would accept materials in various categories such as posters, lesson plans, films, flip charts, fact sheets, recruiting materials, stories about labor education in the labor press, and articles about labor education.

MOTION #7 - THAT LOCAL 189 SPONSOR AN EXHIBIT OF LABOR EDUCATION AT THE SPRING MEETING. --adopted.

President Wolfe designated Stuart Brock as Chairman, Lee Stanley, Mil Lieberthal, Terry Connors, and Hoagy Young for this committee. This recommendation was accepted.

WINTER MEETING: Joan Kilpatrick raised the discussion of the general pattern of our meetings. It was her feeling that this meeting is very helpful and it should be made a regular event. It should also be made a membership meeting. In other words, we should have in December a two-day membership conference. Then the spring meeting would be an evening meeting.

MOTION #8 - THAT THE EXECUTIVE BOARD RECOMMEND TO THE ANNUAL MEETING THAT A TWO-DAY MEMBERSHIP CONFERENCE BE HELD IN WASHINGTON SOMETIME IN DECEMBER. --adopted.

DUES & CONSTITUTION COMMITTEE: Marvin Rogoff (Chairman); Carl Sampsell (Correspondent); Thomas Cosgrove, Mrs. Lee Stanley, John R. MacKenzie, Theodore Ruhig (Executive Board Members); Russell W. Allen, George T. Guernsey, Eric Polisar, C.J. Slanicka, Byrl A. Whitney, Alfred Wickman, Members.

Marvin Rogoff reported for the committee on several recommendations:

1. The committee felt that a student membership would be a good idea, to interest people in the field. The AFT Constitution provides for a student membership with a 25¢ per capita.

MOTION #9 - THAT THE EXECUTIVE BOARD RECOMMEND TO THE ANNUAL MEETING A STUDENT MEMBERSHIP WITH A DUES OF 40¢ A MONTH AND THAT THE COMMITTEE PREPARE A SEPARATE ARTICLE FOR THE CONSTITUTION ON THIS MEMBERSHIP WHICH DEFINES THE MEANING OF STUDENT AND OUTLINES THEIR RIGHTS IN THE ORGANIZATION UNDER THIS PROVISION. --adopted.

2. Brother Rogoff reported on the dues problem situation. The present dues structure brings in about $4500.00 a year. With the new per capita tax and programs which we have added the last few years, we will need an annual income of $7500.00.

   The committee considered three ways of revising the dues providing enough money:

   a flat rate dues
   an arrangement similar to the present dues with some modifications

   The committee presented the following table which showed the amount of funds provided by each of the three proposals:

It was the committee's recommendation that a modification of the present structure be followed with categories going up to $14,000 and rates adequate to provide for the necessary finances.

MOTION #10 - THAT THE EXECUTIVE BOARD RECOMMEND THE FOLLOWING CHANGES IN THE CONSTITUTION: (see language below) -- adopted.

The new language is indicated here by all caps;
Language deleted is indicated by crossing out.

3. The committee reviewed briefly several other changes for the Constitution which they will prepare in writing and present to the Executive Board.

EXECUTIVE BOARD MEETING: Because of the Constitution and other matters it was felt the executive board should plan to meet on the morning of March 30th at Detroit to go over these preparations.

SALARY SURVEY COMMITTEE: Owen A. Tapper (Chairman); Chris Piluras (Correspondent); James E. Wolfe (Executive Board Member); Chic St. Crox, Charles H. Davis, John J. Flagler, Lois Gray, Wm. O. Kuhl, Wm. A. Lang, Wm. H. McCabe, Robert E. McMillen, Joyce D. Miller, Mrs. Gloria Riordan, Allen D. Silberman, Sally Parker Swerbilov, A. J. Wann, Members.

Chris Piluras reported for the committee. There was some discussion of the value of the survey. There was a feeling that it probably could be drawn up differently in order to present important information. The survey should include job descriptions, salary figures, fringe benefits, per diem, automobile arrangements, travel and bonus, leave of absence and other provisions. Jack MacKenzie reported that the salary survey was quite valuable to them at West Virginia.

MOTION #11 - THAT THE SALARY SURVEY BE CONDUCTED AGAIN DURING 1966.

SUPPORT AFT COMMITTEE: Don Vial (Chairman); Robert A. Steffen (Correspondent); Connie Kopelov (Executive Board Member); Henry T. Becker, Robert B. Campbell, Francis J. Duggan, J. David Edelstein, John Jefferson, Bud Hutchinson, Wells Keddie, Irving A. Landa, Clifford B. Miller, Leo F. Nahstoll, Chas. A. Orr, Fred Schmidt, John Sessions, Albert Shanker, Stanton Smith, Richard Springer, Nancy P. Vanderbeek, Members.

Connie Kopelov reported for the committee on ways in which an association between 189 members and other AFT members can be productive:

1. Bringing AFT people in contact with the labor movement as a whole, helping in testimony, in familiarizing the rest of the labor movement with teachers organization, and providing materials and assistance for local AFT leaders.

2. Teachers as a labor education source -- teachers can be a useful resource for teaching, speakers in enriching labor education.

3. Teaching unionism in the schools -- the need that teachers have for resources on current issues and labor in terms of films, pamphlets and encouragement should flow to some extent from 189 members.

There were a great many suggestions from the members of this committee and Connie is going to pull these together and prepare a detailed report.

MOTION #12 -- THAT THE EXECUTIVE BOARD ORGANIZE MEMBERS OF 189 TO VISIT AFT LOCAL OFFICERS IN THEIR AREA AND INQUIRE FROM THEM WHAT THEIR NEEDS ARE IN LABOR EDUCATION MATERIALS OR INFORMATION ABOUT THE LABOR MOVEMENT, AND THAT 189 MEMBERS REPORT BACK TO THE COMMITTEE ON THEIR FINDINGS. -- adopted.

ORGANIZING COMMITTEE: Oscar Paskal (Chairman); George Daitsman (Correspondent); Mark Brown, Ben Segal (Executive Board Members); Glen Armstrong, Gilbert A. Cornfield, Ronald Donovan, Martin Duffy, Beatrice M. Kersten, John E. Olsen, Ronald J. Peters, Ralph Reuther, Emory Via, Ruther Zubrensky, Members.

Mark Brown reported that based on a tentative survey we have 110 of 146-7 union educators who do not belong to our local. Also 46 of the 108 university labor educators do not belong. He felt that another round of contacts to nonmembers similar to what was done last year would be very helpful. Last year's program was very successful and brought in 70 new members. The organization of who is to contact whom should be done in advance of the annual meeting in April so that everybody can be given an assignment.

MOTION #13 -- THAT GEORGE DAITSMAN AND OSCAR PASKAL ORGANIZE THE LIST OF NONMEMBERS SO THAT EACH NONMEMBER WILL BE CONTACTED AT THE ANNUAL MEETING IN APRIL AND THAT ALL 189 MEMBERS WILL BE GIVEN ASSIGNMENTS AT THAT TIME. --adopted.

OCCUPATION FORECAST COMMITTEE: Joan G. Kilpatrick (Chairman & Exec. Bd. Member); Caleb Sandifer (Correspondent); Duane Beeler, George V. Boyle, Paul Bullock,Members.

Joan Kilpatrick reported for the committee as follows:

1. Effect of the Great Society Programs -- not only do they create an immediate demand for labor education skills but the longrange demand will even be greater.
2. Traditional labor education jobs -- most programs, especially university, are projecting increase in staff.
3. Sources of entrance to the "trade" -- here is the real problem an increasing number of people entering who lack a union background or civil rights or other action background.
4. Training -- this calls for a stepped up program to provide people in the field with the necessary skills. Our processes for doing this today are virtually nonexistent.

She then discussed possibilities for training -- internships, NILE, union and university cooperation, etc.

Everyone present congratulated Joan on an extremely interesting report and urged that she prepare her notes in writing to make them available to the Executive Board and for Viewpoints.

LABOR EDUCATION VIEWPOINTS & HANDBOOK COMMITTEE: Mil Lieberthal (Chairman and Executive Board Member); Ruth Wiencek (Correspondent); Richard W. Humphries, Holgate Young (Executive Board Members); John Carroll, Frank L. Collins, Raymond J. DeSantis, Edward A. Disch, E. Keith Dix, Robert K. Elsner, Henry Wm. Fries, Walter O. Froh, Paul R. Hempel, Forrest Heckman, Members.

Mil Lieberthal reported for the committee that they have continued to work on the handbook begun last year by beginning to assign 189 members to write pieces of the

The 44th Annual Meeting was called together at 8:30 p.m. by President Wolfe. Role call of officers: Wolfe, Brock, Humza, Young, Kienzle, Suarez, Kopelov, Lieberthal, Mire, MacKenzie, Pragan and Ruhig were present.

The minutes of last year's meeting were read by Stan Rosen and were accepted.

FINANCIAL REPORT --

Hoagy Young presented the Financial Report:

WHY THE EXECUTIVE BOARD IS RECOMMENDING A CHANGE IN DUES

This report looks back over 10 years of Local 189 activity. It is appropriate that we do this to make the decisions we have to consider at this time, and since this is my last term of office in Local 189, I would like to give a longer view of our work.

One might ask, looking around this room, why there are several organizations in such a small field as ours. Weren't many of the same people that are here tonight as 189 members in meetings this afternoon of other organizations?

ORGANIZATIONS IN UNION EDUCATION

Local 189 is the only organization in our field which brings together union educators as individuals. The ULEA is an organization of programs, and the AFL-CIO meetings are meetings of representatives of programs.

There is a special role for each of these organizations. Local 189 concerns itself with our problems as employees and with our contribution to the growth of the field. In any skilled trade or profession, the workers in a field have a special contribution to make to its development. We in Local 189 feel that the future of education in the labor movement should not lie exclusively in the hands of the directors of labor education -- mostly but not exclusively.

TEN YEARS AGO AND TODAY

Over the past ten years the contributions of Local 189 has changed because of changes which have taken place in the times. Ten years ago we stood in the twilight of the passing era -- the end of labor's heroic era. Today we stand in the early light of another era.

WHAT LOCAL 189 IS DOING

Local 189 has developed a number of activities to change with the times --

We have learned about collective bargaining in the labor movement through our members in the IUE Unit. They have broken new ground in their contract this year with leave of absence. We are much indebted to the leadership of Ruth Wiencek, Al Silberman, Marilyn Rose, Tom Cosgrove and Jack MacKenzie in this work.

We have established the Defense Fund on a continuing basis by regularly adding 15¢ per month of each member's dues to assure its growth.

We have established the Salary Survey through the work of Stan Rosen, Owen Tapper and Chris Piluras.

On the education side of our work ---

In 1959 we began the publication of Labor Education Viewpoints which many new people coming into our field tell us that it is one of the most helpful sources of information about our work. Its 9 issues number 365 pages of information written by 189 members.

Under the leadership of Mil Lieberthal we have begun to assemble material in Viewpoints for a Handbook on Labor Education. Dan Benedict tells us that work already done on this project has attracted interest in Europe, and we will have some participation there in the Handbook.

Through Stan we now have the Newsletter which won the First Award at last year's AFT Convention.

This year's issue of the Directory has received considerable interest for its brief and clear statement of what union education is and what its practitioners do.

We established our Chapters on a stronger basis, making their support a regular part of the dues. Twenty-five cents of each member's dues goes to their Chapter, if any, and each Chapter has permanent representation on the Executive Board. This year we have two new Chapters functioning and doing interesting projects in West Virginia and Chicago through the work of Jack MacKenzie and Ted Ruhig. One half of our members are covered by these chapters.

We are selecting our second intern this year. Last year thirty 189 members were directly involved in working with Irving Rosenstein during the 8-week program. It is a valuable experience for all of us. Marj. Rachlin and Jackie Kienzie are working on this year's program.

One of the most important developments has been our Winter Meeting. During three days, we came together and seriously worked on our mutual problems. Out of this year's meeting for example came the possibility of a 189 Pension Plan to help those of us who never get ten years in one place, a Labor Education History Project, a discussion on the educational needs of newer trade unionists, closer work with AFT members in areas where we have membership, materials useful in International Affairs, and an interesting look at the future demands for people with labor education skills. This meeting, which involved some 50 of our members, was organized by Stuart Brock and Jim Wolfe.

MORE INCOME NEEDED

I spent some time reviewing the changes in recent years affecting our field, and programs developed by Local 189 because without purpose finances are meaningless. This year the Executive Board had to take a look at these developments because it had to make a recommendation to the membership as to whether or not these programs should be continued. The decision was required in part because of the raise in International per capita tax.

As you can see from the attached Financial Report our present dues structure brings in about $4500 per year. In looking at the picture in the fucure, however, our present program will cost about $7500 per year. This change comes about for two reasons:

1. The AFT is beginning to do the kind of job we all want it to do. At its last Convention, it raised per capita tax from 75¢ to $1.00. The per capita to the AFT was 67¢ at the time our present dues structure was established, so that these changes mean about $1,000 additional cost per year to our Local.

2. Since our present dues structure was established, we have initiated many new activities: The Newsletter, the Directory, the Salary Survey, the per capita to our Chapters which covers about half of our membership, and establishing the Defense Fund with a regular monthly contribution.

The Executive Board felt that all these developments are desirable. And so they asked the Constitution Committee to explore the best ways by which the funds could be raised. The Committee studied several different types of dues and came back with a recommendation which the Executive Board adopted. The Constitution Committee will be presenting this to you later on in the meeting.

LOCAL 189 WILL BE MORE IMPORTANT IN THE FUTURE

In the coming years, the need for a membership organization such as Local 189 will increase. It is clear at this meeting that many labor education agencies are in the process of expanding; many of them doubling in size in the very near future. The number of new entrants to our field will increase.

The need for meaningful contacts within our field below the director level will be more important than they have in the past. I should like to add to the official recommendation of the Executive Board that I think it is vitally necessary for our field to continue to develop the kind of activities that Local 189 has conducted during the past few years. And this will only be possible by adopting the new dues structure.

I should like to express my appreciation for the opportunity to be active in an organization like 189. In the kind of labor movement in which we function today, it has been a most helpful experience.

Motion by Brock, seconded by McAllister to accept the Financial Report. Motion was passed. (Copy of the Financial Report and the Budget for the coming year is inserted on page 4.)

CHAPTER REPORTS

WEST VIRGINIA

Jack McKenzie reported that the Chapter had been active in assisting AFT Locals in the state become active in the state labor movement and has helped establish a Chapter of the AAUP at the University of West Virginia. They're also affiliated with the State and Central Bodies.

CHICAGO

Ted Ruhig reported that President Charles Cogen addressed the March chapter meeting, and the chapter is planning future activities.

WASHINGTON

Marvin Rogoff sent a report to the meeting which told of the Chapter assisting the Organization of D.C. Teachers and the AFT in some of the local poverty projects. The Chapter also was asked to help on the "D.C. Freedom" movement, and continuing contacts with the "new generation".

I.U.E.

Ruth Wiencek reported for Chairman Alan Silberman on the negotiations completed this year for the IUE unit. The new contract provides for raises of $500 to $1,000, provision for educational leave, and other improvements. The Chapter developed a close working relationship with the OEIU and other unions in the IUE.

REPORT FROM THE AFT

Dave Selden, Assistant to President Charles Cogen, reported on the success of the AFT this year in organizing and developing news services to local unions. He indicated that there were challenges ahead and called upon Local 189 members to assist in the continuing task of building an effective and aggressive international union in the education field.

INTERNSHIP

Jackie Kienzle presented the report of the Committee on behalf of the Chairman Marjorie Rachlin:

Last year's intern was Irving Rosenstein, a public school teacher from Philadelphia, very active in the AFT there. He is now back in Philadelphia, and, partly as a result of the internship, he is working part-time for the Philadelphia Board of Education in their labor education program. He promotes and arranges classes for local labor unions, financed by the school system. His wife has taken a part-time job doing educational work for an ILG local. So the Local can feel that in his case one of the purposes of the internship was clearly accomplished -- to get a new person trained -- and employed -- in the field of labor education.

COST

The 1965 program cost about $1500. Of this about $1000 went for the intern ($800 scholarship, rest expenses incl. travel) and about $500 for publicity and administrative expense. The publicity costs may seem high, but one purpose of the internship is to publicize the field of labor education, and so flyers were sent to all AFT locals, all Labor Press Assn. members, city and state central bodies, international unions and university labor programs, plus 189 members. (Mailed about 2500 press releases and flyers to above).

APPLICATIONS

In January the 189 Executive Board approved the 1966 intern program, and so we are now embarked on that. You all received the flyer in the mail. To date we have received fewer requests for applications this year (75 or so compared to 160 last year), and we now have 21 completed applications back. With a deadline of April 1, I guess we will have 35-40 applications, compared to 78 last year. We have a higher proportion of AFT members this year. (Last year we had about 1/3 AFT, 1/3 other union activists, and 1/3 students and miscellaneous). I suspect that the main reason for the drop in applications is that we got poorer publicity in the labor press, particularly the international union papers, for some unexplained reason.

THE PROGRAM

One of the purposes of the internship was to give us a chance to learn something about this sort of training, training for labor education, so I want to report on that. The basic format used last year was satisfactory -- first and last weeks in Washington, four weeks at one university, one week at another university, one week at a union summer school, the Kentucky Labor School. Many 189 members helped make this a success and we want to thank the people at Rutgers, Penn State, Kentucky AFL-CIO, New York and Washington who gave their time to help "educate" the intern.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Because one thing we learned is that "giving time" -- by professionals already in the field -- is essential. The intern needs continual explanation and interpretation of the programs or activities he is observing. Otherwise he doesn't make sense of his observations or he does not even notice significant details and techniques. What kind of atmosphere, for example, do we set on Sunday night at a summer school -- and why? Why are evening programs more formal with more use of speakers? Why does one union have a class or program on such and so while another union ignores this issue? The intern cannot figure much of this out for himself, and we who are practitioners in the field do not realize how much we know and take for granted -- about techniques, about union attitudes, about personal approaches to educational problems.

Secondly, we found out that the intern needs to take part, not just observe, as much as possible. Obviously, this participation must be geared to his skills -- last year's intern had real teaching skills, but an intern from a local industrial-type union might be better suited for legwork and helping with the projector than for teaching. However, our intern's comments, as well as our own reflection, have convinced us that the intern needs to do as much as possible during schools, not just observe all the time. This is a problem for the Committee and for the university (or others) who agree to take the intern, because when you get to "doing" everyone wants to be sure that the intern is really capable, and it takes a lot of time to train him to do things adequately. However, in my opinion, it is crucial to try to find ways to involve the intern -- otherwise he feels frustrated and bored after a week or so. This has to be a work-study program -- on-the-job training in some aspects.

Thirdly, we realized from thinking over last summer that the program we plan must be tailored to the individual intern's background. For example, the average AFT teacher needs to broaden his knowledge of other unions and how they work. A week in a local or regional union office might be very helpful. On the other hand, a person from an industrial union -- a local union President -- will probably need more help on educational techniques than most AFT members. These are just examples, but since we have only one intern a year, we should be able to program for the individual. Nearly every intern, in our opinion, will need to learn more about unions, legislation, and similar content subject matter of labor education.

THIS YEAR

The Committee members, particularly those in D.C., have been trying to assimilate these new learnings and thinking about this summer's program. We expect to send the intern to a university for 3-4 weeks, but the Committee has not yet met to decide which university. We expect to have the intern spend the first and last weeks in D.C. Where else will depend on the intern selected. Possibly a regional union education program, or another shorter university experience will be the answer. In any case, we ask your help and interest if you cross the intern's path this summer -- any time you can give to explain your program or your philosophy of worker's education will be useful.

Summing up, it is clear that we are putting much time and money into training one person. It appears that we can do it all right. It is up to the members to decide whether it is worth it. The original aims of the program were to 1) train a new person for the field 2) learn something about training methods and problems and 3) acquaint more people outside the field with the idea that there is a field of labor education with its own experience. It is on this basis that you really have to judge the Committee's report and consider whether you approve of the program or not.

The report was accepted.

Jackie Kienzle also presented the proposal for a Job Clearinghouse. This idea was accepted.

CONSTITUTION COMMITTEE

Amendments to the Constitution are made by a majority vote at the Annual Meeting and ratified by a majority vote in a referendum. This meeting discussed and prepared these recommendations for the referendum vote. Al Wickman presented the report for the Constitution Committee. The Committee first recommended that Local 189 have a student membership. Brother Wickman presented the following language for the Constitution:

STUDENT MEMBERSHIP

(New Section)

The dues for a member of Local 189 who is a student shall be 40 cents a month. A student shall be defined as an undergraduate or graduate college student currently engaged in workers education as defined by Local 189, a student aspiring to a career in workers education; or a student on leave from college engaged in workers education in the civil rights movement, Peace Corps, VISTA, or in similar organizations or movements. A student member shall enjoy all rights of any other member of Local 189, including joining a chapter, forming a chapter and running for office in his chapter or in Local 189.

The proposal was passed.

The Committee then presented their proposal on change in dues. They presented the table which showed several ways of raising an additional $3500 per year:

by a flat rate dues
by a percentage dues and by modification of our present dues structure.

The Committee favored the latter plan, and presented the Constitutional language to put into effect these changes.

Discussion of the dues structure followed.

Motion by Wiencek to make the dues for members with $12,000 or more salary $5 per month. Motion seconded and passed.

Motion by McAllister seconded by Uphoff to make the dues for members of other AFT locals $1 per month instead of the proposed $2. Motion passed.

The membership then approved the amended dues article for submission to membership referendum.

The new language is indicated here by all caps; Language deleted is indicated by crossing out.

NOMINATING PROCEDURE

A recommendation from the Nominating Committee was read at the meeting:

Marvin Rogoff: As Chairman of the Committee I wish to express some thoughts on the nominating process mandated by the membership.

The Committee was obligated to bring in nomination acceptances from two candidates for each office. This means, in cold turkey, two for president, four for vice president (if you decide, as the Committee did, that we ought to continue to have two vice presidents), two for recording secretary, two for financial secretary, and if you go along with the present arrangement of 12 board members at large, 24 for that office. Of course, being a novice in this activity, I also solicited Mark Starr's approval for nomination as honorary president. In his infinite wisdom, Mark accepted, and chose not to chide me for making an elective office of it - while also including some Esperanto literature along with his acceptance.

Now how does a Committee go about choosing this dual slate, while attempting to secure a balanced list and availing the Local of all the constructive brainpower and manpower within its ranks?

One way is to find the candidate you really want for each office, then convince another to run just to make it look good. That's just the way it stacks up - but this Committee chose not to function that way. It sought, instead, the best possible for each office. That meant putting up four good people for vice president, for example. Should all four accept, two will lose, and the Local will be deprived of their services at or near the level at which they should be functioning.

After all, we could not at the same time put up someone for an executive office and board member at large- "Just in case." We would go wild keeping track of all the permutations and combinations- and the services of the Committee would be lost to the Local for a while (one just can't function too well from within the confines of a mental institution).

Again to lay it on the table, take the case of president. We drew up a list of three good people- Jim Wolfe, Al Humza and Stuart Brock. Any one of the three as president would make the Committee feel proud to be members of Local 189. The reason for three was a simple one. We just could not be sure Jim Wolfe, or for that matter, Al Humza would accept. So you need backup candidates. We don't all live close together, so that sounding out a potential candidate means just a few minutes on a local phone call: quite the opposite, it takes a lot of time to determine where people stand. In short, the Committee wanted the Local to have the services of Humza and Brock (and Wolfe) in the highest and most responsible capacity possible. But all we have succeeded in doing, since only one can win the office, is writing the others out of any other office - unless nominated from the floor of the membership meeting, and then the merry-go-round starts all over.

Without this explanation, members might also conclude we were not pleased with the services this past year of Brock and Humza as vice presidents. Why should one reach this conclusion? We all know a president who has done well, should be asked to run again; and that under these conditions he will almost automatically be re-elected- that's how organizations happen to run, Local 189 not excluded.

So it would seem that Humza and Brock are being thrown to the wolves, and the poor Nominating Committee takes the rap; while Humza and Brock actually couldn't rate any higher in the esteem of their colleagues and fellow trade unionists on the Committee.

Of course, the names of offices used as examples aren't important; the same conclusions could be drawn for any of the others.

I make this suggestion (I believe the others on the Committee will agree). I believe organizational needs and democratic processes can best be served by instructing the Nominating Committee to bring in the best single slate of nominees. A different minded group within the Local could bring in its own, and finally membership action on the floor of the annual meeting is always available.

I take no particular pride in this suggestion; there may be one or more better ways of accomplishing the same ends. Whatever they are, I believe such ways of handling the nomination procedure should replace the present one.

Fraternally,

Marvin Rogoff, Chairman
Nominating Committee

Motion made by Ruth Wiencek, seconded by Kienzle, that the Resolution requiring the selection of two candidates for each office be repealed. Motion was tabled for discussion at the winter meeting.

RESOLUTIONS

Joan Kilpatrick Suarez submitted the following resolutions as chairman of the committee:

SPECIAL COPE PROJECT

Whereas, Local 189 member Art Carstens is running for Congress in the 27th District of California, and whereas Local 189 desires to participate meaningfully in the 1966 Congressional elections.

Therefore, be it resolved that we appoint Jim Wolfe to coordinate a campaign to solicit the membership of L 189 for COPE contributions in support of the candidacy of Art Carstens and that this money be gathered and presented to Carstens in an appropriate ceremony.

Motion offered by Jim Blackburn, Seconded by Levine. Passed.

(Brother Carstens acknowledged donation made by 189 members and sends word everyone should run for Congress once in their life! In the primary June 7th he lost by about 1,000 votes.)

SEMI-ANNUAL MEETING

Growth in both programs and personnel in the field of labor education has resulted in growth in membership in Local #189, AFT, during the past several years. Growth has made communication and exchange of ideas between labor educators on a regular basis increasingly important.

Local #189 is now beginning to seek ways of helping to fill this void. As a beginning step, a system of "task force" committees were established by the Executive Board to examine both internal operations and the broader aspects of improving the field of labor education. These committees, composed of a sizeable number of Local #189, met during the Winter Executive Board meeting in Washington, D.C. in January, 1966. The results of this new committee system were exciting and pointed up the possibilities of fruitfully expanding the membership activities of Local #189.

THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, the annual membership meeting of Local #189 now be expanded in the following manner:

1. An annual membership business meeting to be held in conjunction with the annual meeting of the AFL-CIO Education Directors and the ULEA in the Spring of the year.
2. An Annual membership weekend meeting to be held during the winter in conjunction with the annual Executive Board meeting of Local #189, said workshop to continue the exploration of new and improved "ideas" for the field of labor education.

Passed.

AFT CONFERENCE

WHEREAS, the AFT is sponsoring a conference on "Racism and the Schools" December 10, 1966 in Washington, D.C. (This program will be headed by Professor John Hope Franklin, University of Chicago, and Arthur Reese, AFT Freedom Schools Director. Other labor and civil rights leaders will participate).

LOCAL 189, therefore, goes on record in support of the purposes of this conference and offers its assistance in publicity, recruitment and administration of the conference,

AND, that the Washington Chapter be notified to make contact with the AFT on this matter.

Passed.

SUPPORT OF AFT ADMINISTRATION

During the past two years the American Federation of Teachers under the leadership of President Charles Cogen, has made outstanding progress. Total membership has increased by more than 20%. Publications have been improved in content and format. Research facilities have been expanded and revitalized. State federations have been strengthened. Teacher collective bargaining has advanced.

The relationship between the AFT and other unions has been deepened and made more meaningful. A sound and imaginative financial program has provided a firm underpinning for expanded AFT activity, therefore be it

RESOLVED that Local 189 supports the program of the incumbent administration and that local delegates to the 1966 AFT Convention consider this support when voting in the AFT presidential election.

Passed.

TEACHER-UNION EDUCATOR COOPERATION

WHEREAS, organizing is a major concern of the AFT; and

WHEREAS, Local 189 members could help in many ways, such as getting the case for teacher unionism to union members and others, and

WHEREAS, teachers are an excellent source of speakers and information for local unions or AFL-CIO state and central bodies who wish to discuss problems of public education; and

WHEREAS, Local 189 could be a valuable resource to teachers who wish to discuss the labor movement in new courses, and

WHEREAS, Local AFT chapters may wish to draw on the experience of labor educators in developing union building activities and materials,

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED:

1. That the executive boards of the AFT and of Local 189 seeks ways to develop greater cooperation and joint activities.
2. That the executive board of 189 explore the possibilities of offering a resolution to the 1966 AFT Convention on this matter.

Passed.

AFT WORK IN CENTRAL BODIES

WHEREAS:- The Labor Movement has a continuing need for education because of the complexities of our society, and

WHEREAS, the members of the AFT are equipped to train workers for leadership in their Unions and the Community, now therefore

BE IT RESOLVED that AFT Local 189 calls upon the AFT to encourage the affiliated Local Unions to take an active part in the affairs of the City Central bodies, and be it FURTHER RESOLVED that the AFT Locals encourage the formation of active education committees and state and local central bodies and that AFT members volunteer their services.

Passed.

16 YEARS OF FREE EDUCATION

WHEREAS, The advance of automation has eliminated and will continue to eliminate millions of jobs now and formerly performed by working people, and

WHEREAS, New categories of jobs requiring varying degrees of advanced education are being continuously created, and

WHEREAS, Income levels of working people in this country are generally too low to permit them to finance higher education for their children, and

WHEREAS, State funds, private funds, scholarships and charity cannot begin to meet the need for the education of millions of children on the post high school level,

THEREFORE, be it resolved that the American Federation of Teachers AFL-CIO call upon the Congress of the United States to pass such legislation as will guarantee the equivalent of sixteen years of education to all children at no tuition costs to their families, and be it

FURTHER RESOLVED, that Congress be called upon to appropriate such funds as are necessary to construct colleges and junior colleges and staff and equip these institutions to carry out the purposes of this resolution, and be it

FURTHER RESOLVED that the AFT seek the support of the AFL-CIO and all its subordinate bodies and departments for this purpose, and be FURTHER RESOLVED that a full campaign toward the ends of this resolution be prepared to win the support of the American People.

Passed.

VIETNAM

WHEREAS, the conflict in Vietnam continues to take an increasing toll of both American and Vietnamese lives and resources without bringing either side in the war visibly closer to a negotiated peace; and

WHEREAS, in recent weeks the debate, both in Congress and among a number of non-government organizations, has revealed a substantial and informed resistance to the present course of United States policy in Vietnam and has also made clear the enormous disparity between that policy's avowed aim of seeking peace and the reality of its military commitment to "Winning" the war; and

WHEREAS, those who are suffering most in loss of life and property and hope in the present conflict are the common people of all involved countries, therefore be it

RESOLVED: The Workers Education Local 189, AFT, which is committed to working for and with organizations of this nation's working people - American labor unions, announces its opposition to continued escalation of the Vietnam war and its unqualified support of immediate negotiations among all parties to the conflict guided by the terms of the Geneva Agreement of 1954; and be it further

RESOLVED: That Local 189 submit this resolution to the 1966 National Convention of the American Federation of Teachers.

Passed.

LABOR EDUCATION HISTORY

The following report was presented by the Committee from Ernestine Friedman:

The Labor Education History Committee met January 7th to consider suggestions received by mail from nine members in response to a questionnaire sent out previously. Its purpose was to ascertain the interest among Local 189 members, today's leaders in Labor Education, in material about the pioneer period, the records of which are being deposited as archives, thus becoming available for historic study. These materials are labeled for identification and placed with State Historical Societies, University Archives, libraries or other institutions providing this perpetual service.

The return questionnaires yielded three good suggestions for 1966 projects on the history of Labor Education. These were presented to the full conference as follows:

Suggestion No. I from Alice Cook, Cornell.
That tape recorded interviews be arranged with our pioneer leaders to have them tell their own stories.

Suggestion No. II from Hilda Smith & Eleanor Coit.
That as a first step a list be gathered of the materials not available in these historical records telling the story of many of the pioneer efforts of resident and summer schools, institutes, city labor colleges, etc. Some analytic writing will be done by Eleanor Coit, Hilda Smith and others to add to the value of these archives but more evaluation and analysis needs to be added in the future.

The need for such a list was expressed by Larry Rogin who believes it is important for unions and universities who are doing labor education programs to determine what materials should be saved and where they should be sent. He said the matter would be discussed at the gathering of the AFL-CIO conference of Labor Education Directors, March 30-31, 1966.

Suggestion No. III from Dorothy Oko, Librarian. That she would prepare a bibliography on Labor Education related to the story of its historic development and the available written material.

Two other suggestions received but not presented to the 189 Conference:

1 - Chester Graham who knows rural programs asked that we include joint educational activities of farmers and workers.

2 - Orlie Pell emphasized the need for further analysis of areas in which labor education has made its greatest contribution: its subject matter content, its methods, teacher training, etc. For this writers acquainted with this program should be found.

Discussion by the conference group showed real interest in "our history to date." Several volunteered to become committee members. It was voted that the committee be asked to continue along all three lines, concentrating first on the historical materials -- what they cover, where they are; and showing the development of labor education at least up to the Workers Education Bill introduced into Congress in 1948.

(A questionnaire for interested members is attached)

Meeting adjourned at 11:00 p.m. for beer and pretzels.

November 7, 1966

The Editor
The Wall Street Journal
30 Broad Street
New York, New York

Dear Sir:

I read The Wall Street Journal regularly and with respect. I am among a rather sizable portion of your readers who respect your paper as a journalistic enterprise, but who find themselves frequently in disagreement with your editorial positions. I am sorry that this letter is not occasioned by a favorable response to an editorial position rather than a negative one. But you have reacted, I think, too quickly and far too negatively to a proposal which (a) attempts to be responsible in the U.S. scheme of things, (b) which offers help to our land at a point of great hurt, and (c) which suggests positive benefits, possible of attainment, to the nation, its economy and, thereby, to business.

I speak of your response to the "Freedom Budget" proposals in your editorial of November 1, 1966.

I guess I am realist enough to know that no letter such as this could persuade you to consider an about face. But as a people, business and The Wall Street Journal included, we face problems of such seriousness that I would hope for some reconsideration on your part. Or perhaps you could call for an open examination of what the "Freedom Budget" offers.

Surely you, and all of us, must go beyond the right-middle-left cry that poverty programs have failed. We must find ideas and programs which meet needs--needs which have frequently found eloquent and factual expressions in your own most worthy news columns.

There probably are those of us who can point to even more poverty program failures than the editors of the Journal. But can we let the matter rest with such criticism of recent special efforts--even when we fail to recognize successes? Can we urge a return to prior practices which benefited many of us, but which did little to narrow the gap between those of average means (leave the rest of us out) and those in poverty? Can we ignore the impact of world events, the mass media, and a to-be-praised rising expectation of our own people which have led to accelerated demands for solutions to individual and group problems occasioned by society's ills?

It would be wrong to suggest that our society is all bad. I for one defend even the near-indefensible in the hope that we preserve the good while nudging the bad from the picture. Would that I and you were dedicated to the eradication of the bad.

We could quibble at great length about what the "Freedom Budget" proposes. Let me suggest some things which it, or similar plans with broad backing, holds that your editorial over looks:

(1) Full employment for the able and willing;

(2) Training, education, motivation toward making people able;

(3) A candid recognition of the harm done to others (children, for instance) by not caring adequately for those not now ready for full participation in the economy;

(4) Recognizing that those described in (3) are deeply affected by society's own failures;

(5) Leaving unsaid as to the details of what we can do for those cases--large in numbers but small in percentages--whose failures may be due to individual inadequacies, but suggesting a more positive approach than the nation has yet tried;

(6) To encourage economic growth, full production, improved transportation, water and air purification, resource development;

These profit us all--me, the editors, business, the masses. The cost is not likely to exceed the return to our economic health to say nothing of the gain in human values.

You rightly proclaimed the contribution of the two hundred billion dollars spent annually on education and social services. Did the proposers of the "Freedom Budget" fault existing expenditures? I think not. They took a hard look and added what further was needed, and I think they have stated why.

Could we all find a way to quibble, if needed, about particulars, but accept with energy the basic outline for a common effort for our common good?

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via

I wrote this originally as a personal exchange with the editors, but would not mind its publication. I am sorry about the length, but you have able people there and if it must be cut, cut it.

REVIEW and OUTLOOK

A Poverty of Thought

In an atmosphere of uncalled-for enthusiasm, a coalition of civil rights, religious and labor leaders is launching a drive to "end poverty" in the next 10 years. Without questioning their motives, we have no hesitation in saying their approach appears to reflect a poverty of thought.

The group's main proposal is merely to pour more cash into existing Federal antipoverty programs. "The envelopes are already addressed," blithely observes Dr. Leon Keyserling, economic consultant to the coalition and one-time chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers. "All we have to do is put more money in them."

There's no indication that members of the group know how the existing programs are functioning. Or if they do, they apparently have chosen to ignore the multiplying evidence of scandalous waste and mismanagement.

Congress itself concedes that the present antipoverty "war" is in deep trouble, though its response isn't much more realistic than that of the coalition, which is headed by A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters. In the process of pushing through an extension and expansion of the antipoverty project this fall, the lawmakers promised that they would look into the programs' shortcomings sometime next year.

It ought to be obvious that a useful effort to meet the problem of the relatively few Americans who are still in need requires a policy that shows promise of working, not simply for fresh outpourings of money from the Federal Government or anywhere else.

When Mr. Randolph's group goes beyond Federal programs already in existence, it gets no better marks for careful consideration. Its lack of contemplation is especially evident in the coalition's bland endorsement of a guaranteed annual income for all Americans, which really means singling out those below a certain income for special subsidies regardless of whether they are willing to work or not.

Even many of those who lean most strongly toward the guaranteed income as a social goal clearly see that it is a concept surrounded by serious dangers. No one can predict with certainty the results, psychological and political, of designating by decree a class of Americans who no longer will owe any responsibility to society.

However well-intentioned the Government might be at the start, the right to raise, lower or take away the incomes of millions of Americans on whim would give it an unparalleled power of coercion. Instead of restoring the poor to useful roles in normal society, moreover, the guaranteed income might well destroy the will or incentive many of them had. A program with such implications at the least deserves cautious thought instead of being rushed through as part of a crash program to end poverty.

The poverty warriors should remember that it is mainly the nation's vastly productive economy, together with Americans' longstanding willingness to help those in need, that has steadily reduced the ranks of the poor. Further gains depend heavily on stable, job-producing economic growth; that stability is already undermined by the Government's inflationary spending, and it could easily be wrecked by more of the same.

What's chiefly needed, in any case, is not more dollars but more sense. Mr. Randolph's group talks of spending an additional $185 billion in the next 10 years, a tidy sum. Yet private and public spending on education and other social programs, all of them in a real way directed toward preventing or easing poverty, now totals around $200 billion—not in a decade, but every single year. Before spending more money blindly and badly, it would seem reasonable to put a little thought into making better use of the present outlay.

We believe intelligent public and private policies can provide further assistance to the poor. But not utopian talk of literally ending poverty, talk which bespeaks a rare innocence of human nature. Those who demand action on that basis delude not only themselves but the very people they profess to want to help.

AFT CONFERENCE ON NEGRO HISTORY

CONVENTION REPORT

By Jim Wolfe, President
Chairman L 189, Delegation to the Convention

Local 189 was represented at the A.F.T. Convention in Chicago in August by: Frank McCallister, Stanley Rosen and Jim Wolfe. Each was allowed 2 votes as the local was entitled to 6 delegates.

History was made when President Charles Cogen was re-elected by an overwhelming vote, and carried with him the complete slate of Progressive caucus candidates. The 189 delegates lived up to the instructions of the membership and, as is the tradition, voted Progressive.

The three delegates attended numerous working and social sessions. Wolfe served on the Civil, Professional and Democratic and Human Rights Committee; McCallister served on the International Relations Committee and Rosen, Committee on Techniques of Organization and Collective Bargaining.

All of the resolutions submitted by Local 189 received favorable treatment with the exception of the Vietnam resolution which was "changed" in committee and then defeated on the floor by a close vote. 189 visitors at the convention were Ben Segal, who was a speaker at a dinner session, George Daitsman, Mil Lieberthal, and Tom Cosgrove.

The delegates were unable to participate in all of the convention sessions because of other responsibilities and commitments. However, all agreed that the convention was exciting and stimulating. Observation: the A.F.T. was acting more like an International union. Suggestion: other International unions might benefit if they would observe the serious discussion and debate on important issues by the committees before resolutions are brought to the Convention floor. The 1967 Convention will be held in Washington, D.C.

L 189 MEMBERS ARE URGED TO PARTICIPATE IN AFT CONFERENCE ON RACISM IN EDUCATION

Teachers, unionists and civil rights activists are expected to gather in large numbers at the AFT Sponsored Conference on Negro History. The conference will be held on December 9 & 10, 1966, at the Hilton Hotel, in Washington, D.C.

A registration fee of $5.00 should be sent to AFT CONFERENCE ON LABOR HISTORY, 716 North Rush Street, Chicago, Illinois 60611.

While it is expected that a large contingent of L 189 members from the East Coast will be in attendance, members from other parts of the country are urged to attend or to pool resources so as to send a delegate.

This historical conference deserves our full enthusiastic support.

CONDOLENCES

Sincere condolences are offered to the widow and children of our friend and collegue Art McDowell. Brother McDowell was a long time and long standing member of L 189. Though his philosophy was different from many L 189 members, he was respected as a friend, a collegue, and a man of principle. He stood up for what he believed-a valued virtue.

It is ironical, but significant, that Brother McDowell was killed in an auto accident, while on his way to a union meeting. As labor educators we appreciate the demands and limitations of time and space, and our attempts to bridge the impossible. We know that he died in pursuit of his job and his union - and he accordingly has our fraternal respect.

CHAPTER REPORTS

WASHINGTON: The Chapter has embarked upon a series of activities. First, they continue to assist in the organizing campaign of the Washington Federation of Teachers. With member Jack Sessions on the School Board and other changes to the good, it appears as though a representation election between Local 6 and the NEA will be possible shortly. Secondly, a committee has been set up to develop recommendations for a labor history unit in the D. C. schools. Working on the suggested unit will be Bill Simons, Local 6 AFT President; Stuart Brock, Jackie Kienzle, Marjorie Rachlin and Gloria Johnson. This will be an AFT-Labor Council project.

Local 189 members continued to be of assistance to the various centers of the United Planning Organization (Poverty Organization). This included legal assistance, training of block leaders, developing a proposal for a non-advertising community newspaper. Several members served on the D. C. "Air Rights" committee.

Rogoff sums up by saying, "This one activity sums up our main interest. With our own city as the focus (Washington - since everything revolves around it, regardless of what suburb we live in) we perform vital gut work, get a better idea of big city problems, are better equipped to do our full time jobs and, perhaps selfishly satisfy the urge in all members of Local 189 not to stop at advising people all over the globe how to do things but to do some of them ourselves. Through these activities the "mysterious 'Labor-Negro-Liberal Alliance' begins to take shape."

WEST VIRGINIA: In the past several months the W. V. Chapter has: Assisted in the campaign to raise funds for the striking Local OCAW 3-89 on strike at Union Carbide They have been leading discussions concerning the possibility of establishing an AFT Local for the W. V. University Faculty. They have been a moving force in the re-organization and expansion of the West Virginia University Federal Credit Union.

CHICAGO: Joyce Miller, Education Director of the ACWA Midwest Joint Board, will head the new slate of officers for the Chicago Chapter. Serving with her will be Vice Chairman, Ed Disch; Recording Secretary, Ron Peters; Treasurer, Gil Cornfield; Delegate to Chicago Federation of Labor, Stan Rosen.

Ted Ruhig, Past Chairman and moving force in founding the Local was honored with a resolution commending his "accomplishments and dedication," and wishing him well in his new job as Executive Secretary for the Manpower Commission in Hawaii. A token of appreciation was presented to Ted by the group. Ted promised to help set up a Hawaii Chapter.

The labor history committee reported on plans for a fund-raising affair to be held in 1967. The proceeds from this affair would be shared by the Chicago Labor History Project and the Ethel Rogin Memorial Fund. The committee was given the go-ahead by the meeting. A committee was set up to discuss and evaluate educational programs and resources in the Chicago area. Appointed to Co-Chair the meeting were Pete Schnaufer and Ron Peters. The subject of the potential contribution of labor educators to the Civil Rights movement was discussed, and will be further discussed in detail at future meetings. Ray Dickow, urged support for the Annual Midwest Labor Press Debs Dinner to be held next June.

A REPORT FROM 1966 LABOR INTERN - HAROLD ALPERT

Harold Alpert, 33-year-old unionist from Connecticut, was the recipient of the second Local 189 Labor Education Internship. Below are included some of Brother Alpert's impressions of the 8-week training program.

To Brother Alpert, "The eight weeks of the internship was an experience unlike any I've ever had before. It was educational, enlightening, broadening and enjoyable. I met many members of Local 189 and was extremely impressed by the fact that almost without exception, the members of 189 are dedicated, competent and liberals. They are also some of the nicest people I have met."

Alpert commented on the value of having the opportunity to learn more about the AFL-CIO by his visit to Washington. He indicated the value of learning how to prepare teaching lesson plans, but urged that future programs for unionists spend more time on this subject. He felt that spending four weeks at one university, the University of Wisconsin was valuable, since he had an opportunity to observe and participate in various different institutes. He was active in administration and teaching in these programs.

The week in Texas was enjoyable and enlightening but provided only limited activities to observe and participate in actual on-going activities. His visit to St. Louis was highly rewarding and fruitful, with time spent with the ACWA, Local 688 Teamsters and the Missouri Labor Education Program.

Alpert observed that a week spent with a civil rights or similar type social action organization would have enriched the program.

Alpert summarized his comments by expressing appreciation to all those people who participated and aided him in the 8-week program. He appreciated the consideration and personal attention that he received from all. He paid special tribute to Norris Tibbetts, Joe and Jean Suarez, Jackie Kienzle, Hoagy Young and Marge Rachlin. He noted, "I owe a debt of special gratitude to Owen Tapper and the West Allis Firefighters who were kind enough to allow me to join them in picketing City Hall. Above all, special thanks to Ruth Wiencek, without whose inspiration and help I could never have gotten the internship. I hope that I can be as dedicated and as liberal and almost as competent as the members of Local 189 I have met this summer."

Brother Alpert's report of Activities since he has returned to Bridgeport indicate that he has already put much of his training to work. It is hoped that sometime in the near future, he will find an appropriate and challenging position in workers education.

The 1966 Labor internship committee was made up of Marge Rachlin, Larry Rogin, Norris Tibetts, Jacqueline Kienzle and Oliver Petersen. Plans are moving ahead for the development of a 1967 internship. Specifics will be discussed at the Winter Executive Board Meeting.

COGEN SPEAKS

As a special order of business, Charles Cogen, President of the AFT, addressed the group. He discussed the rapid growth of AFT and its potential for 2 million members. He reported that AFT has "swept the field" in the big cities and cited the Washington collective bargaining victory as the most recent accomplishment.

Cogen covered a wide area of subject matter, including: AFT Structure; the newly established AFT Public Review Board; the newly developed State Organization Division of AFT; and the "More effective Schools Program".

He noted Local 189 resolutions passed at the past convention provide a basis for future action and co-operation. He called upon Local 189 and its members to apply their expert skills to help train new teacher unionists in collective bargaining, grievance handling and other similar skills. Moreover, he urged Local 189 members to act as "catalysts" in stimulating AFT activities in the education area.

He noted that the "utopian" idea of establishing an AFT Leadership Training School was "on the drawing boards" and hopefully in the near future it would become a reality.

RESOLUTION

Joan Suarez, Chairman of the Resolutions Committee, followed Cogen to the podium. On behalf of the Resolutions Committee she presented a special resolution dealing with AFT and Local 189 cooperation.

Connie Kopelov, speaking on the motion, reported that a dialogue had been established between a Local 189 Committee and AFT Leadership. They are exploring ways in which they can cooperate on projects more successfully.

Stan Rosen commented on the good relationships he has had with AFT staff. He pointed to the help given him in developing the recent special issue of Labor Education News.

The motion was to adopt the resolution. Adopted.
(See attached for full text.)

C.O.P.E., TOO

Al Wickman, C.O.P.E. Chairman, noted that AFT-PAC had sent him 50 C.O.P.E. tickets which he quickly passed about. Fifty-two dollars were collected which was promptly mailed to Robert Porter, AFT Secretary-Treasurer.

WATCH FOR YOUNG

A special order of business followed. A watch was presented to Holgate Young, former Financial Secretary and long-time Local 189 activist. The presentation was made by Jim Wolfe with Charles Cogen participating. The watch was inscribed "How does this grab you? -- Local 189, AFT." (for an explanation wire Jim Wolfe collect).

LOCAL 189 ORGANIZATION

Harvey Friedman, Chairman, indicated that letters had been sent out to university labor educators who were not members of Local 189. The next mailing is to go to union labor educators who are not members. Other membership building activities are planned.

CIVIL RIGHTS

Joe Smolen was appointed by Jim Wolfe to be the Chairman of the Local 189 Civil Rights Committee. Committee members are now being solicited. It is expected that the Committee will promote the AFT Freedom Schools as well as other areas.

SALARY SURVEY

Ted F. Silvey has consented to bring the Union Labor Educator wage and salary survey up to date. He will work with Larry Rogin who is also interested in obtaining this type of information for his NILE Survey.

PENSIONS

Earl Kipp is exploring the feasibility of a trust or pension plan for Local 189 members. The meeting instructed him to canvass the members with a specific proposal to gauge interest.

THE HISTORY OF WORKERS EDUCATION

Oliver Peterson, Chairman, was not in attendance. An excellent report, prepared by him, stating the accomplishments, problems and goals of the Committee, was distributed to the members. Larry Rogin commented that the Committee was continuing its work. (See attached History Committee Report).

JOB CLEARINGHOUSE

Chairman Jackie Kienzle sent a report that the service was functioning. She urged those seeking jobs and those seeking workers to keep in touch with her. Inquiries are welcome.

THE LABOR INTERNSHIP

Owen Tapper reported for Hervey Juris, Chairman. He noted that 85 inquiries were received by the Committee this year. Forty-four completed applications were filed. Both figures are slightly higher than last year. Several of the applicants are very well qualified. At the time of the meeting the Committee had not yet chosen the 1967 Intern, but the choice had been narrowed down to a few.

CHAPTER REPORTS

WASHINGTON, D. C.

The Chapter remains active participating in training of Neighborhood workers in the City, participating in the Central Body Education Program, assisting AFT in D. C. and helping striking Suburban Hospital workers.

IUE

Don Cagle, formerly with the IUE Chapter indicated that the Bargaining Chapter was at a standstill. President Wolfe was commissioned to investigate the situation with an eye to providing appropriate assistance to the membership there.

CHICAGO

Joyce Miller reported on a letter sent to Governor Hughes of New Jersey concerning jailed AFT members and letter received in return. Labor History project still in the planning stages.

WEST VIRGINIA

Jack MacKenzie reported on the active program in West Virginia and introduced Glen Armstrong from the West Virginia Labor Federation.

MINNESOTA

Martin Duffy reported that the Minnesota Chapter had just been organized. It is on a membership building campaign and is planning future activities.

WISCONSIN AND OHIO

Both Chapters are in the process of organizing themselves for activity.

CONSTITUTION COMMITTEE REPORT

Holgate Young reported on the recent changes to the Local 189 Constitution. He reported that all three amendments (change in AFT dues category, wider Executive Board representation and affiliation requirements of Chapters) were ratified by the membership. He explained the effects of the changes.

In line with this report, Jim Wolfe was asked to establish a Committee which would explore and develop standard by-laws and operating rules for the Chapters.

RESOLUTIONS AND AMENDMENTS

RESOLUTION ON LABOR PRESS: Adopted. (See attached).

RESOLUTION COMMENDING AFT: Adopted. (See attached).

RESOLUTION ON AFT EDUCATION DEPARTMENT: Adopted. (See attached).

RESOLUTION ON VIETMAN: Adopted. (See attached).

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO AFT CONSTITUTION: Referred to Winter Meeting. (See attached).

This amendment was proposed by Brother Edelstein of DeKalb, Illinois. He is invited to use the columns of the newsletter to present his case for this amendment.

VIETNAM

The only resolution to draw controversy was the resolution on Vietnam.

Paul Booth offered to amend the resolution by adding a whereas which called on 189 members and AFT to withhold their votes from President Johnson in 1968 because of his Vietnam policy. After vigorous discussion, this amendment was defeated in a close vote.

Irv Brotslaw offered a milder amendment to emphasize the seriousness of the intention of the resolution. This amendment, too, in a close vote, was defeated.

The basic resolution, as submitted by the Committee was adopted by the body.

Several questions were asked from the floor. The meeting was adjourned at 10:55 P.M. and was followed by a few drinks at a cash bar and considerable informal conversation.

Fraternally submitted,

Stan Rosen, Recording Secretary

RESOLUTION

2. That the AFT take additional steps to encourage participation by AFT local unions in AFL-CIO city and state central bodies with special emphasis on the formation of education committees in those bodies;

3. That Local 189 recommends that proposals outlining areas of cooperation between Local 189 and AFT be prepared and that Local 189 request the opportunity to present these to the Executive Board of the AFT.

4. That Local 189 Executive Board be directed to set up a Committee to explore the possibilities of establishing an annual Workers Education Conference of the American Federation of Teachers as a service of Local 189 for other affiliated AFT local unions; and that this Committee be directed to report on this project at the next Winter meeting of Local 189.

Committee on

History of Workers' Education

We are confronted here with the open-ended job of locating and preserving material bearing on both past and current experience in Workers' Education, material useful to writers and researchers as well as to labor educators.

Material related to current and on-going experience may appear to be of relatively less importance but it should not be neglected. We may have all the historically significant records from the work of a Mark Starr but if so we are luckier than we deserve to be. Those who make history shouldn't be required to write it but in this field we should like to make them at least a little bit "history conscious" and thus assure the preservation of records and materials no longer essential to their programs but very important as history. The Committee hopes to develop a set of suggestions on this for unions and for labor education practitioners and welcomes ideas from others. As a matter of fact, there is no limitation on the size of the Committee and we urge the continuing participation of any 189er who is interested.

Some modest beginnings have been made on the other part of the Committee's task, that of contributing to the over-all job of identifying, locating and preserving materials relating to earlier activities in the field. It is important that we recognize we are only contributing to the job. Even if we were archivists and historians we do not have the staff or the facilities for assembling the variety and quantity of material involved, including information still in the minds of labor educators and materials now in their attics or to be rescued from filing cabinets needed in current operations

Last October the then chairman of the Committee, Ernestine Friedman, sent letters to a number of organizations and institutions possibly interested in the history of labor education and we have received some extremely interesting and useful replies. Noteworthy for their expressions of interest and for information on their present holdings were the replies from the Wisconsin Historical Society, The University of Wisconsin, Wayne State University, National Archives and Tennessee State Library and Archives. The West Virginia University Library expressed an interest in the project as a whole and, in addition, offered to serve as a repository for material on the history of Local 189. This offer has been referred to the Board of Local 189 for consideration.

Some of the collections covered in the above replies are described also in the article by Wisconsin State Archivist Gerald Ham in the Fall 1966 issue of Labor History and the following items may be noted in addition:

> Sorted and classified material from American Labor Education Service (125 boxes), at the Documentation Center of the New York State School of Labor and Industrial Relations at Cornell. As a part of that collection, Eleanor Coit and Marie Algor have written a 130 page report of ALES.
> Duplicates of some of the ALES material, plus material on summer schools as well as records of the YWCA Industrial Department, at the Smith College Archives of Women's Activities in the United States.

It is apparent from the foregoing that we are not lacking in repositories and that we should not lightly undertake a collecting job, even if we had the facilities and the expertise. And it may well be that, for the present, the Committee should not be thinking of writing history, that it should only promote the assembling of materials at appropriate repositories and assist in the development of minimum standards for their maintenance and use.

There would be little point in collecting material without adequate provision for continuing use, by direct reference or, when necessary, through photo copying.

This leads to the question of what repositories, if any, the Committee should recommend to organizations and individuals with eligible materials and it is recognized that there is no simple answer. The Committee welcomes suggestions on this and the Board of Local 189 will be asked to establish a policy.

One of the early suggestions to the Committee was the taping of interviews with labor educators who are or were too busy to write the history they have made and here again we recognize our limitations. There are oral history programs with facilities and expertise far beyond any that we could develop. It may be that we should concentrate on the identification of such programs and on assisting them in the selection of interviewees and interviewers, with suggestions on procedures and possibly questions and outlines for interviews. There may be occasions when labor education could be made a distinct part of a general interview and we want to be in a position to alert oral history interviewers to such possibilities. It should be emphasized that in may instances, we may not be interested in oral history as such. Our primary concern is with the recording, for later transcription, of material that would certainly be lost if we were to rely only on the written word. Again, the Committee is looking for suggestions and for sub-committee volunteers.

It has been suggested that we give thought to the development of guidelines for the analysis of the material in the field in order to facilitate its use by writers and researchers as well as practitioners. Two approaches to such an undertaking are under consideration and they may lead to still others.

One is the straight chronological approach, identifying and describing distinct periods in the development of workers' education in the U. S. The other approach would concern itself with areas of special interest such as labor education and civil rights, tool courses, teaching methods, curriculum development, foreign contributions to labor education in the U. S. These are only suggestive of the variety and the number of areas that could be listed.

While the Committee is not establishing an archive it is recognized that interested individuals may wish to send in useful items that turn up and could be easily mislaid and lost. They may be sent to the Committee, care of the National Institute of Labor Education, The American University, 1911 F Street N. W., Washington, D. C. 20006, where limited desk and shelf space has been made available. It is hoped that a policy can be developed soon on the disposition of relatively bulky items and collections and in the meantime the Committee should be happy to learn of their existence. Interested individuals should feel free to make contributions of material and ideas and not wait for formal announcement of a program developed in all of its details.

Especially welcome here would be copies of or references to critical and analytical writings such as the article by Amy Hewes on "Early Experiments in Workers' Education" in the Summer 1956 issue of Adult Education. Another example of this is a 1966 article by Hilda Smith on "Labor Education History--Past, Present and Future" written for Labor Education News. There may be additional items of this nature on state and local as well as national programs that should be brought to the attention of the Committee.

Many program details are dependent on the size and strength of the Committee and volunteers are encouraged to come forward for single one-shot operations or for continuing activity. Ernestine Friedman has unloaded the chairmanship but remains with a number of others as an active member of the Committee and there is work for many more.

Reference has been made to matters calling for action by the Board of Local 189. It is obvious that a committee cannot speak for the Local in matters such as those mentioned but it is equally obvious that the officers of the Local should not be bothered with routine matters and it is hoped that some general guidelines can be developed at the Spring Meeting if not before.

RESOLUTION ON LABOR PRESS

WHEREAS: The labor press has provided increasing and more extensive coverage on labor education activities and related labor education topics;

WHEREAS: Through special feature stories and articles the labor press has dealt creatively and in depth on issues such as labor history and labor teaching in the schools.

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that Local 189 commend this type of activity and urge its expansion; that Local 189 express its willingness to cooperate with labor editors in pursuing these goals by providing materials for articles, feature stories, and so forth; that the officers of Local 189 be commissioned to explore the possibilities for joint activities with ILPA; that this resolution be transmitted to ILPA, the leadership organization of the labor press.

Adopted: April 27, 1967
Chicago, Illinois

RESOLUTION COMMENDING AFT

WHEREAS the Conference on Racism in Education sponsored by the AFT made a major contribution toward discussion and action on this important issue;

WHEREAS the Conference on Racism in Education was informative, provocative, well organized and has led to continued activity and concern about the omissions and distortions of the role of the Negro in America.

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that Local 189 commends the AFT for its sponsorship of the Conference on Racism in Education.

FOR AN AFT UNION EDUCATION DEPARTMENT

Whereas: It has been demonstrated that union education provides union members the opportunity to systematically think about the problems they confront in performing their union leadership jobs.

Whereas: Disseminating trade union principles among members of the AFT is important to the whole labor movement because of the key role AFT members hold in their communities.

Whereas: Considering the skills available among AFT members enabling them to effectually utilize education materials and concepts, an education program in the AFT could be very effective.

Whereas: AFT local officers, chairman, and members are daily meeting difficult and perplexing problems as they build a trade union among those who work in education.

Whereas: The Union could do a great service for its members and the labor movement by preparing information, outlines, units, fact sheets, films, summaries, reading lists, and other materials and arrange discussions, classes, and other education activities to deal with the information and skills needed by AFT members in building a strong union.

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED: That the AFT Executive Board establish an AFT EDUCATION DEPARTMENT, whose role it is to see that education activities in the union are encouraged and assisted.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED: That the AFT Convention each year include a UNION EDUCATION COMMITTEE to review the education activities of the AFT and to aid their development.

RESOLUTION ON VIETNAM

WHEREAS, the continuing escalation of hostilities in Vietnam has brought increasing death and destruction to both the American and the Vietnamese peoples; and

WHEREAS, these hostilities have provided employers and government officials with the opportunity and excuse to thwart the legitimate aims of the labor movement through invoking injunctions in the name of "The National Emergency" under the Taft-Hartley Act, and

WHEREAS, war hits union members and the children of working people hardest of all since they provide the cannon fodder for the armed forces, and

WHEREAS, the material costs of the fighting are destroying many of the domestic and foreign programs such as foreign aid, the fight against poverty, the anti-pollution campaigns and others, the success of which would provide much better arguments for freedom and our way of life than military destruction, and

WHEREAS, the gulf between the United States' avowed policy of seeking peace and the reality of its military commitment to winning the war has continued to widen, and the awareness of this disparity has grown on the part of citizens of all countries; therefore be it

RESOLVED: The Workers Education Local 189, AFT, urges the United States government to accept the proposals of United Nations Secretary U. Thant for an immediate cessation of the bombings North and South, for negotiations involving all parties in the conflict and for a return to the principles of the Geneva accords of 1954; and be it further

RESOLVED: That Local 189 forward copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, the President and Executive Board of the American Federation of Teachers, and the President and Executive Council of the AFL-CIO.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO THE AFT CONSTITUTION

(Article VI, Section 3 - Nomination and Election Procedures)

"The Convention shall elect the President, Secretary-Treasurer and all other full-time national officers to be chosen by the Convention under a system of preferential voting (single transferable votes), an absolute majority of the count being required for election."

(Note: There will always be an absolute majority obtained under this system, since the count continues (if necessary) until an absolute majority of the count is obtained. The system is fairly common in professional associations in the U.S., and in British unions.

Modern methods of counting punch cards or IBM answer sheets can easily be adapted to counting the votes -- if they have not already been.)

"The Convention shall elect the national executive council by proportional representation (single transferable votes, Droop quota *), votes being cast for individual candidates."

(Note *
The Droop quota is "one vote more than the number obtained by dividing the total number of valid votes by one more than the number of seats to be filled." It is specified in Enid Lakeman and James D. Lambert, Voting in Democracies, London: Faber and Faber, 1959, p. 131.)

BASIC ARGUMENTS FOR PROPORTIONAL REPRESENTATION OF NATL. EXEC. COMM., AFT, AND BASIS FOR CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT:

1. It is widely recognized that the current system (voting "X" for up to several or more candidates in simultaneous elections) LEADS TO WINNER TAKE ALL, WHEN PARTIES OR FACTIONS DOMINATE THE ELECTION, AND WHEN VOTING STRENGTHS ARE NOT QUITE CLOSE.

2. It is questionable that a PARTY SYSTEM in a UNION can survive long when when even relatively strong minorities cannot gain representation on the natl. executive.

3. Proportional representation would be a GOOD EXAMPLE for other unions in which (in some cases at least) oligarchy has been maintained in part by just such an electoral system as now exists in the AFT!

4. The most suitable opposition, or potential opposition, may often be (and probably now is) WITHIN THE MAJORITY PARTY. The present system tends to (a) unite majority members when they might not or should not be united; (b) keeps independent-minded majority members of the exec. in line, since they require majority-party endorsement in the next election. (Local 189), in particular, might prefer to have a different type of opposition than we now have; at least, the writer hopes so.)

5. Smaller locals now opportunistically get behind the major party, since there is no other way that they can see which will get them their special interests. This makes for (a) unnecessary horse-trading; and (b) conservatism, since these special interests are forced to operate within the strongest tendency. This COULD support oligarchy, later.

6. Greater independence of exec. comm. members will build them up to be potential competitors for the presidency, which no doubt some of them deserve to be. (See also point 4) At any rate, the most appropriate challenge may not be from any existing minority party leader.

7. Voters may reward and punish within their own party slates, under proportional representation. In other words, unpopular candidates WITHIN slates can be by-passed, in favor of more acceptable (to the voter) candidates of the same party. Lack of acceptability, with consequent defeat, may change the complexion of the parties themselves, and -- at least sometimes -- accomplish a transition to a new policy without major electoral upsets, over a period of time. (Electoral upsets are not presumed to be bad -- just difficult. And sometimes they are bad, from the point of view of the voter who on the whole likes the majority tendency.)

8. The union is heterogeneous in many respects, and voters with interests in common may be stirred by candidates or issues which neither party has paid much attention to. The heterogeneity is occupational, and regional, obviously; and no doubt to some extent political, using the term broadly.

AFT 189

A REPORT FROM LOCAL 189's CONFERENCE:

Have unions failed white workers?

Workers Education Local 189 of the AFT is the only nationwide local in the Federation. It has approximately 300 members, who are principally college and university faculty involved in labor education, and staffers in other international unions in the same field. The local meets twice yearly, once in winter and once in the spring. This article is a report of some of the local's activity at its recent winter meeting.

Stan Rosen, president of Workers Education Local 189, and Hoagy Young, a conference planner, third and fifth from the left, pose with their panel of young labor radicals, from left: Paul Booth, Jim Williams, Roger Robinson. Rosen is with the University of Illinois' labor extension division in Chicago, and Young is with the Communications Workers Union in Washington, D.C.

WASHINGTON, D.C.

A straw Presidential preference vote taken at five AFL-CIO Young Worker schools in as many states this summer showed the two top vote-getters as George Wallace, with 28 percent of the vote, and Lyndon B. Johnson, with 25 percent.

The AFL-CIO is not publicizing this information, but the people involved in labor education in the nation's trade unions and universities are as deeply concerned with the meaning behind such statistics as is the AFL-CIO. In its winter meeting here in late November, Workers Education Local 189 of the AFT considered the problem in a panel titled "How Unions Failed White Workers."

"Of course," one of the members said from the floor just before the panel began, "we've been failing the black workers all along, and I wonder if the title of the panel has that in mind?" He was assured that it did.

WORKERS ARE WORSE OFF

Paul Booth, the first panelist, lit into the claim that the U.S. has recently had "eight years of unparalleled prosperity." Booth, a former research staffer for the Packinghouse Workers, now with the merged Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen and the Packinghouse union, fired off a volley of statistics showing that the average worker is considerably worse off now, in relationship to the general economy, than he was a decade ago.

"In 1959," Booth said, "39 percent of American families earned over the Department of Labor's 'moderate standard of living' budget; in 1966, only 30 per cent earned over that standard. The combined impact of inflation, taxes, and limited salary increases shows that a lot of people are not only squeezed in their perception of what is happening to them, but in the hard facts of life. The distribution of wealth in our society has been relatively unchanged during this period.

"A large group at the bottom still has nothing," Booth continued. "Those in the middle have very little stake in their attainments because of their heavily mortgaged futures. And while this is happening, the 1967 figure on corporation profits in this country is almost equal to a third of the total family income in the United States. However, in many countries, wage levels are treated not only as a matter of collective bargaining, but of political policy . . ."

Booth's analysis of the Wallace appeal was that "He was the first guy to come along and politicize, in his own racist and funny way, the situation of the working man in the country today, and thus the first guy to win a passionate audience of its victims."

ALIENATION AMONG WORKERS

Panelist Roger Robinson, who works for the Hotel and Restaurant Workers Union in Detroit, pointed out that in his area, the white worker "essentially comes out of a folk background, either ethnic or indigenous," and that the "basic pressure toward alienation from society is still felt by this worker at his workplace." If a worker felt his on-the-job grievances were taken care of, Robinson said, he wouldn't feel so alienated, but in some unions, he must make an appointment "downtown" to present a grievance, and the red tape effectively stifles a feeling of worker freedom. "The basic human demands of workers are most important," Robinson said, "and the only one I've seen come out of collective bargaining in this country is seniority rights." But then he pointed out the recent activities of black and white militants in such autoworkers' locals as those at Dodge, Cadillac, and in Flint, and said it was a hopeful sign.

'We can't continue as we were . . .'

"In an auto plant," Robinson explained, "If a guy is there four years, he'll be there for 40. He's got himself locked into a credit situation with the main item a 30-year mortgage on a tract house that should never have been created in the first place. The guy on the line doesn't see the union working on his problems as it did in the '30s."

The third young panelist, Jim Williams of the West Virginia AFL-CIO, spoke of the "productivity box," which is the limited way of thinking that wages cannot rise unless productivity rises. "It keeps the shares in the economy the same," he said, and this status quo has been challenged by the movements today among black people and poor people.

"In the Wallace, Nixon, and McCarthy campaigns, there was a movement away from the status quo," Williams said, "but only Wallace was able to touch the working class, and he did it with a radical, albeit fascist, approach.

FROM McCARTHY TO WALLACE

"In Charleston, W. Va., workers who had supported McCarthy, after August, ripped the McCarthy stickers off their cars and put on Wallace stickers.

"Most of the recent social gains of the War on Poverty are evoking a great deal of resentment among the working class," Williams continued. He explained that workers believe the poor are able to secure benefits, such as medical attention, that the average worker is unable to buy adequately for himself. "The tax structure in this country is still loaded against the working class," Williams said. "They are, basically, being forced to pay the costs of the programs for others that they can't afford for themselves.

"Wallace, and to some extent, Nixon, were talking about the real issues, about war and racism, while the AFL-CIO was talking about the level of unemployment compensation in Alabama," Williams said. He added that he expects the economic situation to "get worse," and that "how we react in the future will depend on the political moves of labor. We should have medical and housing programs for everybody. Up until now, we have been working on it a piece at a time, and this has created a counter-current among our own people. If workers feel that black people, under the present economic situation, present a threat to their jobs and property values, it is that they do, and the answer is to work for gains for all."

And, Williams concluded, "In this new administration, the political stance of labor will have to be reevaluated. Will 'all the way with LBJ' be translated to 'all the way with Tricky Dick?' We can't continue as we were in 1968, punishing our friends who were against the war in Vietnam, for example, and rewarding our enemies . . ."

Police tactics hit

At its winter meeting, Workers Education Local 189 of the AFT passed resolutions including one on police violence, condemning "police tactics" in connection with both major party conventions this year, and urging that "organizations, particularly those in the labor movement, take care when choosing convention and conference sites, to encourage the selection of cities which exhibit compassion and concern for the civil liberties and rights of human beings," and another dealing with the recent teacher-union strike in New York City, in which a request was made that the community board's side of the story be printed in the American Teacher.

A new code of ethics for the 'teaching profession?'

WASHINGTON, D.C.

Early this school year, the AFT was honored by being invited by the National Education Association to consider the NEA's revised Code of Ethics of the Education Profession for possible adoption.

After a perusal of the revised Code, AFT President David Selden wrote NEA President Koontz: "I question whether there is an all-inclusive 'Education Profession.' It seems to me that there are a number of professions within the educational enterprise. The real difference in interest between these groups should not be obscured by use of such an amorphous term as 'Education Profession.'

"I see nothing wrong per se with a code of ethics," Selden continued in his letter, "but the provisions of such a code ought to be specific enough so that those who are supposed to be governed by them know what is expected of them. Otherwise the terms are meaningless. I could see some advantage in having a code of ethics for teachers which would stipulate (for instance) that attempting to teach more than 20 pupils at a time, except under conditions defined by the teaching profession, is unprofessional. Another provision of such a code might be that attempting to teach more than 20 class periods a week is unprofessional. Such a code might even provide that it is unprofessional to work for less than a professional wage.

"I can readily visualize teachers subscribing to provisions such as those listed above, but I cannot visualize superintendents and other administrators willingly subscribing to them. Top administrators regard their function as keeping the school bureaucracy going with the money provided by the board of education, regardless of what that money will buy."

And, Selden concluded, "One other general comment: perhaps it is unavoidable, but the code seems to be a collection of 'thou shalt nots.' It has an Old Testament, judgmental ring to it. I think a more positive, progressive guide would better suit today's needs."

Bennett case leads to tenure board

ROYAL OAK, Mich.

The board of education here, after dismissing nine of 19 charges filed a year and a half ago against William Bennett, has decided to fire the veteran teacher. It says he failed to comply with the Michigan Education Association's "code of ethics," among other transgressions. Bennett's case was publicized throughout Michigan during a series of open hearings in which Bernard Fieger, Michigan Federation of Teachers attorney, defended him against a series of wild charges. Fieger is appealing the latest decision to the state tenure commission where, he says, "We're confident of vindication."

AFT

RESOLUTION SUBMITTED BY CONVENTION:

Shall we adopt an antiwar stand?

This referendum vote of the membership, under Article XII, Section 1, of the AFT constitution, has been instituted by order of the 54th annual convention. The resolution was revised and summarized by the Convention Committee on International Relations from several resolutions that had been submitted to the convention by locals. The convention voted no recommendation to accept or reject but voted to submit the following resolution to a vote of the entire membership.

WHEREAS, the United States is involved in an undeclared war in Indochina; and

WHEREAS, as a result of this war over 200,000 American men have been killed or wounded and countless numbers of Southeast Asians have been scarred by the ravages of this war; and

WHEREAS, there has developed within the United States a polarization and divisiveness that has torn our society asunder; therefore be it

RESOLVED: that the American Federation of Teachers go on record supporting an immediate cease fire in Indochina and a complete, systematic withdrawal of all American forces from the area to be completed no later than June 30, 1971; and be it further

RESOLVED: that all funds presently being spent on the war by the federal government be channeled into such domestic priorities as aid to education, urban renewal, anti-poverty programs, pollution control, and other constructive areas; and be it further

RESOLVED: that the American Federation of Teachers communicate this position to the officers and executive board members of the AFL-CIO; and be it further

RESOLVED: that the American Federation of Teachers give widespread publicity to this statement.

Vote YES: Arguments in favor of adopting the resolution

It is hard to find even one aspect of our lives in this country today that is not suffering because of the drain of our resources into the war in Indochina and related military expenditures.

Many people recognize the difficulty in basing a condemnation of the rape of a country, the murder of its people, and irreparable devastation, on what it does to the lives and pocketbooks of people thousands of miles away. But it can be done, because we cannot ignore the cost of the war at home, even if we do not reckon in it the tragedy of American and Vietnamese lives lost, the thousands maimed and wounded, the hopes of hundreds of thousands blighted.

All we really have to do is try to breathe in our smog-bound cities; swim in our polluted streams; or waste hours of frustrated commuting between jobs and home along traffic-clogged streets.

We sign contracts as a teachers' union and find the money is not available to fulfill them. We try to buy a home and find the money is not available to mortgage it. We seek medical care and find that medical schools are closing down because there is no money to train new doctors, and that hospitals are unable to care for those who can't pay the $100-plus daily tariff.

Of our tax dollar, 75 percent goes to the federal government, and 64 percent of that to war-related expenditures. Virtually none of our federal tax money comes back to us.

Federal expenditures for the nation's education budget have slipped from 8.5 percent in 1967-68 to 6.3 percent this year, while at the same time economists and educators are pleading for vastly increased federal expenditures on the schools.

While the federal government has virtually abandoned support of education, it has forced already overburdened state and local governments to try to meet the costs of educating an expanding and schooling-hungry population.

The crunch that results is what we as teachers live with every day in our schools: The outmoded and crumbling buildings, the overcrowded classes, the "teacher surplus" because there is no money to hire the teachers who are really needed, the struggle to keep abreast of the soaring cost of every service and supply.

Most of the gains won by teachers in salary increases have been wiped out by taxes and inflation. Did you know that 36 percent of your salary, one way or another, goes into taxes? Did you know that the 6.5 percent increase teachers received, on the average, in salaries in 1969-70 was whittled down to 1.4 percent because of inflation alone?

Nationally, take - home pay after inflation has remained the same since 1967; since 1965 there has been an absolute decline in the standard of living of American workers because of the war.

The cost of the war in education, health, public services is incalculable, of course. But now and then you can indicate part of the material cost by saying what some sum or other might have bought, had it not been spent on death and destruction. For example, the $6 billion cost of lost aircraft alone would have bought the following:

- A new elementary, junior high, and senior high school (for 3,800 students), in each of 250 communities.
- A starting salary of $7,000 for each of 35,741 teachers.

The Nixon Administration tells us that if it wasn't for the students—our students—the concern with the war would dissolve into some rosy mist. Do away with student protest, they indicate, and you do away with the problem. Can't finance the schools? Let big business come in with some cheap-jack scheme to solve education's ills.

When Attorney General John Mitchell says, as he did last month, that America is turning so far to the Vote NO: Arguments against adoption of the resolution

There has been a great change in the country with regard to the war in Indochina. The vast majority of people favor an end to the war and want peace. Most people, however, favor a negotiated settlement and a cessation of all hostilities—not a military victory of one side or the other. There is a small group in the peace movement, who, in calling for immediate withdrawal of American troops regardless of the consequences, are really for a military victory of the other side.

This resolution, calling for complete withdrawal of American troops from South Vietnam by June, 1971, is, in effect, an immediate withdrawal resolution and if passed as an AFT position, will identify us not with the broad movement for peace but with those who support a Vietcong victory. For example, the resolution says nothing at all about the need for insuring impartially supervised democratic elections in South Vietnam. It says nothing at all about the role of the North Vietnamese Communists and does not call on them to withdraw as well. It says nothing at all about protecting the lives of political independents and the 450,000 members of the labor movement in South Vietnam, should American troops suddenly withdraw and North Vietnamese forces sweep in.

Any AFT policy on Indochina must clearly be one which is for an end to all the killing—of Southeast Asians as well as Americans. We must not allow ourselves to be identified with those who are not merely for peace but who favor an American defeat and a Vietcong victory.

Any AFT policy on Indochina must favor the idea that the destiny of South Vietnam should be decided democratically through free elections—and not imposed by armed strength either of the North or South or the U.S. or the Vietcong.

Any AFT policy on Indochina must call for the protection of trade unionists, Buddhists, and other democratic forces against a possible totalitarian takeover of their country. The recent elections in South Vietnam, inadequate as they may have been, clearly demonstrated not just the existence of those independent forces but their substantial following within South Vietnam. Any withdrawal of American troops must coincide with assurances that those independent forces will be able to continue their fight for democracy within their own country.

As trade unionists, we must not abandon hundreds of thousands of union workers in South Vietnam who now do have the right to unionize and strike to the Vietcong and North Vietnamese governments which tolerate no strikes and no free trade unions.

We must remember too that support for a unilateral withdrawal resolution will strain our relationships with most other labor unions in this country, who often have been our only support in crucial strikes, and whom we will need again and again in forthcoming struggles.

Those who argue for immediate withdrawal say that there will be no money for education and other domestic needs until the war is ended. We must not allow ourselves to fall for the argument that there is no money for schools because of the war. There is enough. We in AFT have always found that when we strike or threaten to — somehow the money is found. We must continue efforts to mobilize the same type of strength on a national basis, for the money can be found there too. We all want the war to end—but even then we will have to be in a struggle for the allocation of needed federal funds to education. More money for education will not be automatic, especially under the Nixon administration. A coalition of liberal forces—in which the labor movement is the prime mover—must be kept together in a long, hard fight for more funds and changed priorities.

RESOLUTION SUBMITTED BY 19 LOCALS:

Shall we keep 'no position?'

A second question maintaining AFT's "no-position" stand has been submitted by 19 locals: United Federation of Teachers, Local 2, New York City; Kansas City, Local 691; Philadelphia, Local 3; New Haven, Conn., Local 933; Archdiocesan Federation of Teachers, Local 1700, Chicago; Pittsburgh, Local 400; Robbinsdale, Minn., Local 872; Providence, R.I., Local 920; W. Haven, Conn., Local 1547; Binghamton, N.Y., Local 1218; Warwick, R.I., Local 915; Pawtucket, R.I., Local 930; Providence, R.I., Local 958; Putnam Valley, N.Y., Local 1867; Chicago, Local 1; Suburban Teachers Union, Local 571, Ill.; Niles Township, Ill., Local 1274; Granite City, Ill., Local 743; Cleveland, Local 279.

WHEREAS, the major job of the AFT is to remain strong and united so that it can continue to be as successful in forthcoming struggles as it has been in the past, and

WHEREAS, the Vietnam issue divides our members as it does our national, and

WHEREAS, AFT members who wish to be active on the issue have adequate opportunity for doing so in organizations established for that purpose without dividing the AFT, and

WHEREAS, we must continue to take a "no-position" or our union meetings, executive committees, state and national conventions will be prevented from reaching on agenda vital trade union and educational issues because of time consumed on implementing our policy, and

WHEREAS, there are already demands that if the AFT adopts a policy that we take ads, sponsor demonstrations, contribute funds, that we make the campaign a top priority, and

WHEREAS, taking a position is not an end; it is a beginning of a continuing campaign in which the AFT will absorb all its energies, time, and money, and

WHEREAS, in all our strikes we have only one strong source of support—the organized labor movement, and whatever position we take we will be alienating major union support which we will need again, and

WHEREAS, we oppose taking any positions which identify the AFT not merely with a desire for an end to the war but for a victory of the Vietcong, and any position for immediate withdrawal which does not clearly disassociate AFT from those who welcome a United States defeat and a Vietcong victory must be rejected, and

WHEREAS, the other resolution submitted for referendum in proposing a 1971 deadline for all troop withdrawal is, in effect, an immediate withdrawal position and because it makes no demands on the other side and offers no safeguards, it is tantamount to supporting a Vietcong victory; therefore, be it

RESOLVED: that we reaffirm the position voted by our entire membership in referendum that the AFT not take any position directly or indirectly on the war in Indochina.

Vote YES: Arguments for maintaining 'no-position'

Teachers, like all other citizens, want to see an end to the war in Indochina. Starting with that premise, we know, too, that teachers, like all other citizens, are very divided on the way in which the war can be ended.

We must take NO POSITION on this issue because:

- It seriously divides our membership. By alienating large groups of our members—as well as thousands of teachers we seek to organize—we will be weakening our union and our ability to continue building a strong, united teacher organization.
- Whatever position we take, we will be alienating needed allies in the labor movement and other groups, whose support we will be needing again and again in forthcoming struggles.
- We will dissipate needed time and energy of our union in implementation of a foreign policy stand—at a time when we must be unified in a continuing effort to organize and to engage in the fight to save as well as improve public education in our nation.
- Teachers can work most effectively for peace in organizations established for that purpose, while our union stays united and strong to carry on the fight for educational and social progress.

The fact is the question of the war in Indochina is one which seriously divides the membership of AFT, as it does our nation. It is the kind of issue which can take us back to the '30s, when teacher unionists split into different organizations over political and international questions, and were kept from building a strong organization at a time when other unions were growing.

We should learn from our own history that issues so divisive can do long-standing damage to our union. We can be prevented from growing and from meeting our many union struggles successfully.

The major job of AFT is to remain strong and united so that we can continue to organize and to meet the needs of teachers struggling throughout the nation for better salaries, working conditions, and educational improvements. AFT members who wish to be active on the issue of the war have adequate opportunity for doing so in organizations established for that purpose, without dividing the AFT.

We must continue to take "no position" so that our union meetings — executive boards, state and national bodies are not prevented from acting on vital trade union and education issues because of a great deal of time consumed in discussing implementation of a foreign policy stand. We have already seen much needed convention time dominated by this one issue while dozens of items of urgent concern to teachers were abandoned.

And, taking a position on the war is only the beginning—we will be submerged in discussion after discussion on how to carry out that policy. We will be asked to take ads, sponsor demonstrations, contribute funds—and even then, our effect as a union on the conduct of the war will undoubtedly be negligible. Teachers can be most effective working for peace in other organizations and in political campaigns — without dividing and therefore weakening their union.

We must continue to take

Vote NO: Arguments for repealing 'no-position'

The basic question facing members of the American Federation of Teachers in this referendum question is whether teachers, as a group, have achieved the self-confidence, integrity, and courage to speak out on questions of national significance.

We are not voting to adopt a particular viewpoint on the war in Indochina. That decision can come later, either in the other part of this referenda or in future votes. What is at issue is whether teachers will be bound by the old policy of noninvolvement. A "no" vote to repeal this policy will mean teachers can stand up and be counted.

Each June, large numbers of our graduates leave the public schools for battlefields in Indochina. It is neither supportive of nor fair to them for their teachers to maintain a collective silence as they march off to battle.

Neither is it fair to the teaching profession as a whole.

Ever since the beginning of U.S. public education in 1834, American teachers have permitted the development of a national myth which paints teachers as meek, uninvolved, disengaged, unquestioning public servants, in the worst sense of that word.

The past decade has seen part of this image erased, through strikes and other militant action to bring about collective bargaining and a share of teacher power in running the schools.

Now, it is time to overcome the rest of the myth. A "no" vote to repeal our "no-stand" position will demonstrate once and for all that teachers are not afraid to use their education, their dedication to their students and their profession, and their experience to speak out on any issue which affects society.

The union has begun to develop a record of taking stands on foreign policy. AFT conventions have taken unequivocal positions on recent events in Czechoslovakia, Ireland, the United Nations, and elsewhere.

A "no" vote would also place AFT members in good company both within the labor movement and among many of our professional colleagues in education and other fields.

For example, even the 130,000-member National Council of Teachers of English (NCTE), to which many of us belong, has, as an organization, taken a stand against the war in Indochina. Other professional groups which, as organizations, have adopted official positions opposing the war include the Organization of American Historians, the Modern Language Association (whose membership is composed of language teachers in colleges and universities), the Student NEA, and the 25,000-member American Public Health Association.

George Meany has spoken out in favor of the Nixon Administration's policies in Indochina; but he has spoken out. And he's gone a step farther: While the AFL-CIO "takes a very practical view of the situation," he has said, "Not everybody in the labor movement agrees, there's dissent, and there's no objection to dissent."

Those who argue that taking a stand on the war would put us in bad stead with Brother Meany and the AFL-CIO have not read, or choose to ignore, his words.

Scores of unions have adopted official positions right "that you won't recognize it," he knows the direction our policies are leading us. A nation which must keep down dissent at all costs, which spends the bulk of its federal income on a military adventure, which plans to keep 250,000 troops in Vietnam for years to come (according to the staff report last February of the Foreign Relations Committee), must be turned to a new course.

Many other "nonpolitical" groups in this country have spoken out. Scientific and professional groups and other AFL-CIO labor unions have taken a stand. We cannot avoid our responsibility, through our union, to do the same.

The teachers of this country have a moral obligation to speak out through the AFT, through the referendum ballot, against this insane war and its effect upon all our lives.

A way to strike a blow for sanity is to strike a blow for peace, and to vote "yes" on the resolution chosen by a vote of AFT convention delegates to be presented to the membership.

Vote 'NO'

The unilateral withdrawal position will make the fight for education funds more difficult. It will alienate large groups of our own members, as well as our friends outside our union. For the coming period what we need most is unity—within the AFT and among the labor and civil rights communities, in each of which there are differences on how to end the war. Those differences are apparent—and even if we passed this resolution, we would have little or no effect as a union on the conduct of the war. We can, as teachers, work for peace more effectively in peace organizations and political groups—and prevent a split within our union ranks.

Let's concern ourselves first with our own priorities in building a strong, united, national teacher union. Our strength will be needed for the many struggles ahead.

"no position" also so that we do not alienate not only large groups of our own members, but many needed allies in the labor movement and other organizations. Whatever position we might take, we will be alienating major union support, which we will need again and again in strike situations and in other struggles.

Furthermore, it is not true that an end to the war—which we all want—will automatically deliver desperately needed funds to education. There will still be a struggle for a reordering of priorities, for greater spending for social programs. The teacher union movement, along with the rest of the labor movement, is and will continue to be a major force in the battle to channel our nation's resources into education, jobs, health, housing, and other vital programs. If we are splintered over a foreign policy issue our ability to play a role in bringing together a solid coalition for progress will be terribly hampered.

Taking "no position" on the war in Indochina does not mean that AFT members should not be actively concerned with securing peace in Vietnam. The question is whether AFT members should do it through the AFT itself or the many other organizations in which they can better accomplish these goals.

To keep the AFT united and strong, vote YES for NO POSITION.

against the war. They include: the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO; the United Auto Workers; the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union; the Retail, Wholesale, and Department Store Union, AFL-CIO; the United Electrical Workers; the AFL-CIO Central Labor Council of Alameda County, Calif.; District 65 of the Wholesale, Retail, Office, and Processing Union; the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen, AFL-CIO; the American Newspaper Guild, AFL-CIO, and a wide cross-section of other international and local unions—white collar and blue collar, professional and industrial.

AFT President David Selden declared on the floor of the 1970 convention: "This issue divides the liberal community. As long as we do not come out against the war, we divide our strength in politics and in almost every endeavor. The time has come to reunite the liberal community behind an antiwar position."

Our "no-position" stand has, indeed, divided us. During the past two years, state and local AFT affiliates with a combined membership of more than 60,000 have ignored the national's "no-position" stand and have voted opposition to the war as their official policies. One local, with about the same number of members, voted in agreement with the "no-stand" position. The rest have not taken up the issue.

We are divided. It is time to reunite.

It is time to vote "no" to repeal a tired, impotent position that hamstrings us from speaking out as an important national force on the key issue of our time, an issue that deeply affects our students and ourselves.

Liberate the teaching profession. Vote "no."

PROCEDURE FOR CONDUCTING THE AFT REFERENDA ON THE WAR IN INDOCHINA

1. Two referenda are submitted for membership vote on one ballot. The resolution referred by the Convention has been counterposed by the resolution submitted by 19 locals. Since the proposals are mutually exclusive, members should vote FOR only one or the other. Members may vote AGAINST either or both.
2. The time table (as established by date of official notice to locals) of the referenda is as follows:
   - Sept. 4, 1970.....Date notice was mailed
   - Sept. 4 to Oct. 16.....Debate
   - Oct. 16 to Nov. 16.....Balloting
   - Nov. 16.....Last date for receipt of ballots

   Be sure ballots are mailed in plenty of time to reach Washington, D.C., on or before Monday, November 16.
3. Each local which holds a membership meeting for the purpose of discussing the referenda shall give equal opportunity for proponents and opponents to present their arguments.
4. All voting on the referenda is to be by individual members and cast on official ballots. Each member is entitled to cast one ballot.
5. Ballots are secret. The only marks on the ballot should be your local number as required by the AFT constitution, and your "X". Written remarks, names and other marks which may tend to identify the member will invalidate the ballot. If the member wishes to make comments or send any information to the AFT, he should send them to the AFT office and not include any extraneous material in the ballot envelope.
6. To insure a secret ballot, a double envelope system is used:
   a. The member seals the ballot in the ballot envelope.
   b. The ballot envelope is then sealed in the return envelope.
   c. The member places the local's name and number and his name and address on the return envelope.

   In the counting process the member's eligibility to vote is checked. In order to vote, the member must be current with his dues in a local that is in good standing with the AFT. Once eligibility has been determined, the ballot envelopes are removed from the return envelopes and placed with other ballot envelopes in such a manner as to prevent any knowledge of how the individual cast his vote.
7. No officer or member of a local is entitled to cast more than one ballot.
8. Ballots shall be sent only to members of locals that are in good standing as of October 2, 1970. Ballots received from members of locals not in good standing as of November 16, 1970 shall not be counted.
9. Each local is entitled to as many votes as it has paid per-capita in the National office.
10. The AFT President, accompanied by representatives of the pro and con position, will sign for the ballots and remove them from the bank vault and cause the ballots to be counted.
11. The majority vote of all members of the American Federation of Teachers in good standing, whose ballots are cast in conformity with these regulations, shall be necessary for the adoption of either resolution.
12. Please refer to the October issue of the American Teacher for the arguments on both referenda. (Copies of the issue can be obtained from the AFT office, 1012 14th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20005.)

Your attention is directed to the following items:

1. As directed by the membership at our meeting in D. C., Local 189 contributed $300 of its Defense Funds to the strikers at G.E. In addition, ndividual collections at the meeting and, subsequently, several others, have netted another $273.

The strike appears to be over -- but strike expenses will go on for some time.

If you have not yet made a contribution--and wish to do so--please use the attached form.

2. The D. C. Meeting was a reasonably good one. We had a good attendance and interest in the program appeared more than sufficient.

The Minutes - which usually take a bit of time to prepare - are now near completion and should be out shortly.

3. ULEA is sponsoring a "GALAXY" Labor Education Conference on May 7, 8 and 9, 1970, in Columbus, Ohio. Labor and University Labor Educators - as well as other allied groups - are invited to attend and participate.

The Local 189 Program and meeting will start shortly after noon on May 7. Set the dates aside.

There is still a possibility that these dates may be changed.

RESOLUTION ON THE G.E. STRIKE

Workers Education Local 189 supports fully the workers now on strike against the General Electric Company. We condemn the persistent refusal of G.E. to engage in meaningful collective bargaining.

We see a victory for these strikers as essential to stop an obvious drive by management to significantly weaken the trade union movement in the United States.

Members of Local 189 are hereby asked to become involved whenever possible in developing community support for this strike.

Local 189, as a token of its support, hereby donates $300 from the Defense Fund to the strike committees made up of the cooperating unions conducting the strike.

Local 189 members are also asked to individually contribute at least $3.00 each to the strike fund on a voluntary basis.

TEN WEEK APPRENTICESHIP

IN LABOR EDUCATION OFFERED BY LOCAL 189, AFT

A ten week training program in labor education and an $800 scholarship is being offered by Workers Education Local 189, AFT to a man or woman qualified for and interested in a career in labor education.

Now in its fifth year, the Local 189 annual apprenticeship program seeks to find new people for the field of labor education. The aim of the program is to give training to a younger man or woman who would like to make labor education a career but who needs more know-how. Among those particularly eligible to apply for the scholarship are union members who have been active in educational work in their unions, school or college teachers, and graduate students in the social sciences.

This year the Local 189 apprentice will spend most of his internship working in a union or university labor education program under the guidance of an experienced labor educator. In addition, the apprentice will spend at least a week in Washington, D. C., becoming acquainted with the AFL-CIO education program and the education personnel of the various international unions.

Labor education is the branch of adult education dealing with the educational needs of union members, particularly those active as stewards, officers and full-time representatives. Qualifications for work in labor education include experience with the labor movement, understanding of educational principles, and familarity with such subjects as collective bargaining, economics, union administration, legislation and politics.

Deadline for applications is April 30, 1969. For application forms and more detaled information, write: 1969 Labor Education Internship, 535 Clemens Drive, Florissant, Missouri 63033.

MINUTES

LOCAL 189, AFT

SPRING MEETING
Benjamin Franklin Hotel
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

May 20, 1969

The Spring meeting of Local 189, AFT, opened at 4:30 p.m. with song. Amie Millstone, a student at Penn State and daughter of a Meatcutters organizer, accompanying herself with guitar, sang a moving selection of folk songs from the labor movement and student protest movement.

President Stanley Rosen said that in keeping with the mood of the songs and issues that had been raised in AFL-CIO-ULEA meetings during the day, that the Spring meeting of Local 189, in addition to regular business, would present several speakers on "relevant issues" of the day.

Roll call of officers indicated ten officers present. Approximately 100 members and guests were present at the meeting.

MILITANCY FUND REPORT

Chairman John Schmidman reported on behalf of Militancy Fund that Local 189's contribution to the AFT Militancy Fund stood at $777.01. He indicated that Local 189's contribution is likely the highest of any local on a per capita basis. Schmidman also said that individual donations by members indicated that the "highest paid labor educators have also been the most conscience-striken." Donations are still welcome.

TREASURER'S REPORT

A copy of the Local 189 Financial Report for 1968 was circulated. Treasurer Tapper said that the local had "made some money" since the restructuring of the dues. He indicated also that the membership was at an all-time high, "although it is difficult to tell exactly how many members we have at any one time . . . since they come and go."

Motion by Joan Suarez, seconded by John Schmidman to accept Treasurer Tapper's report with congratulations on the first straight-forward report since he took office. Passed with wild cheers.

Brother Tapper announced that the Directory, which is printed in the identical colors as last year's, the Green Bay Packer colors, will go in the mail to the membership soon.

MINUTES OF LAST MEETING

Minutes of the Winter Meeting, 1968, were approved as mailed to the membership. Copies were on hand for reference.

Secretary Joan Suarez read notes of the Executive Board minutes. They were, in general, approved, but they will be mailed to the membership with the Spring meeting minutes for full appraisal.

RELATIONSHIPS WITH AFL-CIO & ULEA

President Rosen told the membership of recent meetings with Walter Davis, Education Director of the AFL-CIO and Herb Levine, Chairman of the ULEA, to discuss Local 189's relationship with and to these two groups in regard to the annual Spring meetings.

The discussions had come about as a result of a motion passed at the Fall, 1968 membership meeting requesting the President to explore the possibility of Local 189 securing more equitable arrangements, i.e.--time, space, consultations and content.

President Rosen said that Local 189 was "not interested in confrontation but recognition." The result of the discussions with Brothers Davis and Levine resulted in a proposal by Davis that Local 189 have one entire day at the Spring meetings, followed by one day for the AFL-CIO and the ULEA to meet separately and one day for joint meetings. The Board, President Rosen reported, found these proposals satisfactory.

Holgate Young responded by saying that if this plan had been ratified, he only hoped next year Local 189 might come back with "more of the loaf" by securing some agreement that Local 189 have some voice in the "flavor" and arrangements for the jointly held Spring meetings. He said he sees Local 189 "as the only hope."

FURTHER RESPONSE TO EXECUTIVE BOARD NOTES

Brother Mark Starr rose to point out that along with the Haymarket Memorial the Ashville Central Labor Council is setting up a committee to work out a commemoration meeting for the Marion, North Carolina Massacre of 1929 and that we should also be doing something about the ILO 50th Anniversary celebration.

President Rosen indicated the International Affairs Committee of Local 189 would be making a report on the ILO Anniversary. He said there have been so many massacres that the Local is not in a position to do much more than send a resolution. Brother Art Carstens suggested we might find something to do with the 50 saint days that are now open.

FALL MEETING DATES DISCUSSED

President Rosen called the Executive Board recommendation as to dates for the Fall meeting to the attention of the body. Holgate Young moved that the Executive Board recommendation of November 21-23 in Washington, D. C. be approved. Seconded by Stuart Brock. Passed. Anyone with ideas for meeting content, pass them on!

Wells Keddie, Chairman of the Constitution and By-Laws Committee reported there were no constitutional amendments proposed. The chair remarked on the landmark . . . our first meeting in years that no dues changes were proposed!

IRWIN KELLY, PRESIDENT OF AFT LOCAL 1352, IS GUEST SPEAKER

Irwin Kelly, responding to his introduction as President of the AFT local at San Francisco State College and Labor Economist, said that he had elsewhere heard himself described as "radical, anarchist, fascist and new barbarian among other things." He said it was a pleasure to be simply described as a local union president.

Brother Kelly said his first duty was to bring the message of 300 starving teachers at San Francisco State who are willing and able to teach in summer labor programs. He explained that those who had been on strike at San Francisco State had missed a quarter of their year's pay. Some 700 people had been arrested in the course of the strike and the student demonstrations. He said the local was still trying to raise money to pay fines and bail.

He told of the case of Roger Alvarado who was arrested, jailed without bail for 21 days. Alvarado had never been recorded as committing or asking anyone to commit an act of violence, in fact was known on campus for his stand on non-violence. Alvarado, Kelly said, has now been sentenced to 100 days in jail. (A letter over Alvarado's signature appealing for donations to the San Francisco State Legal Defense Fund was circulated at the meeting and is attached to the minutes.)

In referring to an exchange between himself and Bayard Rustin in an earlier meeting, Brother Kelly chose to quote John F. Kennedy in saying "Those who make peaceful revolution impossible, make violent revolution inevitable." He said the teacher decision to organize and strike for their union came when the teachers who had stepped between student strikers (who he said had not been destructive of property or life) and the police found themselves being clubbed right along with the students.

Brother Kelly said that issues today for students are not really any different than they have been for workers seeking industrial justice through unionization. He said the new generation is not revolutionary at all. Workers asked what is management going to do for workers and when the answer "nothing" became apparent the workers organized and struck when they had to to gain their goals. Students are now asking what is a college going to do for minority groups.

Out of the student demonstrations, the teachers strike and the reaction of the administration, all very painful experiences, Kelly said, alliances formed. He said several other unions became sympathetic to the teachers strike when they had strikes of their own during the same time period and their strikes found out what they had forgotten about the police.

WILBERT HEARD, RECORDING SECRETARY, LOCAL 174, UAW ALSO SPEAKS

Addressing himself to problems of black union members, Brother Heard said that working conditions in the shops in Detroit for black workers were the same today as they were in the 1930's. He said minority workers get the hard, dirty jobs in the shops; that when a black worker and a white worker are hired at the same time, the black goes straight to the assembly line while in most cases the white worker goes to an inspection job or some other cleaner work.

These conditions, he said, are what led to the formation of DRUM (the Dodge Revolutionary Union Movement) and other black caucus groups within UAW shops and other union shops throughout the country. He said that the leaders in this movement are militant blacks many of whom are Vietnam veterans.

He charged that the grievance system has broken down in most UAW shops. That the company, by design or not, ties up the Committeemen . . . wines and dines them . . .he charged that few blacks are in apprenticeship programs and that the few black supervisors are so carefully selected that they are like puppets.

He charged, too, that the union discriminates by not having blacks in decision-making positions. . . only two blacks hold any kind of decision-making jobs in the UAW. While blacks may outnumber the whites in a local, UAW policy to allow retirees to continue active membership means that white retiree voices out-vote working blacks, and that the retirees are sympathetic to the top leadership. He said that blacks are elevated to leadership position in the local unions, but only those who can be controlled by the leadership.

Brother Heard said that 26 members of DRUM were fired when they first started picketting at Dodge plant #3. The fired workers went to Solidarity House to get help, but, he said, the union supported the company's stand because the UAW doesn't want a movement within a movement. Brother Heard asked, "what does the union expect when they do nothing to help change the situation faced by minority workers in the plant?"

He said what is needed is for people to find out for themselves what is going on. Heard said radical changes are needed in the labor movement and most change in America has come through violence. He said he hoped violence would not be necessary to achieve equality for all workers within the plant and within their union.

RESOLUTIONS

Resolutions on Labor Education and the Arts and Commending AFT President Dave Selden for his testimony before the Congress on the Higher Education Act were passed. Copies of these two resolutions are attached.

A third resolution on Unity Among Labor Educators was referred to the Executive Officers for language clarifications. It will be sent out to the membership after revision.

President Rosen read his proposal entitled "Protecting Job Rights of Local 189 Members." Motion by Mil Liberthal that the proposal be referred to the Executive Board for revision and consideration. Seconded. Passed.

COMMITTEE REPORTS

The International Affairs Committee report was received via a copy of a letter from Roger Snow to Committee Chairman Bill Kemsley reporting on the outcome of survey of university labor education programs in the area of foreign policy and workers' education outside the United States. A copy of the report is attached.

President Rosen reported for Oliver Peterson, Chairman of the Labor Education History Committee saying that the committee is continuing to circulate its plea for information.

Keith Knauss, Chairman of the Membership Committee reminded the membership that each one should be an organizer for Local 189.

Jim Wolfe, Chairman of the Chapter Development Committee indicated his committee had been given an extension of time and would report at the Fall meeting.

The Internship Committee reported through Chairman Joan Suarez that the final selection of the 1969 Intern was underway and that a sponsor for the entire eight-to-ten week program had been found. The Textile Workers Union of America will have charge of the Intern with Education Director Steve Remsen coordinating the program. The announcement of the intern selection will be made shortly and a news release will be circulated.

John Schmidman, Chairman of the Viewpoints Committee said he had literally no response for articles to be published in Viewpoints. He indicated there will be a continuing evaluation of how to establish a publication. Holgate Young indicated he thinks Viewpoints should be continued.

GOOD & WELFARE

President Rosen indicated that a number of proposals sent to Local 189 by Brother Bill Abbott will be circulated with the minutes (see attached).

Brother Mark Starr said most of the membership knows much too little about the ICFTU. Indicated he had a multilingual structure book for sale.

Motion made, seconded and passed to empower President Rosen to select a present for Brother Bill Elkuss who is recovering from heart surgery.

The meeting was adjourned sometime before 7:00 p.m.

Respectfully submitted,

Joan Suarez

ALVARADO LETTER

May 14, 1969

To the Editor:

The strike of Third World peoples and white supportors at San Francisco State College was a part of expanding the movement in this country toward liberation. It was a strike, an action with a direction toward a revolutionary level because it was based upon principles drawn from the foundation of oppressed Third World peoples' needs.

There are some fundamental questions concerning the strike and its history that directly relate to the expansion and development of the movement into a more cohesive and powerful force of the people. The hows, whys, whats, wheres of the strike cannot be overlooked in determining guidelines for the work - work not so glorious and saleable as the strike - that need to be recognized if we are to continue to move and not be overrun by the tremendous powers being concentrated against the people at this time.

For over two and a half years people worked at San Francisco State College and in the Bay Area on the educational needs of Third World people. Not just at the College, or in schools, but in the streets, in people's homes, with juvenile authorities, city officials, gangs, car clubs, Y's, in bars and on and on and on. People worked together and learned together what the general and specific needs of Third World people were and continued not only to educate others but also to develop their understanding and ability to relate to the people's needs. The three principles of the strike were established from this committment and work. In turn the principles of the strike have demonstrated the clear oppressiveness of higher education.

The duration of the strike, the strike strategy, as well as the organization and flexibility of the strike came from the perspectives and politics of a continuously developing programmatic approach to making basic changes in this country. In no way do I imply or contend that mistakes were not made during this strike. However, it is a fact that for the first time in this country: 1) a working class institution of the largest higher educational system in the world was brought to its knees and held there for four and a half months - Hayakawa or no Hayakawa; 2) Third World people defined principles and demands concerning their needs; 3) Third World people established and maintained leadership of the strike that was recognized and accepted by large numbers of white people; 4) college professors organized and acted as members of the working class; 5) a coalition of Third World people in their communities and young Third World people in the elite institutions of higher education was formed: 6) a coalition between Third World people and a workers union striking Standard Oil in Richmond was made. These events did not occur because of a sham - they occurred because people understood the necessity of these actions and coalitions. The experiences of their daily committment and work among oppressed Third World people taught this necessity.

Since the end of the strike the work has increased far beyond anything that it was before and during the strike. We are actively working not only to implement the demands but to extend our work more and more into our communities in defense of our people and our supporters. In the law courts specifically we are concerned about the 700 persons arrested during the strike. We have been able to find lawyers and provide a tremendous amount of assistance in an attempt to protect our people, but we need more people and more money. I know too well that these are the same old pleas, but it has been a long struggle and it's going to take more time, more people and more money. I can only ask you that if you supported the strike, agreed with its principles and/or understand the rights of people to be liberated not just in their souls, hearts and minds but in their material needs as well, then give to yourself the opportunity to continue to develop your involvement. We need you and your money (if you have any) to protect our people in the courts in order to exhaust another alternative and push ourselves into another direction. The work is ours and the money is needed to get the tools necessary for defending our people.

Hasta la victoria siempre,

SELDEN TESTIMONY

We include a reproduction of excerpts from the excellent statement made by AFT President, David Selden, before the House Special Subcommittee on Education on March 21st.

The hearings held under the direction of Edith Green, Representative from Oregon, were for the purpose of receiving testimony concerning college student unrest and possible strengthening of the punitive sections already outlined in the Higher Education Act of 1965 as amended in Section 504 in 1968.

Section 504 provides for denial for a period of two years federal aid or assistance to any student convicted of a crime or involved "in the use of force, disruption, or the seizure of property under control of any institution of higher education."

Whereas:AFT President David Selden testified before the House Special Committee: "we are opposed to those provisions of Section 504 which single out for punitive action students who receive federal assistance by authorizing colleges to withhold such assistance from students who engage in activities which tend to disrupt the operation of a college or a university. We support the U. S. Supreme Court decisions which affirm the rights of students to engage in peaceful protest on school property as well as at other locations.[1]

"It is the position of the American Federation of Teachers that the objectionable features of Paragraph 504 should be repealed for the following reasons:

"(1) The legislation is an unwarranted interference in local affairs by the federal government. It does not provide for flexible enforcement by local officials in the light of local conditions.

"(2) Our colleges and universities do need major changes. College administrations and trustees, in some instances backed by reactionary state administrations, have been resistant to change through the normal process of petition. By their inaction they invite unrest and disruption. Often the only legitimate way to advocate needed change is through protest activity.

"(3) There are no guarantees of due process for individuals who may be hurt by this legislation. The Chairman has stated her support for amendments seeking to guarantee fair treatment. However, it would be difficult to design proper machinery without cumbersome administrative procedures. Inevitably the provision justifies and encourages surveillance of the activities of individual students and student organizations. It attempts to create an enforcement mechanism which, in order to justify its existence must find wrongdoing.

"(4) The legislation is discriminatory on a class and racial basis. A high proportion of students receiving federal assistance in proportion to those enrolled are non-white and many are poor. This law would wreck a harsh penalty on such students, while the rich remain outside its scope.

LABOR EDUCATION AND INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

May 16, 1969

Mr. Bill Kemsley
Chairman, International Affairs Committee
Labor Relations and Research Center
111 Draper Hall
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, Massachusetts 01002

Dear Bill:

I have completed - insofar as responses permit - a survey of labor education centers throughout the United States and Puerto Rico concerning their activities in the area of:

(1) Programs concerned with United States foreign policy or with the foreign policies of other countries.

(2) Programs concerned with labor education or workers' problems outside the United States.

A totoal of 22 universities responded out of 28 queried.

It would be my interpretation of your desires and the desires of other members of the committee, as expressed at our meeting in Washington November 22, that this survey fulfills my responsibilities to the committee in the absence of further direction.

In other words, we have merely assembled certain facts and made no effort to interpret them or form conclusions from them. Perhaps the committee will want to examine the results of the survey and then decide what further action, if any, it wishes to take.

I am enclosing one hundred copies of survey results for such distribution as you may wish to make.

Coridally,

1. Have you conducted, do you conduct, or do you plan to conduct any programs for employee groups which deal in any major way with United States foreign policy or with the foreign policies of other countries?

Yes 12 No 10

American University - co-sponsored several "labor" credit programs with the School for International Service; used standard texts and special material.

University of California at Los Angeles - held a conference in April on Worldwide Survey of Labor Programs and Problems; each of the summer schools includes at least one session on foreign policy.

University of Colorado - sessions that are part of monthly series of 2-1/2 hour programs of a "Labor Leaders" Seminar primarily for full-time union staff people; stimulated considerable interest; used a variety of books, pamphlets, articles.

Cornell University (New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations) - special programs in the New York City area of 5 sessions in 1966 on foreign policy; 6 sessions in 1966-67 on the defense program; high degree of interest; used articles by instructor, Congressional documents, 2 paperbacks.

Harvard Trade Union Program - material covered in course on "International Labor Affairs"; evaluated very favorably by students; uses mimeographed materials.

University of Illinois - Division of University Extension has had a program on "Labor's Stake in World Affairs and Trade".

Indiana University - one-session programs, such as speaker on Russia at graduation banquet, dinner meeting on Cuba; hopes to add "graduate course" on foreign affairs to Union Leadership Programs now conducted in 4 cities; two 1-1/2 day seminars on foreign policy in mid '60's; successful but grant expired.

University of Iowa - union sessions on foreign policy and the war; not very successful.

University of Michigan - evening program in CWA week-long leadership school, which includes foreign policy among subjects; foreign policy also discussed in Labor School; successful considering limited discussion - participants interested and active in discussion.

University of Minnesota - Annual Labor and World Affairs Forum, co-sponsored by Minnesota Trade Union Council for Histradrut - entire program deals with Mideast problems, American foreign policy in relation to these problems and foreign policy implications related to war in Vietnam; extremely successful; materials developed by University of Minnesota World Affairs Center and those obtained through connection with Histradrut.

Questionnaire Results - 2

Pennsylvania State University - in 1956, a one-week Steelworkers Institute on International Affairs; discontinued because students felt this was too much time to devote to a "distant" topic.

West Virginia University - planned program under Title I of Higher Education Act to trace labor's involvement in U. S. foreign policy; cancelled due to personnel changes.

2. Have you conducted, do you conduct or plan to conduct any programs for workers' groups which deal with labor education or workers' problems outside the United States?

Yes 8 No 14

American University - held a special short course on European-American Unions - a Comparison; canceled due to lack of students; others under discussion for the future; a contemplated special course in the fall of 1968 given up primarily due to a cutback in government agency (AID).

University of Colorado - 3-credit course, "The Role of Labor in the 20th Century", dealing with the labor movement in the U. S. and other parts of the world, both "developed" and "developing"; successful and continuing.

Harvard Trade Union Program - special sessions to compare worker education techniques because of overseas students in each session; very successful; use research of individual students plus class discussion and comparison.

University of Minnesota - several of the long-term courses in the Union Leadership Academy and Basic Labor School have included sessions on workers' problems outside the U. S.

University of Missouri - as the opportunity arises, foreign trade union problems and labor education outside the U. S. will be programmed.

Pennsylvania State University - has conducted such programs in the past but not at present and not planned for the future.

University of Puerto Rico - in 1959 held a one-month program conducted by entire teaching staff of Institute for 50 workers in El Salvador from the trade union organization; courses have also been conducted for trade union leaders from Bolivia, staff members have taught courses in British Guiana and Jamaica; discontinued because graduates ready to offer the courses in their own countries and because of policy changes in one of the sponsoring agencies. Latin American Leadership Program - included History of the Labor Movement, Collective Bargaining and Labor Relations, Union Organization and Administration, Labor Union Journalism and Public Relations, Labor Legislation, Labor Economics, Educational Methods and Techniques; Occupational Medicine and Safety, Cooperativism; programs highly rated.

University of Wisconsin - occasional general session meetings on the introductory level in international labor problems for U. S. workers.

Additional Comments included the following:

One University "would be glad to do more work in this field if more union leaders felt that what happens in other parts of the world also affects their life and their future."

"This area was rehased many times before and I see no useful or constructive purpose to retalk it."

". . . in the matter of international affairs, the AFL-CIO has been extremely aggressive and in a sense has pre-empted this field for itself, leaving scraps to universities."

"Since AFL-CIO policies (on foreign policy) are usually more reactionary than those of the State Department, it's a good area to stay out of."

PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS FOR COMMUNITY EDUCATORS

A proposal to create professional standards for those entering the field of community leadership training.

This proposal would place Local 189, AFT, AFL-CIO, in the role of a professional association which certifies community educators. Local 189 is the logical organization for such an undertaking because it is a union of persons who are devoting their lives to leadership training of low income individuals.

The proposal would aid the Model Cities and Community Action Programs which should be looking for skilled, competent individuals to conduct leadership training programs in their target areas. Too often, "trainers" are political patronage appointees with little or no training in the field. A training program of community educators would materially improve governmental antipoverty programs.

The Plumber's Union has an apprenticeship program which, when successfully completed means certification in the plumbing trade. The American Medical Association certifies doctors. Certainly, a teacher's association must do the same thing if the teaching profession is to gain any respect.

THE TRAINING PROGRAM

There would be an experimental program in a community where Local 189 has strength. A Local 189 committee would draw up the first program which may last anywhere from ten weeks to four months, evening classes. Successful completion would lead to certification.

Students might well include those already working in government programs, leaders of the poor, university students, private citizens who wish to enter the field.

After several pilot programs, each one presumably getting better by learning from past mistakes, the entire program would be ready to package and distribute to the rest of the country.

Such a course would probably include: parliamentary procedure, public speaking, community services, consumer counselling, community organization and mobilization techniques, ethics, basic sociology and political science, labor and ethnic group history, newsletter writing.

LABOR AND ETHNIC STUDIES

A proposal to integrate labor studies into a general ethnic studies program.

Most universities, and certainly most high schools, do not have any labor studies worthy of the name. The working class and the poor are nonexistent as far as most institutions of learning are concerned. If any "labor" is taught at all, it is usually taught by a management oriented professor of Business Administration. The average student has no way of studying labor even if he wanted to.

Because of the drive for centers of ethnic studies on college campuses, labor has the best opportunity in its entire history of gaining a major foothold in academia.

A one year Labor and Ethnic Studies Project would include the following:

1. Meeting with civil rights leaders, students, faculty members and administrators of selected universities to determine how a labor studies program would fit into the general concept of ethnic studies.

   There is a distinct labor subculture. "Labor" is also a social and economic class.

2. A coordinator would meet with a committee from Local 189 to draw up a program based on a report of the talks with the abovementioned individuals.

3. A selected university would be asked to cooperate in launching this pilot program in its general ethnic studies center.

4. The program would include working with the entire ethnic studies problem in light of labor education's past work in using the university to train persons who do not have high school diplomas.

   Local 189 can help the university administration meet black and third world demands by drawing up a program based on labor education's practical experience in working with low income individuals.

   Labor educators are the only people who have really had experience in conducting programs for people without high school degrees and who need to study their own heritage and subculture. This experience should be put to use.

TRAINING EDUCATION REPRESENTATIVES IN THE GHETTO

A proposal to train educational representatives for work in the ghetto.

In Washington, D. C. and its surrounding area Local 189, AFT, AFL-CIO has almost 70 members.

This is to propose a one year experimental program under the direction of Local 189 to train persons raised in the ghetto in the skills of an education representative similar to union education representatives.

What the poor need is leadership development. They need men to instruct them and guide them who have a variety of skills. Such skills would include teaching classes in parliamentary procedure, public speaking, and consumer counselling. The Education Rep. must know how to run a mimeograph machine and how to put out a newsletter and special leaflets. He must know the social and health agencies in order to set up a community services training program. He has to know organizational and collective bargaining techniques.

Only labor educators are skilled in training such individuals. And Local 189 is the only professional association concerned with the field of training low income leaders. Local 189, by making the selection of the trainees, could begin to establish some professional standards and would keep education out of politics, something which is next to impossible in a government program.

THE PROGRAM OUTLINE

Local 189 would select ten potential education representatives. While there would be a director or coordinator of the program, a member of the local would adopt one of the trainees and give him personal counselling throughout the year.

The program would begin with a weekend seminar with the trainees and their Local 189 counsellors. Key figures in government and private antipoverty programs would come in for purposes of discussion as well as some critics.

The representatives would be assigned to existing projects of CAP, Model Cities, church or other programs. They would, therefore, work in the field. Periodically, however, they would reassemble for reflection and actual training. They would be receiving content and skill instruction by attending a special once-a-week evening class conducted by the coordinator. If their assigned activities do not fill the bill they might branch out into their own activities which they may consider more meaningful.

ORGANIZED PROFESSIONALS AGAINST POVERTY

"The white middle class. That's where the power is and that's where the decisions will be made for the next decade or longer. I've spent my life organizing the poor, but now I'm going to start organizing the middle class."

- Saul Alinsky

A proposal to:

1. Establish an organization of professionals which would provide a community resources pool and a coordinating agency for a full mobilization of anti-poverty efforts.

2. The publication of a community resources directory which would list labor, business, church, government, student, and other private antipoverty efforts.

3. A community trainers' bureau with Local 189 members as the nucleus.

4. A community action newsletter.

5. Publication of a community action handbook.

The organization would redefine the expression "community action", making it broader in scope. Presumably, a non-governmental organization would be able to say things and do things which an agency connected with a governmental unit would not be able to do.

The Problem: There is no real coordination in antipoverty efforts. Each group had its own kingdom and often goes its own way. In Hawaii of 1969, there were five different departments, programs or groups of individuals engaged in antipoverty work, each group entirely independent of each other. This was at the University. The Model Cities Program had a leadership training program, so did the Community Action Program. A liberal Democratic Party group also had its program. The Inter-Faith Urban Council had its program which covered the same field. This is not to mention VISTA and the manpower programs which went their independent ways. Hawaii is not unique. This goes on all over the country. Not only is there a great waste of time and money in duplications of effort, but power struggles take place among the little kingdoms which drain off energies which could be better used fighting poverty.

THE DYNAMICS OF SOCIAL CHANGE

A proposal to conduct a training program leading to specific community action.

The purpose is to integrate labor educators, or union staffmen interested in adult education, with an equal number of selected leaders of the poor. The group would total no more than forty.

The group would first gather at a weekend seminar where they would study community organization. They would develop their own tentative interest areas and would divide into groups representing those interests. Examples: welfare recipients, community union, tenant's union, drop out rehabilitation, ethnic studies in the schools, transportation.

Each unit would work on its own project for a month. The entire group would then reassemble for a weekend where it would reasses itself in light of its undertakings. They would spend a day on community mobilization techniques. There will be some drop outs and the group may want to bring in some church community actionists, government antipoverty workers, social workers or other individuals it trusts. Disruptionists must be taboo.

Work is then continued on the original project or there may be some new directions at this point. Flexibility is a must.

In six week's time there should be another weekend session with the entire group. Each action group will report and ask for advice from the other groups. Content education should include collective bargaining training. How do you bargain with the power structure?

This will probably be an extremely sensitive session. The poor may decide it wants its own caucus. The middle class professionals usually do some serious group soul searching, asking themselves if they are really cut out for this kind of activity. They may well decide they are only useful in a supportive role. At this moment of truth, the roles will be more clear-cut; the poor will have to lead and the middle class will have to work out means of supporting them.

The end of the course should result in a permanent coordinating organization which coordinates the various units operating in the community and which is empowered to mobilize the groups behind an issue whenever the occasion demands.

THE HAWAIIAN PROGRAM

This proposal is based on an actual program conducted by the Labor-Management Education Program at the University of Hawaii. It had a Title I grant. The course was written up in the Nation and Progressive magazines.

Although largely a success, the experience showed a full time coordinator could have made it more successful. Everyone was on a volunteer, after hours basis, and much more could have been done with full time staff.

Mr. Walter Davis
Director of Education, AFL-CIO

Mrs. Lois Gray, Chairman
University Labor Education Association

Dear Walter and Lois:

This letter is to briefly summarize the deliberations of Local 189 as concerns plans for the 1970 and other future labor education meetings.

First, it was the feeling that the meetings should be held in the third week in May. This was after most people had completed their classes and before the summer school rush.

Second, It is proposed that the 1970 meeting be held in Minneapolis, the 1971 meeting be held in St. Louis, and that the 1972 meeting be held on the East Coast, as close to the former location of the Brookwood Labor College as possible.

1972 will be the 50th anniversary of the establishment of Brookwood College Local 189. We are in the process of setting up a special committee to develop meaningful plans to celebrate this important event. We would hope that this event would provide an opportunity to recognize many of the pioneers in the field, take stock of how far we have come, and look to the future.

Lastly, we would prefer to have our L 189 meeting on the day before the respective or joint ULEA and AFL-CIO Meetings. Our program would probably involve a full day conference program, with L 189 meeting during the evening.

I and the other officers are anxious to play a meaningful role in the various aspects of planning for these future meetings. While attendance by any one person in L 189 is often difficult, we can appoint a person to sit in on any meetings, if we are forewarned.

I personally will be East for the ILPA Convention in Atlantic City in September 28 - October 1. I and the other Officers will be participating in the Winter Meeting of L 189 in Washington, D. C. on the proposed date November 21 - 23.

If plans go well, Owen Tapper, Joan Suarez and I will be meeting in late August or early September. Possibly by that time plans will have jelled sufficiently for us to react to specifics.

Under any circumstances, we are available on the phone, or physically to work out questions or problems.

Thanking you very much for your consideration and with best regards, I remain

Sincerely and fraternally,

STATEMENTS OF CANDIDATES

OFFICE: PRESIDENT

CANDIDATE: STANLEY ROSEN

STATEMENT: 1. My present position is Co-ordinator of the Chicago Labor Education Program of the Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations, University of Illinois. This position entails work in the area of Program and Conference development, program administration, promotional activities, teaching and materials development.

My major area of concern is the development of a full scale labor education program in the Chicago Metropolitan area. I do however, participate in various conferences and classes in Champaign and in other areas of the state periodically.

2. The role of Local 189 should be:
   A. To work co-operatively with all agencies working in the field of workers education.
   B. To bring together all labor educators as individuals providing a vehicle for them to make a distinct and where appropriate a different contribution to the field.
   C. To build, through committees and activities a labor education movement in the United States.
   D. To provide opportunities for labor educators below the position of Director to participate more meaningfully in the field.
   E. To provide a link to the Teacher Movement and to the general labor movement by participation in the affairs of AFT.
   F. To develop procedures and approaches which serve to protect and enhance the job rights, wages and working conditions of labor educators.
   G. To provide a place where diverse and controversial views of consequence to labor educators can be aired and evaluated.

3. I propose to carry out this program by (1) strengthening the regional structure of the Local and by enhancing the role of the Regional Vice-Presidents, (2) by developing Executive Board policies which speak to the problems facing labor education in the U. S., (3) by co-operating with all other labor education agencies, (4) by strengthening the committees and Chapters of Local 189, (5) by continuing to strive for improved membership meetings and educational conferences.

OFFICE: VICE PRESIDENT

CANDIDATE: ANNE GREEN

STATEMENT: Current position: Education Associate, International Chemical Workers Union.
Past Labor Education Experience: CWA Materials Project
Education: MA, University of Illinois, Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations

Within Local 189, discussion and presentation of ideas on content and methods of Labor Education are readily available to every labor educator. For an inexperienced person, this forum atmosphere is an invaluable source of knowledge. This important function is performed uniquely by 189 without operating within a series of constraints imposed by non-educational interests. Obviously 189 should strive to inform all persons involved in labor education, whether inexperienced or experienced, of the local's availability, in order to continue successfully in this function. One method of reaching interested persons is the 189 internship. Although the present internship program should be re-examined as to its value to the intern as well as to 189, hopefully, the intern program will continue in some manner.

A major issue that confronts 189 members today concerns the local's position on its responsibilities as a bargaining agent for its constituency. Clearly, under the present administrative structure this function cannot be easily accomplished. However, as 189 is a labor union and in order to protect its present bargaining unit committments, 189 should be prepared to act as a bargaining agent when called upon. At the last local meeting it became evident that the International body will aid 189 in the exercise of its responsibilities in this area. With this assistance and with membership support, 189 should attempt to develop an administrative procedure which will facilitate the bargaining function.

If elected to the position of 189 Vice President-at-large, I will strive to encourage 189 to develop a structure consistent with its primary function as a forum as well as exploring, and if necessary, implementing a functional collective bargaining program.

CANDIDATE: PRINCE MOON

STATEMENT: For the past two years I have been a staff member of the Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations, University of Michigan and Wayne State University, Detroit, Michigan.

The duties of this position were to coordinate the labor programs, teach classes in the Worker's Basic Study Program and handle the various administrative duties.

Also, during that period, I taught classes for the Michigan State University Labor Program and University of Wisconsin School for Workers, Madison Campus.

I resigned from Wayne State University in October, 1968 to accept the post of Education Director for Region 1-E, UAW. The responsibility of this position is to coordinate educational classes, programs, seminars and conferences for 31 Local Unions which represents more than 74,060 members.

It is my opinion that the role of Local 189 should be to decide whether we want to be an association or a union. If 189 is to be a union, then we should set a sound regional structure to project our planning to include Collective Bargaining.

I am aware of the problems that the Local would face in bargaining with Universities and other agencies. I am also equally aware that Unions have survived against overwhelming odds in the past. However, with some imagination and innovation we can accomplish goals that in the past were imaginary.

CANDIDATE: WELLS KEDDIE

STATEMENT: I believe the fundamental job of labor educators to be re-forging of the links between the labor movement and what has come to be known as The Movement, i.e., that somewhat amorphous grouping around efforts to end racism, stop the war and restructure society along egalitarian lines. To the extent that Local 189 can open and keep open channels of communication between The Movement and organized labor, it fullfills one of its basic functions. A second basic task of Local 189 is its development as an organization which can in fact independently assert itself in protecting the interests of its members; as I see it, this implies collective bargaining efforts, operation of employment pools, and struggles to maintain the civil liberties of its members at all times. I pledge myself to work for those two basic functions and to oppose all moves in the opposite direction.

OFFICE: RECORDING SECRETARY

CANDIDATE: JOAN SUAREZ

STATEMENT: During the past two years, Joan Suarez has continued as Regional Education Director for the Southwest Regional Joint Board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers with headquarters in St. Louis. The job includes editing the Regional newspaper and running a retiree program in addition to the usual bread and butter activities of a union labor educator.

Mrs. Suarez believes that Local 189 has a role to play in development of the field of labor education, through program initiation and discussion and through exposing newcomers to the field to both program and philosophy. She also believes that Local 189 has a collective bargaining role and that policies to obtain that goal should be continually reviewed, revised and pushed forward.

Toward these ends, she would like to see the Local 189 Intern Program continued in some fashion, regional labor education conferences planned and executed on a regular basis, and pledges to work toward these ends.

OFFICE: TREASURER

CANDIDATE: OWEN TAPPER

STATEMENT: Currently Assistant Director for Education, Institute for Labor Studies, West Virginia University. Formerly with School for Workers, The University of Wisconsin.

Bargaining, for the most part, for university and union labor educators (as a separate unit) is impractical. It is impractical because we lack sufficient power. Local 189 should devote its efforts to developing alternatives, i.e., job referral systems, salary surveys--even arbitration of grievances where and if possible.

Local 189, apparently, needs to be the organization that has a major responsibility for educating (liberally) labor educators. The other two existing organizations are more policy conscious--which is fine. But it does leave labor educators without a sense of "what's happening" in the world. In this respect, Local 189 already does more than the other two organizations.

The proposal, already approved, for regional--and real--education conferences for labor educators (and their natural allies) is a good one and should be implemented.

OFFICE: REGIONAL EXECUTIVE BOARD--NORTHEAST

CANDIDATE: BILL KEMSLEY

STATEMENT: Since June 1, 1967, I have been directing the OEO Trade Union Leadership Training Program for New England. Supported by the National AFL-CIO and the New England AFL-CIO Council, the program is operated out of the University of Massachusetts Labor Relations and Research Center under the direction of Professor Ben Seligman.

The program has three emphases, (1) To inform the trainees of the causes and results of poverty and to examine some of the methods of eliminating it, (2) To examine the potentials of community action, (3) and, helping each trainee develop a social concern, a compassion and an understanding of his fellow being.

In addition, I am serving on the Vermont State Labor Relations Board, as a Trustee of the Vermont-New York City Youth Project, as a member of the Vermont State OEO Advisory Committee and as a consultant on group educational travel.

Local 189 should act as a collective bargaining agent for its members whenever possible and as an exchange for materials, methods, experiences and theories.

One danger lies in the possibility that Local 189 will be used to help build phony fences around union education in the name of "professional standards" thus placing the practicing of it off limits to those who do not meet these so-called standards.

It would be interesting to review just how many "education" programs have developed practitioners from the ranks of their unions.

OFFICE: REGIONAL EXECUTIVE BOARD - POTOMAC

CANDIDATE: JIM ROBINSON

STATEMENT: I returned to labor education as director of the new Virginia Polytechnic Institute program. Most of my time has involved problems inherent in a new program, particularly one in the South.

Over the years, I have come to perceive the value and appreciate the promise of Local 189. I feel that university and union labor educators share similar problems. Each must contend with administrators who may not fully appreciate labor education. In each instance, their job security is less stable than that of others in the organization. Although their efforts may not be appreciated always, they continue in the knowledge that it is worthwhile.

Local 189 has a valuable role as a union. In universities, its representatives must strive to convince the administration of the need for labor education in a manner of which other organizations are incapable. It can focus attention of all unions on university labor education problems. In unions, Local 189 can perform traditional bargaining and grievance functions when the members desire. It can provide a mechanism for coordination of union educational activities.

Finally, Local 189 should continue its historic evolution as representative of those engaged in new types of activity designed to broaden adult education horizons. Organization of OEO workers is a start. It should expand to include persons in Jobs Corps and similar efforts.

Local 189 should not be merely a vehicle for university educators to get a union card. It should not attempt to be a quasi-professional society. And it should not be merely an annual forum for renewal of old acquaintances.

CANDIDATE: STEPHEN L. COOK

STATEMENT: Recent Labor Education Activities; 1966-67, Labor Education Specialist at the University of Missouri. Served as Local 189's Midwest Regional Executive Board Member. 1967-68, Assistant Director of the OEO funded eleven state Appalachian Trade Unionists Leadership Training Project.

West Virginia University. Worked intensively with state and local central body officers and members in an attempt to activate labor in the war on poverty. 1968-Present, Assistant Professor and Coordinator of the Union Leadership Academy, Institute for Labor Studies and Manpower Development, West Virginia University. Primarily responsible for the planning, staffing and implementation of the joint union-university long-term advanced program to train officers and members for more effective leadership at all levels in the labor movement. Editor of Local 189's Labor Education Viewpoints, Fall 1968. I have actively served on various 189 committees.

CANDIDATE: CHRIS PILURAS

STATEMENT: Have been working as a labor educator for the past four years for the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers. Have planned, programmed and conducted education programs for members, stewards, officers and full-time staff. Have prepared teaching outlines, bulletins and manuals for workers' education. The sessions covered subjects such as: steward training, collective bargaining, organizing and political techniques.

Since Local 189 is not set up to effectively represent its members on grievances and negotiate agreements, it should concentrate its efforts in the following areas: (1) Expand and improve methods of labor education and reach out to get into the main stream of continuing adult education; (2) Actively support the AFT in organizing the elementary and secondary school teachers and university instructors. For the organization of school teachers is the first step in reaching the young and giving them an understanding of the principles of unionism; (3) Participate more fully in politics. Our members should become political activists in their communities. In addition, labor educators should design programs to provide local union leaders with the tools for practical participation in the local political process.

CANDIDATE: HARRY KRANZ

STATEMENT: Harry Kranz is Coordinator of Technical Assistance for the U. S. Department of Labor's Manpower Administration, United States Training and Employment Service. His activities include planning and execution of programs and contracts to train manpower staffs at Federal, State and local levels. Last year, Mr. Kranz spent six months in Mississippi, directing the Concentrated Employment Program (CEP) in the 18-county Mississippi Delta which trained and placed 2,000 unemployed persons in jobs. Prior to joining the Federal government in 1961, Kranz was Legislative and Public Relations Director for ten years with the New Jersey State CIO; an Assistant to UAW President Walter P. Reuther for three years; and Deputy Director of the Foreign Trade Union Training Program at American University for two years. He has been a member of Local 189 for more than a decade. He was previously a member for 13 years of ANG, and is now also a member of AFGE, Labor Lodge. "I support the present major directions of Local 189, but would like to see more emphasis on programs to reach youth--on and off campus."

CANDIDATE: JIM WILLIAMS

STATEMENT: Presently serving as Assistant Director of Research and Information of the American Newspaper Guild, AFL-CIO, which does research, education, human rights and political action stuff on behalf of its 30,000 members. Previously was Director of Research and Publications, West Virginia AFL-CIO. Also taught courses in Union Administration for the Union Leadership Academy.

I think Local 189 must take a tough-minded, pragmatic approach towards improving the quality and quantity of labor education in the U. S. by working with the main organs of labor education within the U. S., and by seeking to add content to their programs.

Local 189 should also press its goal of improving the wages, hours and working conditions of its members through developing new bargaining units both in the trade union and university shops.

OFFICE: REGIONAL EXECUTIVE BOARD - SOUTHEAST

CANDIDATE: EMORY VIA

STATEMENT: Currently Director of Labor Programs, Southern Regional Council, Inc., Atlanta, Georgia. Formerly (for nine years) a professor of Labor Education at the School for Workers, The University of Wisconsin.

Emory Via also was the Field Program Director at Roosevelt University for a number of years. And, what's more, was the Field Program Leader of the Georgia Workers Education Service and was also the Executive Secretary of the Atlanta Labor Education Service Association.

He now holds a Ph.D. in Political Science from the University of Chicago.

He feels that Local 189 should be more pragmatic and should strive to expand labor education in the Southeast so that by 1972 it dominates the local (and other segments).

OFFICE: REGIONAL EXECUTIVE BOARD - MIDWEST

CANDIDATE: KEITH KNAUSS

STATEMENT: I received a B. A. degree in Labor Management Relations from the Pennsylvania State University in June 1967 and after spending the last three months at P.S.U. as an assistant to the Labor Studies Department, I entered graduate school in Industrial Relations at the University of Minnesota as a Research Assistant in the Labor Education Service. At Minnesota I have been doing work in such areas as: materials development; research; long-term studies course planning, teaching and evaluation; conference planning, teaching and total coordination; and professional service activities (including election as Midwest Region executive board member). On December 16, 1968, I was appointed as a Labor Intern and, with the completion of the M.A. degree close at hand, received an appointment as a full-time Instructor January 1, 1969.

Local #189 should plan and act upon the creation of more regional conferences for its members, as well as the development of regional union training conferences using the resources abailable from universities and unions in the various regions. Also needed are practical analyses, plans and actions as to: collective bargaining for more #189 members; our relationship with ULEA and AFL-CIO; recruitment of ad-hoc and part-time labor educators; and the development of an effective steward system. Further support for the membership committee as well as increased use of Viewpoints and the Newsletter as professional information sources should be forthcoming.

CANDIDATE: NORMAN A. WEINTRAUB

STATEMENT: During the last two years I have been Assistant Research Director of the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union and a member of Local 189, AFT. My previous associations include the Allied Industrial Workers, the AFL-CIO research Department and the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen.

My main job activities include the preparation of detailed economic and financial analyses of the oil and chemical industries and leading companies in many industries. I have also kept close tabs on oil imports, chemical tariffs and the repeal of the American Selling Price on benzensid chemicals and general economic conditions.

Before the office employees of the O.C.A.W. established a picket line on July 22, 1968, which I refused to cross, I did a fair amount of traveling and had assignments in labor education. Since August 1, 1968 I have not received any such assignments from the O.C.A.W. Only four staff personnel based in Denver refused to cross the legal picket line--all Directors crossed.

Minutes- Executive Officers

Sept. 15, 1969

The Executive officers, Stan Rosen, Owen Tapper and Joan Suarez, met in St. Louis on September 15, 1969.

The following items were discussed:

- Local union election results and submission of biographical sketches as required by amendment to by-laws.

- Relationship with AFL-CIO and ULEA for coming year:

It was decided to recommend that Local 189 position be to push for a joint "galaxy" worker education conference with ULEA, AFL-CIO international union education departments, and non-AFL-CIO (independent, ALA, etc.) groups as alternative to possibility that AFL-CIO will ~~xxxx~~ hold no Education Directors meeting in 1970 on national basis.

It was decided to recommend that Local 189 set a date and place with ULEA for Spring meeting. We suggest third week in May in Minneapolis.

- Local 189 Labor Education Internship. Joan reported on progress with Intern Esposito. ~~xxxxxxxxx~~Recommends continuing on same basis for another year; explore possibility of AFT intern in worker education; explore Educational and Professional Development Training Act (HEW), etc. for monies to fund expansion of program; recommend expand mailing list to all universities, state colleges, jr. colleges, all unions. Estimated cost of 1969 Intern: $1273.65.

TUC & BBC Collaborate on TV

British shop stewards are to get their own television series in the autumn. The first ever TV series tailor-made to help shop stewards in their job of promoting higher pay and better working conditions for trade union members, the course of ten weekly half-hour programmes was worked out by the British Broadcasting Corporation in close collaboration with the Trade Union Congress, which had provided four of its own productivity handbooks for use as a supplement to the series. The programmes will concentrate on productivity bargaining - explaining what it is, how it differs from traditional forms of bargaining, and how it can affect relationships between the steward, the members, the union and the management - and will not simply be a studio production: the cameras will move out on location to a factory where productivity bargaining is actually under way. Announcing the television series, Victor Feather, TUC Acting General Secretary, called it a revolutionary development, probably the first of its kind in the world.

RE: Executive Board Actions on Motions

Motion #1 - Executive Board Procedure - Adopted

Motion: That the Executive Board authorize the President to follow the following procedure for Executive Board Meetings recognizing that it is extremely difficult for the Board, as a body, to meet together with regularity.

1. MEETING--The President will schedule Executive Board meetings whenever possible and 12 Executive Board members shall constitute a quorum of the Board.

2. MOTIONS WHEN A MEETING IS NOT POSSIBLE--When it is not possible to obtain a quorum, motions may be adopted in the following manner:

   a. Members of the Board may submit motions to the President for action by the Board
   b. The President will call a meeting of members of the Executive Board for the purpose of discussing motions or other business which may be required. Members of the Board shall be present to consider and discuss the motion.
   c. A summary of the discussion and the views of those present is then mailed to members of the Board along with the motion in mail ballot form.
   d. The result of the vote and the comments of members of the Board is then sent to the members of the Board before action on the motion is considered final.

VOTING "YES": Keddie, Wiencek, Duffy, Suarez, Drake, Via, Weintraub, Moon, Cook, Rosen, McMillan, Green, Tapper, Kemsley (14)

VOTING "NO": None

NOT VOTING: Paley, Brock, MacDonald, Mikrut. (4)

Comments: Should the motion mean that a mail ballot will be taken even though a quorum is present - I vote "NO". I'd like to see this motion made just a little bit clearer. Assuming the above is not correct, I vote "yes".

Your attention is directed toward the following items:

1. Currently, Local 189 members have contributed $852.69 to AFT's Militancy Fund. Based on AFT's 160,000 members, each member's share is $6.25. Our local's share (and goal) is $1735. We are nearing the half-way point. For those of you who have not yet made a contribution, a form is enclosed.

2. Larry Ahern (ICWU) writes that they are seeking to fill two positions which are currently open. They want an Industrial Engineer type who could service locals from Akron. The person would also be expected to prepare materials for local committees as well as some teaching.

   The second position calls for a person who could assist in ICWU's collective bargaining program. The person would work in council coordination, prepare contract proposals and do actual bargaining. Knowledge of pensions and insurance would be helpful -- but not necessary.

   Salaries are open to negotiation. If interested, contact Larry at 1659 W. Market, Akron, Ohio 44313.

3. Final reminder -- The annual winter meeting of Local 189 occurs in D.C. on November 21, 22 and 23, 1969. Looks like a good turnout. A tentative program is enclosed.

MINUTES

LOCAL 189, AFT, WINTER MEETING
November 21-22-23, 1969

MANGER-HAMILTON HOTEL
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20005

The meeting was called to order at 8:00 p.m. Friday evening by President Stanley Rosen in the Conservative Room of the Manger-Hamilton Hotel in Washington, D. C. Members introduced themselves and accepted the minutes of the last meeting as printed.

Roll call of officers found Stan Rosen, Owen Tapper, Stuart Brock, Anne Green, Wells Keddie, Joan Suarez, Steve Cook, John Mikrut, Paula Paley, Emory F. Via, Ruth Weincek and Martin Duffy present. Seven officers were absent.

TREASURERS REPORT

Financial Secretary Owen Tapper presented an Income, Membership and Expense comparison for 1967, 1968 and 1969. (See Attachment 1.) He also reported that at present the General Fund totals in the neighborhood of $4600 and the Defense Fund stands at about $2300. Our total contribution to the AFT Militancy Fund stands at $853. Motion made and seconded to approve the report with John Schmidman commenting that this was the second most clear report ever given by Tapper. Passed.

President Rosen reviewed the agenda with the membership. Recording Secretary Joan Suarez summarized the minutes of the Executive Board meeting which just preceded the membership meeting. Summary approved.

EXECUTIVE BOARD RECOMMENDATIONS ACTED UPON

Project COSPIRO

Motion by Chris Pilurns, seconded by Roger Rines that Local 189 take on "Project COSPIRO," that is exploring the formation of a Council of Staff, Professional and International Representatives Organizations. Passed with approval of committee appointed by the president: Wells Keddie, Ruth Weincek, Stuart Brock, Anne Green, Paula Paley, Joan Suarez, and John Mikrut.

Militancy Fund

Motion by Wells Keddie, second by Anne Green to send $25.00 to the AFT Militancy Fund in lieu of sending a delegate to the Shanker Testimonial Dinner. Passed with one unrecorded "no" vote and one unrecorded "abstention."

Internship

Action on Internship Committee recommendations tabled until Saturday. President Rosen announced that Barbara Fifield has volunteered to edit the newsletter; expenditure authorization for the next two editions given.

Spring Meeting

Motion by Joan Suarez to table discussion of the Spring Meeting until Sunday morning, seconded by Ruth Weincek. Passed.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS

On an amendment to the Local 189 Constitution and By-Laws, submitted prior to the meeting in writing by John Schmidman, to make certain changes in Article IV, Officers, Section 3 and the same change in Article V, Executive Board, Section 2 B):

PRESENT LANGUAGE: Article IV, Section 3. "Voting on the nominations shall be by secret mail ballot. In the instance of a contest for an office, at the time of nomination, each candidate must submit a brief biographical sketch and a 'platform' statement of no more than 200 words designed to acquaint the membership with his position on current union issues . . ."

PROPOSED LANGUAGE: Article IV, Section 3. "Voting on nominations shall be by secret mail ballot. In the instance of a contest for an office, at the time of nomination, each candidate is encouraged to submit a brief biographical sketch . . ."

PRESENT LANGUAGE: Article V, Section 2 B): "Members wishing to accept nomination shall do so in writing to the recording secretary before the annual meeting. Each candidate must submit a brief biographical sketch . . ."

PROPOSED LANGUAGE: Article V, Section 2 B): "Members wishing to accept nomination shall do so in writing to the recording secretary before the annual meeting. Each candidate is encouraged to submit a brief biographical sketch . . ."

Schmidman argued that if a statement is required of all candidates then write-in candidates are eliminated and he questions the legality as well as the desirability of such elimination.

Motion by Anne Green, second by Alan Morrison that the proposed amendment be submitted to referendum vote. Passed.

Amendment to AFT Constitution

On motion by Paula Paley, second by John Schmidman, a proposed amendment to the AFT Constitution broadening the non-discrimination section of the article defining AFT membership eligibility will be submitted to the AFT convention for consideration. (See Attachment 2.)

BACK TO EXECUTIVE BOARD RECOMMENDATIONS . . .

Saving Money

Recommendation to sponsor jointly with ULEA a cocktail party at the Spring meeting with authorization to spend up to $400 was amended by Jack Blackburn and John Schmidman to authorize Local 189 to spend an amount equal with the ULEA. The amendment was withdrawn. Wells Keddie suggested a cash bar with script for guests. Emory Via thought Well's suggestion might be workable with a little thought. Motion on $400 authorization defeated.

Wells Keddie moved that Local 189 explore the idea of a joint cocktail party with ULEA, said party to be on a cash bar basis with some provision made for guests with authorization to spend not more than $100 of Local 189 money. Anne Green seconded. Passed

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENTS

President Rosen announced the appointment of Ray MacDonald, Chris Piluras and Jackie Kienzle to the Nominating Committee for the Spring Meeting. MacDonald will act as chairman.

A committee to begin planning our 50th Anniversary celebration, to be held in 1972 somewhere near the location of the Brookwood Labor College where Local 189 was orignally formed, will consist of Ruth Weincek and Oliver Peterson as co-chairmen. Mark Starr will also serve on the committee along with any other volunteers.

LABOR EDUCATION HISTORY COMMITTEE

Chairman of the Labor Education History Committee, Oliver Peterson reports they are beginning to interview ex-Brookwood staff and students. A more full report will be given on Saturday. (See Attachment 2-A.)

RESOLUTIONS

A resolution on POLITICAL PARTY REFORM was referred back to a sub-committee for clarification.

Strikers at G.E.

A resolution on the G.E. Strike was amended to increase a contribution from Local 189's Defense Fund to the strikers from $200 to $300 and passed unanimously. (See Attachment 3.)

Labor Today

A resolution endorsing Labor Today a new, independent publication, was tabled until Saturday.

Esperanto Conference

A resolution on Esperanto, designating a volunteer observer at the World Esperanto Congress in Vienna in 1970 and a representative to serve on the trade union section of the reception committee for the 57th World Esperanto Congress in Portland, Oregon in 1972, was passed. Mark Starr was designated as the 1970 volunteer observer. (See Attachment 4.)

Liberation

A resolution on WOMEN'S RIGHTS AS WORKERS, UNION MEMBERS AND LABOR EDUCATORS was passed, but not without derisive comment. (See Attachment 5.)

Labor Movement and the Movement

A resolution on THE LABOR MOVEMENT AND "THE MOVEMENT" calling for the two groups to put aside their differences and begin "a dialogue with the express purpose of finding areas of agreement for common action against the major social ills of our day." Passed. (See Attachment 6.)

The meeting was adjourned at 10:30 p.m. with instructions to reconvene at 9:00 a.m. on Saturday.

Local 189 resumed its deliberations at 9:30 a.m. on Saturday.

COMMITTEE REPORTS

Viewpoints Chairman John Schmidman said he had ten articles waiting to go to press and promised we would be in print by Christmas.

Oliver Peterson, chairman of the Labor Education History Committee, told the meeting that his committee was working on an annotated bibliography on U. S. Labor Education history up to 1960. He said the committee would begin taping its first oral history that very evening. Suggestion was made to seek foundation funds to enable the committee to really do a job.

RESOLUTIONS (Continued)

REform the Political Conventions

A resolution on POLITICAL PARTY CONVENTION REFORM, as revised by a sub-committee assigned Friday, endorsing reforms being made inside the Democratic Party convention that elected delegates will represent equal numbers of Democratic voters and that appointed delegates shall bear a reasonable resemblance to the ethnic make-up of the population, passed. (See Attachment 7.)

Vietnam

A resolution on the WAR IN VIETNAM urging the Executive Boards of the AFT and the AFL-CIO to call upon the President of the United States demanding that he order an immediate end to the war in Vietnam and that he bring the American troops home now was passed. (See Attachment 8.)

The Chicago Conspiracy

A resolution on THE "CONSPIRACY" TRIAL OF THE "CHICAGO EIGHT," condemning the conduct of the trial, but going one step further to say that "the use of the conspiracy doctrine to suppress dissent is itself a subversion of justice," was passed as amended. (See Attachment 9.)

Ernest Mandel

A resolution on the EXCLUSION OF ERNEST MANDEL, a noted European Marxist scholar, from the U. S., which says in part "we find the arbitrary action (of the State Dept.) of prohibiting scholars, writers, artists and other individuals from visiting this country because of their ideas or associations unjustified and intolerable . . .", was passed. (See Attachment 10.)

Labor Today

The resolution endorsing a new independent publication, Labor Today, was brought forward again for consideration. Motion by John Schmidman to amend resolution by adding a donation of $25. Passed. (See Attachment 11.)

EMPLOYEES AT TEXTILE ASK LOCAL 189 TO BE COLLECTIVE BARGAINING REPRESENTATIVE

Acting on behalf of the TWUA professional employees, Steve Remsen presented a request for Local 189, AFT, to represent a professional unit of 17 supervisory and non-supervisory employees in matters of collective bargaining with their employer, the Textile Workers Union of America.

Motion by Steve Remsen, seconded by Jack Blackburn and Wells Keddie that Local 189 reaffirm its collective bargaining position and agree to represent the TWUA professional employees unit. A suggestion by Charles Davis that Local 189 attempt to recruit a three-man committee to give support to the professional unit was incorporated in the motion. Motion passed. Abstentions recorded: Jim Williams, Larry Rogin, Owen Tapper.

"AFTER THE RACHLIN-ROGIN REPORT---WHAT?" - A PANEL PRESENTATION

As called for by the program, the meeting was interrupted at 10:30 a.m. for the first in a series of panel and program presentations to be held during the weekend meeting.

The first panel presentation dealt with the recently published "Rachlin-Rogin Report," an up-to-date compendium of labor education in the United States. Authors

Larry Rogin and Marge Rachlin talked about their impressions of labor education in the 1960's as gathered during the preparation of their report. Panel moderator Wells Keddie directed the question and answer session which followed. The session was taped with the idea that a more comprehensive report of the panel would be published in Viewpoints.

The meeting was adjourned for lunch.

AFT PRESIDENT DAVE SELDEN IS AFTER-LUNCHEON SPEAKER

AFT President Dave Selden, a former member of Local 189, used as a theme for his talk "Teacher Unity Through Merger."

He said that one of his campaign planks while running for president of the AFT had been merger with the non-supervisory members of the National Education Association. He explained that merger was an immediate necessity if the teaching "profession" is to continue to be in the vanguard of social reform. "Teaching is a trade," Selden said, "but because of the potential impact of schools upon society, the AFT has always been more than a narrow 'bread and butter' union." If the AFT is to reach its full potential for social reform, Selden feels there must be unity with NEA members.

Selden said some AFT members feel that the union should just continue to organize, giving the job of organizing such priority that the reason for organizing--that is carrying out policy and program--is forgotten.

A lively question and answer session followed Selden's remarks, including questions about AFT development of Afro-American teaching materials, AFT's relationship with the AFL-CIO and more on NEA-AFT merger.

Good information--We appreciate Brother Selden's presentation.

Following lunch, the meeting reconvened for a second panel presentation inaccurately titled:

"YOUTH LOOKS AT LABOR"

Bob Esposito, Local 189 1969 Labor Intern, Jeremy Brecker, past West Coast coordinator for S.D.S., and Marilyn Webb, the Women's Liberation Movement were panel participants. Lee Balliet acted as moderator.

Esposito

Esposito's role was to describe the reaction of the "young" worker to his union when, as in the case of his own local union, the union often does not respond to the needs of the younger and newer employee-member. He related how he joined the union as a matter of course under a union security agreement; how his own interest and activity in the union began only after his shop steward and other union officers neglected to process a grievance for him; how he found others in the local union had experienced the same problem, how he became steward after his steward was promoted to management; how new, young leadership won office in his local only to discover that the apathy of the former officers was reflected in the apathy his international officers; how his local union finally disaffiliated from the international while he was on internship.

Brecker

Brecker's presentation dealt with an analysis of the New Left (or The Movement's) attitudes toward the labor movement, and vice versa, and the need he sees for overcoming each others prejudices in order to join hands for social reform.

Calling attention first to the similarities between the labor movement and the "Movement", Brecker pointed out that both groups believed in human dignity and a society based upon cooperation, and that both groups were involved in challenging the power structure, corporate in the case of the labor movement and the rest of the establishment in the case of the "Movement."

He said that the "Movement" and the labor movement, however, do not see these similarities for the most part. Instead the "Movement" sees the labor movement as a bureaucracy rather than a social movement, and charges that the labor movement is, too often, no longer willing to fight for its membership. It (The Movement) sees the labor movement as a protector of the status quo, and as part of the "establishement." The "Movement" reinforces this belief by pointing to what it considers to be the essentially conservative political role of the labor movement, particularly in its support of past and present Administrations' Vietnam policies and the extent to which the labor movement provides for "white privilege." He cited several other examples. In turn the labor movement, in its bill of particulars against the "Movement," charges the new left with irresponsibility and giving no responsible thought to the needs and desires of ordinary people.

Brecker predicted, however, an intensive period of strikes for the future which will result in a change in the relationships between the labor movement and the "Movement." He claimed that the attitudes of workers toward the "Movement" will change as they come against governmental interference in their strikes. He said that perhaps the labor movement will remember its earlier history of conflict with the "establishment" as well as the corporate structure.

Webb

The third panel member, Marilyn Webb addressed herself to the "racist-sexist system" which she says is responsible for discrimination against women today just as it is responsible for discrimination against minority groups. Currently working with Womens Liberation in their Washington, D. C. Abortion Counselling program, she described the treatment of women who must undergo therapeutic abortions in our "male-dominated hospitals." She described, too, how the picketing of one hospital because of such treatment led to a discussion with hospital employees which may result in their unionization.

Marilyn questioned whether the labor movement, which she says has tolerated not only pay discrepancies between black and white, but between men and women as well, even when the job responsibilities and educational backgrounds have been the same, wants to play any kind of role in the liberation of women.

Again a lively discussion session followed. It was of especial interest to witness the "sexist system" in operation during the discussion as well as during Marilyn's presentation.

ALLIANCE FOR LABOR ACTION HAS THREE-PRONG PROGRAM

Following a short break, Local 189 reconvened to hear Wiley Branton, Executive Director of the Alliance for Labor Action, Community and Social Action Division.

Branton said his program was one of three currently being pursued by the A. L.A. He explained that the UAW and the IBT met and agreed in principle to form the A.L.A. in July 1968. The following year was spent in discussion between the two unions, leading to the founding convention in May, 1969.

Those discussions, Branton said, led to the setting up of three divisions of A.L.A. The first division, headed by Bill Geneovese from the IBT, is concerning itself with organizing the unorganized with the greatest emphasis being placed on workers who are on the lowest rung of the economic ladder, those who have been ignored by most of the labor movement up to now, e.g. migratory workers, domestics, common laborers. The first campaign has been opened in Atlanta, Georgia.

The second division, headed by Bishop Crothers will concern itself with campus and church activities. The first emphasis will be on getting young people involved in the labor movement.

The third division is the Community and Social Action Division which has as its chief responsibility presently the distribution of financial grants to community projects throughout the country that have been unable to get government or foundation funds to either begin or continue their undertakings. Branton described a number of the projects, listing as a major undertaking the new Civic Alliance for Housing in St. Louis. He said his division eventually hopes to have a small staff to provide some technical assistance as well as money.

At the end of the discussion session following Branton's presentation, the meeting was adjourned until 9:00 a.m. Sunday morning.

* * * * * * * * * *

Local 189 reconvened Sunday morning following a group breakfast.

LABOR INTERN REPORT

Local 189 Labor Intern for 1969, Robert G. Esposito summarized his written report which has been submitted earlier. (Esposito's full, written report will be published in the next issue of Viewpoints.) He urged the local to continue its internship program, saying that he believed the next intern should be assigned to a single institution just as he had been during the summer of 1969 but that whatever institution was chosen should have a full-grown education program and that some exposure to other programs and institutions should be built into the program.

President Rosen directed that a commendation for Steve Remsen, who directed the intern during his internship (the intern was assigned to the Textile Workers Union of America), and Joan Suarez, chairman of Intern Committee, should be entered in the minutes. So be it.

Motion by Joan Suarez that the internship program be continued for another year, once again assigning the intern to a single institution, and that a survey be made for the Spring meeting as to the possibilities of establishing an Intern Program on a full-time basis. Second by Russ Allen. Motion passed. Bill Elkuss suggested that Unions and Universities be surveyed as to job openings before setting up a full-time internship program.

President Rosen took this opportunity to extend appreciation to Lee Stanley and Stuart Brock for making meeting arrangements.

LABOR COLLEGE TREND EXAMINED

The conclusion of the weekend meeting was a panel presentation by Harry Lee, representing the new Teamster staff training school recently opened in Miami, Florida, and Oscar Paskal, representing the UAW Leadership Studies Center. An AFL-CIO representative was unable to be present.

Each described the curriculum and goals of their respective training centers. In addition Oscar Paskal described the UAW's plans for a Family Education Center at Black Lake, Michigan, which is already partially constructed.

SOME ADDITIONAL BUSINESS

A few items of business remained following the panel presentation. President Rosen called for approval of the Spring meeting dates and place: May 7-8-9, Columbus, Ohio. Motion made, seconded and passed.

Motion by Wells Keddie that we hold the Winter 1970 meeting in Atlanta, Georgia. Seconded. Amended to recommend Atlanta site to the Executive Board for consideration. Motion defeated. Executive Board is to choose next location. Mark Brown recommended that at future meetings programs be planned to give "both sides" an opportunity to be heard. He said he had in mind specifically the program in Philadelphis to which a representative of DRUM had been invited to speak.

Job Clearinghouse Report

Jackie Kienzle, Clearinghouse chairman, reported that individuals seeking jobs were continuing to submit resumes to the Clearinghouse but that unions and universities had fallen down on the job and had not been informing the Clearinghouse when a job opening occurred.

Jim Williams suggested that employers be circulated from time to time to find out if there were openings. Jake Schlitt recommended we let new institutions, such as the IBT School, know that the Job Clearinghouse exists. President Rosen thanked Jackie for her report and work.

President Rosen made a plea to all members to become as willing to undertake an assignment as they are to suggest an idea or program.

Motion by Stuart Brock that any unfinished business be submitted to the Executive Board for action. Seconded and passed.

The meeting was adjourned.

Respectfully submitted,

Joan Suarez, Recording Secretary

Committee on
History of Labor Education in the United States

Early this year the Committee set as its immediate task the development of an annotated bibliography on U.S. labor education history up to 1960. In May the membership of Local 189 was circularized with an appeal for assistance in the project and some members reproduced the original appeal for use in a still wider circle.

It was emphasized that the listing would be limited to analytical surveys and reports, covering labor education as a whole and including specific projects and programs. It would not include items such as teaching materials and detailed records of operations.

Members were informed also of the Committee's interest in having the names of leaders in labor education for oral history interviews.

The response to the May appeal has not been overwhelming but it has been gratifying and the Committee is now going over the material submitted, identifying items of possible value for our present purpose and seeking annotations where they have not been supplied. This must, of course, be done where the material is available and involves recruitment of volunteers at various places.

Additional responses to the May appeal would be appreciated, together with suggestions of still more contacts. Press Associates is publicizing the project and Labor History has been asked to carry an announcement.

The Committee joins the officers of 189 in requesting all possible assistance in preparations for the 1972 anniversary observance of the founding of Brookwood Local 189. Brookwood veterans should be involved in every way possible and the Committee is interviewing some of them as a starter in its oral history activity. We need all the contacts we can get with Brookwood staff and students.

RESOLUTION ON THE G.E. STRIKE

Worker Education Local 189 supports fully the workers now on strike against the General Electric Company. We condemn the persistent refusal of G.E. to engage in meaningful collective bargaining.

We see a victory for these strikers as essential to stop an obvious drive by management to significantly weaken the trade union movement in the United States.

Members of Local 189 are hereby asked to become involved whenever possible in developing community support for this strike.

Local 189, as a token of its support, hereby donates $300 from the Defense Fund to the strike committees made up of the cooperating unions conducting the strike.

Local 189 members are also asked to individually contribute $3.00 each to the strike fund on a voluntary basis.

ESPERANTO

WHEREAS: Instant world-wide communication, which has been made technically possible by Telestar and other satellite systems, is in fact handicapped by the multiplicity of languages into which messages must be translated and

WHEREAS the adoption of any given national tongue as an international auxiliary language would be difficult because of nationalistic jealousies among older countries and anti-colonial prejudices among newer nations, thus making the adoption of a constructed language such as Esperanto a more likely solution, and

WHEREAS Labor's concern with the international language problem has been indicated in various ways (e.g., an Esperanto edition of the I.C.F.T.U.'s basic pamphlet published this year; a 1966 petition to the United Nations asking it to urge its member nations to further the use of Esperanto which had extensive labor support, including, in the United States, signatures of many Local 189 members; a feature article on Esperanto circulated by Press Associates, Inc., within the last few weeks; a semi-centennial celebration by the Esperanto organization of European railway workers this summer); THEREFORE BE IT

RESOLVED: That this meeting of Local 189, for the purpose of informed world-wide solidarity, recommend to its members and to the labor programs they administer, the study and practical use of Esperanto as an international language. AND BE IT FURTHER

RESOLVED That Local 189 designate a volunteer observer at the World Esperanto Congress at Vienna in 1970, to make direct contact with the labor workers' education groups there and report later to Local 189 AND BE IT FURTHER

RESOLVED that Local 189 nominate a representative to serve on the trade union section of the reception committee for the 57th World Esperanto Congress which meets in Portland, Ore. in 1972.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS AS WORKERS, UNION MEMBERS AND LABOR EDUCATORS

There is evidence at every hand that so-called "male supremacist" attitudes towards women predominate among union members and labor educators. Much of this evidence shows up in the unconscious, unthinking mode of thought which relegates women to the status of second class (or worse) citizenship in such matters as employment preference, promotions, opportunities for union leadership positions, and involvement in the field of labor education itself.

Workers Education Local 189 hereby resolves that its members should begin to attack this problem in at least two dimensions:

(1) Within their own ranks, every effort should be made to initiate discussions on this subject on a serious level, with a view towards eradicating the last vestiges of these attitudes from both the organization and from the field of labor education.

(2) Programs designed to raise the issue in an instructive and constructive way should be undertaken as a high priority item in future labor education efforts at all levels.

RESOLUTION ON THE LABOR MOVEMENT AND "THE MOVEMENT"

The nation confronts more and more ineptly a number of increasingly urgent problems: To name but a few of them--ending the Vietnam war and making sure no more such wars are fought in our name; eliminating racism in all its aspects from our society; acting in a meaningful manner, instead of superficially, to stop the steady destruction of our natural resources through water and air pollution and other gross attacks upon the natural ecology; developing a truly relevant educational system for all citizens; and ending the special privileges of the rich, especially in such areas as support through taxation by the various levels of government.

The labor movement of the United States is one of the few sources of resistance to this continuing ineptitude in the face of tremendous social problems. That amorphous grouping of anti-war forces, civil rights activists, and student militants now known generally as The Movement is another. At present, however, differences of style and method have acted to keep the labor movement and The Movement at best in an "arms-length" relationship and at worst in an internecine war.

Workers Education Local 189 believes that the time has come for both the labor movement and The Movement to put aside their differences and join forces. Without this cooperation, it seems likely that most of the urgent problems listed above will simply get worse instead of being solved.

Therefore, Workers Education Local 189, American Federation of Teachers, calls upon the labor movement and The Movement--leaders and members alike, at all levels--to begin immediately, in every way possible, a dialogue with the express purpose of finding areas of agreement, for common action against the major social ills of our day. Members of Local 189, in their capacities as labor education workers, are asked to assume a special responsibility in this regard, making themselves available for consultation with both groups and promoting at every opportunity the growth of this dialogue.

It is also resolved that copies of this resolution be given the widest possible circulation in the press, specifically including the press of the labor movement and The Movement. Members are authorized to take whatever steps are necessary to ensure this wide circulation, including submitting copies to newspapers, radio and television stations, and magazines to which they might have access.

RESOLUTION ON POLITICAL PARTY CONVENTION REFORM

Workers Education Local 189, AFT, welcomes the moves that are being made in the Democratic Party to reform the delegate selection method and the composition of the 1972 Convention. We call upon the Republican Party to come to grips with this same problem in their organization.

There are many reforms needed to make the Convention method of nominating a president really representative of the members of that political party. To date, two reforms have been announced by the Democratic Party and we endorse them.

These two reforms deal with a method of assuring that elected delegates will have voting weight in Democratic councils commensurate with the weight of Democratic voters who voted for Democratic candidates during the previous election, and that appointed delegates shall bear a reasonable resemblance to the make-up of the population.

We call upon the committee working on reform to continue its work and to come forth with even more meaningful proposals.

RESOLUTION ON THE WAR IN VIETNAM

Workers Education Local 189, American Federation of Teachers, hereby expresses its continuing and growing distress over the American presence in Vietnam.

With this statement, we call upon the Executive Board of the American Federation of Teachers and the Executive Board of the AFL-CIO to issue a call upon the President of the United States demanding that he order an immediate end to the war in Vietnam and that he bring the American troops now there home at once.

We also call upon all labor educators, whether members of Local 189 or not, to take prompt action to insure the fullest possible discussion within the labor movement of the reasons for ending the war and bringing the troops home now.

It is also resolved that this statement be given the widest possible circulation in the press, with copies sent to the President of the United States, to the AFT officers and Executive Board, to the next AFT Convention for consideration, to the officers and Executive Board of the AFL-CIO, to all of the major wire services, to television networks, nationally-known newspapers, and to The American Teacher and the AFL-CIO News. Local 189 members are authorized to circulate this statement among press outlets in their own localities.

RESOLUTION ON THE "CONSPIRACY" TRIAL OF THE "CHICAGO EIGHT"

By all accounts, whether in the commercial or so-called "movement" press, the trial of eight persons on conspiracy charges arising out of the 1968 "police riot" at the Democratic Convention in Chicago is a complete travesty of justice.

The use of the conspiracy doctrine to suppress dissent is itself a subversion of justice. The conduct of the trial has blended the farcical with the unjust in a way that insures that the defendants can never receive even an approximation of a fair trial.

The most glaring instance of injustice in this trial has been the denial of counsel of his choice to Bobby Seale of the Black Panther Party. Prevented from postponing the trial itself until his counsel could be present, Bobby Seale repeatedly attempted to act as his own counsel, a right afforded a defendant as a matter of course in most courts of law in this nation. As a result of his attempts, he was literally bound and gagged upon orders of the judge and forced to sit thus in front of the jury trying to evaluate the evidence. Finally, Bobby Seale was sentenced to four years imprisonment for contempt of court and separated from the current trial.

The members of Workers Education Local 189, deeply concerned that this trial is not only violating the civil liberties of the defendants but is also likely to set a pattern for the repression of dissent in the future, hereby asks that due process be immediately instituted for all of these defendants, particularly Bobby Seale, and that the many criticisms of the trial judge's conduct publicly made by lawyers groups be taken into account in making this move towards real justice.

Workers Education Local 189 also calls upon the Executive Boards of the American Federation of Teachers, the AFL-CIO and the ALA to call publicly for the restoration of due process to the defendants at once and for a full airing of the charges concerning the conduct of the trial to date.

This resolution shall be given the fullest possible circulation in the news media, with copies also sent directly to the defendants in the Chicago trial.

RESOLUTION

EXCLUSION OF ERNEST MANDEL FROM THE U.S.

Workers Education Local 189, American Federation of Teachers, protests the exclusion of the noted European Marxist scholar, Ernest Mandel, from the Stanford University conference of October 17-18, where he was to debate with Professor John Kenneth Galbraith of Harvard.

Local 189 asks Secretary of State William Rogers to rescind the ban upon Mandel's entry and to permit him to fulfill the academic and other speaking engagements scheduled here in late November and early December.

We find the arbitrary action of prohibiting scholars, writers, artists and other individuals from visiting this country because of their ideas or associations unjustified and intolerable on numerous grounds. Among them in this case is the infringement of our right to hear in person as well as to read what a scholar of Mr. Mandel's qualifications has to say.

We urge an end to a policy that the New York Times, among others, has condemned as "a vestige of the restrictive era of the 1950's."

Copies of this resolution shall be sent to the Secretary of State and to Ernest Mandel, c/o the Bertrand Russell Peace Foundation, 156 Fifth Avenue, Suite 1003, New York, N. Y., 10010, and to representative news media.

MEMBERSHIP COMMITTEE REPORT

TO: Stan Rosen, President

FROM: Anne C. Green, Chairman, Membership Committee

The basic program of the membership committee will be as outlined by Brother Keith Knauss, former chairman who is now serving in the armed forces.

The first step to "get off the ground" will be contacting individuals presently in the labor education field and not members, inquiring whether they would like to join. Keith's original letter (attached) is fine for this purpose except modifying the first paragraph appropriately. The first problem is finding names and addresses. If any present 189 member has such names they should be forwarded to the chairman. The letter may serve as the original contact or a follow-up, of a somewhat official nature, on the all important personal contact a 189 member has made.

The second step should be another letter, perhaps answering specific questions of the prospective member, but necessarily enclosing a membership blank and a copy of the Newsletter and Viewpoints.

The second segment of the membership program should be investigating why members have left 189. Also a part of this could be investigating why new members have joined. Again, letters will have to be mailed out to each of these people requesting such information.

Summary: WHAT IS NEEDED

From 189: Stationery and money for postage

From 189 Members: Names and addresses of prospective members.

Executive Board members and guests present during the course of the meeting were Stan Rosen, Owen Tapper, Joan Suarez, Wells Keddie, Ruth Weincek, Stuart Brock, John Mikrut, Stephen Cook, Roger Rines, Emory F. Via, Anne Green, Paula Paley, Martin Duffy, Chris Piluras and Lee Balliet.

Motion by Owen Tapper, seconded by Joan Suarez to confirm appointment of John Mikrut to Executive Board replacing Keith Knauss who has been drafted by "Uncle Sam." Passed.

Motion by Owen Tapper, seconded by Joan Suarez to give Executive Board approval for establishing a Missouri Chapter of Local 189. Procedure for setting up chapter reviewed. Motion passed. (See Attachment 1.)

Motion by Joan Suarez, seconded by Emory Via to approve a Kentucky Chapter of Local 189. Passed. (See Attachment 2.)

BARGAINING UNIT

President Stanley Rosen informed Board of request on part of the professional staff of the Textile Workers Union of America--17 people, supervisory and non-supervisory--for Local 189 to represent them in collective bargaining with their employer. President Rosen said he had spoken to Jim Mundy of the AFT to determine whether AFT could provide support. Full discussion followed with agreement to bring issue to membership for decision.

Stuart Brock moved that Ruth Weincek's suggestion of exploring the possibilities of forming a "Council of Staff, Professional and International Representatives Organizations," to be otherwise known as "COSPIRO," be recommended to the regular meeting as a Local 189 project. Seconded by Wells Keddie. Passed with Emory Via abstaining.

President Rosen named Wells Keddie chairman of "Project COSPIRO." Other committee members are Ruth Weincek, Stuart Brock, Anne Green, Paula Paley, Joan Suarez, and John Mikrut. Committee was instructed to compile a list of staff and field unions, independent and affiliated, to be followed by a meeting of representatives of interested groups to talk about mutual problems, etc., pending approval at membership meeting.

IRRELEVANCE

(At this point an ovation greeted the news that the Haynesworth nomination to the Supreme Court had been defeated by a ten vote margin.)

LABOR TODAY

President Rosen called to the attention of the Executive Board the new publication called "Labor Today." He suggested a resolution commending its editors and urging members to subscribe.

GALAXY

The "galaxy" conference sponsored by the National Adult Education Association to be held in Washington, D. C. December 12-15 was discussed. The Board agreed to send a delegate to attend the Workshop for Labor Educators. Ruth Weincek moved, Martin Duffy seconded that Stuart Brock be named delegate. Passed

WELLS

Resolutions Chairman Wells Keddie made a preliminary report, announced the Resolutions Committee would meet at 5:00 p.m.

TOO MUCH FOR A DINNER

Communication announcing the Albert Shanker Testimonial Dinner at $25 per plate was read and discussed. Motion by Wells Keddie, second by Owen Tapper to recommend a $25.00 donation to the AFT Militancy Fund since we are unable to have a delegate present at the dinner. Recording Secretary to send letter, pending approval.

SPRING LABOR EDUCATION MEETING

President Rosen reported on his meeting with University Labor Education Association Steering Committee Chairman Lois Gray in regard to the Spring meeting. The ULEA has chosen May 7-8-9 as the dates. Location is to be Columbus, Ohio with Ohio State University hosting. The ULEA has agreed the meeting should be opened to delegates from all University programs, unions and community groups.

Motion by Suarez to recommend accepting date and place. Seconded by Roger Rines. Passed. It was the concensus of the Executive Board that the Executive officers should meet again with ULEA officers to make program recommendations. Among those recomendations are:

* that the Spring meeting be used to begin a dialogue between labor educators, various akin community groups and today's young radicals, e.g. a panel of representatives of several young radical groups such as the Black Panthers, Patriots and Young Lords might be invited to make a presentation at the meeting;
* that Local 189 and the ULEA hold their business meetings on Thursday, May 7, allowing for a full two day conference under the general sponsorship of the ULEA;
* that Local 189 be allowed to participate in the construction of the program and that it be made relevant to the outside groups to be invited as well as to ourselves; that Local 189 and ULEA sponsor a joint cocktail party. Motion by Keddie, seconded by Suarez that Local 189 that up to $400 be made available from Local 189 treasury for this purpose.

NOMINATING COMMITTEE

President Rosen appointed the following to a Nominating Committee for the 1970 election: Ray MacDonald, chairman; Chris Piluras and Jackie Kienzle. They will be polled for their acceptance.

AFT CONSTITUTION

An amendment to the AFT constitution, Article III, Section 8, proposing to liberalize the membership clause was considered for submission to the next AFT convention. Motion by Keddie, second by Suarez to recommend submission. Passed. (See attachment 3.)

NUTS

Treasurer Owen Tapper reported that over the last ten months dues have increased $400 over the same period (January to October) in 1968 and that the membership is up twenty (20) members over the same period.

INTERN

Internship Committee Chairman Joan Suarez reported the Committee recommends continuing the Internship for one more year following the same approximate format followed in 1969 as it seemed to be somewhat more successful in achieving the stated goals of the internship then in previous years, to wit: both exposure and involvement in the field of labor education for the intern. She also said the committee would recommend expanding the mailing list for recruitment to all universities, colleges, junior colleges and unions, whether or not there was an established labor education program in the institution. The committee further recommended the exploring of the expansion of the intern program through a government or private grant; and the possibility of an AFT intern in labor education. Estimated cost of the 1969 Intern: About $1200.00.

Paula Paley moved to recommend the continuance of the Internship for another year and the authorization to spend money for the project. Seconded by Anne Green. Passed.

ORGANIZATION

Membership Chairman Anne Green reported she is proceeding with the plan outlined by the former chairman Keith Knauss. She said she would report more fully at the membership meeting.

189 TO BE 50 SOON

President Rosen appointed a committee to begin planning for the 1972 "50th Anniversary" celebration of Local 189 to be held somewhere in the vicinity of Brookwood Labor College: Ruth Weincek, chairman, Mark Starr and Oliver Peterson.

NEWSLETTER

President Rosen, who has continued to edit the Local 189 newsletter, reported that it is possible to have a lithographed "newsletter" prepared for about $200 per 1000 copies. He is still looking for an editor, however. Motion by Anne Green, second by Wells Keddie that as a stop-gap measure, the president be empowered to hire an editor at a reasonable (low) fee until other arrangements can be made. Concensus.

Meeting adjourned somewhere in the neighborhood of 5:00 p.m.

Respectfully submitted,

Joan Suarez, Recording Secretary

Dear Stan:

It is my pleasure to request of Local 189, AFT permission to form a Missouri Chapter of Local 189. We now have about twenty people working in the state of Missouri who belong or are eligible for membership in Local 189.

Some of us who have been interested in forming a chapter met early in October to discuss same. There were eight of us present that evening with three or four others indicating they would have been present except for a conflict in schedule. At that meeting we asked Pete Gregan (University of Missouri) to act as our temporary chairman and Mike Ryan (Local 688, Teamsters) to act as recording secretary. As the senior Executive Board member in Missouri, I was asked to write you and make our request for Chapter recognition. We also request approval to affiliate with appropriate State and Local Central Bodies.

We will be anxiously waiting action of the Executive Board.

AFT helps Mobile teacher fight trumped-up charges

MOBILE, Ala.

Mrs. Joycelyn Finley, a black teacher and member of AFT Local 777 here, has recently been aquitted of charges of obstructing passageways, using profane language, and inciting a riot. Her defense was handled by her union, the majority of whose members are white, and the union attorney, Harry Seale.

It all began on Moratorium Day, when Mrs. Finley took leave (paying her substitute) to attend a special church service. The church happened to be next door to a school where, just a few days earlier, a black principal had sent a black boy home for refusal to shave off his beard.

The principal had sent the boy home under a new school-community dress policy which mandated suspension for this offense. The beard item was dictated by the principal, who told the policy committee, which didn't mind beards, that he couldn't "live with" them.

MARCH TO SCHOOL

After the Moratorium service, a group of students and adults decided to march to the school to try to reason with the principal. He threatened to have them arrested for trespassing if they didn't leave in five minutes. Mrs. Finley had not gone with the group, but had telephoned her husband to ask his advice. He told her to do what she felt was right. So she met the others coming back. She was about to return with them, when she saw the suspended student standing near the school entrance. Being a close family friend, she walked over to talk briefly with him, then returned to the church.

The next day, Mrs. Finley received a call from police, who told her that the associate superintendent of the Mobile County schools had sworn out a warrant

BIRTHDAY

George Counts, a lively 80

CARBONDALE, Ill.

"Old men and far travelers may lie by authority" is an old English proverb distinguished education Professor George Counts tells his students at Southern Illinois University.

Counts is a far traveler. And although he celebrated his 80th birthday Dec. 9, by no means is he marked as old by colleagues at SIU, where he teaches classes, still travels extensively, and is a widely-sought source of information, advice, and philosophies that only a man of his vast experiences can give. He remains easy-going, easily accessible, and possessor of wry wit and sense of humor.

Counts explains that in his later years he has warned his students that "old men and far travelers lie by authority."

"Then I tell them I am both," he said. "An 'old man' can say that he remembers this or that very well. And a 'far traveler' of course can say he visited this or that far-away place and knows what he is talking about. I tell students to put a question mark after everything I tell them.

"However, if any question is raised about what's inside the Soviet Union, I just tell them that in 1929 I drove my own Ford automobile 6,000 miles over that country, a large part of the time alone. And this happens to be true."

The durable Counts, born in Kansas and a lumberjack and trapper in his teens, came to SIU in 1962 after a distinguished career on faculties at Teachers College of Columbia University, Yale University, University of Washington, and the University of Chicago. He is author of 29 books on education and social affairs and so many articles he quit counting them years ago. His book, The Challenge of Soviet Education, won the American Library Association's Liberty and Justice Award as "the most distinguished book of 1957 on contemporary problems and affairs."

Counts' department chairman at SIU, John E. King, says Counts conceivably could be the country's greatest living professor of education.

"None is better known, quoted more often, or able to provide more relevancy to 20th-Century students than George Counts," said King, a former president of the American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education. "He's a professor's professor."

ATTACKED BY HEARST

Counts, an education liberal back in the 1920s when he was a colleague and friend of John Dewey at Columbia University, was the object of a press attack by the late publisher William Randolph Hearst, in the 1930s because of his views. During ensuing years, Counts' progressive ideas became accepted procedure.

In the late 1930s and early 1940s, he served as president of the American Federation of Teachers. In 1942-44, he was chairman of the American Labor Party and co-founder of the Liberal Party in New York. He ran for the U.S. Senate but lost.

At SIU, where his office door carries a joke placard, "All things cometh to him who waiteth—if he worketh like hell while he waiteth," Counts almost weekly receives invitations to appear at education meetings throughout the country. Some he accepts, like during April, 1968, when he appeared in Central Illinois, Ohio, Virginia, and New York City. One lecture topic was "Education and Chaos."

"Sure, education can serve any purpose—even in bringing catastrophe," he said.

Just a week before the spring, 1968, jaunt, he talked into a microphone three hours while a Cornell University representative taped his recollections and views on education and the contemporary scene in the 1930s and 1940s. A year earlier, he had recorded motives, meanings, satisfactions, and possible regrets in his life, to be used by biographers after his death. The confidential sketch was obtained for the National Society for the Study of Education.

Much of his office time is spent answering correspondence, much from educators and students wanting his views for graduate-study theses and dissertations, and for professional articles and books. They want the ideas of a man who was a pioneer a half century ago and who is able to relate to concepts taught today.

His latest published article, which appears in Phi Delta Kappan for December, is titled "Should the Teacher Always Be Neutral?" The same issue contains an article by Joseph S. Junell which begins with a George Counts quotation, and book reviews of Counts books by Chairman King and Professor Arthur E. Lean of the SIU department of educational administration and foundations. King reviews The Prospects of American Democracy and says it is more valuable in 1969 than in 1938, when it was written. Lean's review is of Education and American Civilization, published in 1952. He says he believes this book is the best of the 29 written by Counts.

The next day, Mrs. Finley received a [illegible] associate superintendent of the [illegible] County schools had sworn out a warrant charging her with disturbing the peace. She went downtown and posted bond.

Having been a member of Local 777 for many years, Mrs. Finley called James E. Swilley, now the local's president and then still serving in his former capacity as grievance chairman. He promptly arranged for her to be defended by Seale, the union's attorney.

Two weeks later, when her case came to trial, the charges had been escalated to the three mentioned earlier. Seale had no difficulty in proving, through the prosecution's own witnesses, that they were false. The judge threw the case out.

BLACKS JOINING LOCAL

Although Local 777 has been integrated from its earliest days, with blacks included in the executive council over the years as vice-president, treasurer, and chairmen of several committees, the membership has been predominantly white because of widespread intimidation by black principals to force membership in the so-called "professional" associations. Now that the prompt and successful defense of Mrs. Finley has demonstrated where true protection lies, there has been a sudden surge of black members into the local.

Since her acquittal, Mrs. Finley has been harassed by the personnel division of the school system regarding her actions on Moratorium Day. It is probable, the local believes, that her continued persecution is because her husband has been active in a militant black organization which has been very critical of the school board and administration because of their illegal operation of segregated facilities. It is also probable that an effort will be made to terminate Mrs. Finley.

When asked about this, Swilley made this statement: "When that time comes, we will once more defend Mrs. Finley, and we'll win that one, too!"

TEN-WEEK INTERNSHIP

A ten-week training program, complete with an $800 scholarship and expenses, is being offered by Worker Education Local 189, American Federation of Teachers, to a qualified man or woman interested in a career in labor education.

Labor education is the branch of adult education that attempts to meet the educational needs of union members, particularly those active as shop stewards, officers and full-time representatives. Qualifications for work in labor education include experience with the labor movement, understanding of educational principles, and familiarity with such subjects as collective bargaining, economics, union administration, legislation and politics.

The apprenticeship program, now entering its sixth year, is especially aimed at the union member who has been active in the educational work of his union, the teacher who desires to work with adults and the graduate student in the social sciences who may have an interest in working in the labor movement as an educator

Action Between Meetings

The L189 Executive Board has approved procedures which make it possible for us to act on resolutions and the other business between meetings. If you have an issue or matter that you would like to have discussed, send a copy to one of the Officers of L 189. It will then be circulated to all Executive Board members, with a mail vote, if it is pressing.

The Executive Board and the Officers appreciate your comments, suggestions and criticisms.

New Missouri Chapter - Other Chapter Reports

We are pleased to announce the formation of a 23 member chapter in Missouri. This includes some old members and many new members. Peter Gregan is the Chairman and Mike Ryan of the Teamsters Sec Tres.

Chicago Chapter will meet February 23 to elect officers and hear a talk on "Youth and Labor" by Carl Shier - UAW.

Membership Campaign Beginning - We need your help

Anne Greene, Chairman of the Membership Committee, is developing materials for a three pronged membership building campaign. First, by asking members to "recruit a member". Second, by asking Regional Vice Presidents to conduct a campaign amongst the members and with the Chapters in their area and third, through a general mailing to potential members from Anne.

You can help by sending names of potential members to Anne and pitching in when she has her materials prepared. Also, active committee members are welcomed. Write Anne Green at 134 Oakdale Avenue, Akron, Ohio 44302.

ULEA on the Move

Two recent meetings of ULEA, Eastern ULEA in Morgantown and Midwest ULEA in Bloomington, Illinois exemplified a movement towards a more organized and more meaningful ULEA.

The National Labor Education Conference on June 3-4 in Columbus, under the leadership ULEA, will serve to bring together all persons with an interest in workers education for an exchange of ideas. This will be followed by a full day ULEA meeting on June 5. Improved communications with ULEA have made it possible for your Officers to play a constructive and meaningful role in the planning process.

I hope that all members will attend the L 189 Meeting and Program that will preceed the meeting, beginning at noon on Wednesday, June 3, and will assist in the recruitment for the National Labor Education Conference.

Poem, from Steel Labor by Cong Charles Joelson

There is more challenge in each square block of city slum
Than all the galaxy.
Between brother and brother, more awful distance.
Than any long boulevard of lonely space.

It will be written that in 1969, primitive man canned himself
And catapulted through the void,
While hunger, hate and sickness stalked his earth.
Choosing not to try for Heaven, just the moon.

The old gnarled black man, sitting in the seamy summer of Seventh Street amidst its broken glass,
Is wiser than the scientists at Houston.
He knows what vistas cry to be explored.

ICFTU SUPPORTS INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION YEAR by BILL KEMSLEY

The full support of the ICFTU for promoting the international education year was pledged at a conference in Paris, 20 to 23 October - which makes recommendations to Unesco on its future program. ICFTU's Ady Camusel, speaking at the 12th conference of International non-governmental organizations, linking education to development, stressed the need for giving priority in all development planning to the creation of employment and the raising of living standards. For education to have a real impact, a minimum level of development had to be achieved. To this end, she said, the ICFTU called for structural changes to be made: world commodity agreements should be concluded; manufactured and semi-manufactured goods exported by the developing countries should receive preferential treatment; taxes on their products should be reduced; industrial and agricultural structures should be adapted to new needs; and industrial countries should bring the volume of their net development aid up to a minimum of one percent of their gross national product.

MINUTES OF THE EXECUTIVE BOARD
LOCAL 189, AFT

May 19-20, 1969
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Local 189 President Stanley Rosen called the Executive Board to order at 12:00 Noon at the Benjamin Franklin Hotel, Philadelphia.

Those present were Glen Armstrong, Stuart Brock, Wendall Drake, Lee Balliet, Keith Knauss, Steve Remsen, Joan Suarez, Owen Tapper, Ruth Wiencek, Jim Wolfe, Martin Duffy and Al Wickman.

President Rosen announced the appointment of Local 189 members Dennis Muehl, Alan Morrison and Larry Ahern to the Election Committee which will supervise and count ballots in the up-coming local union election.

Meeting dates for the Fall meeting of Local 189 were announced as November 21-23, 1969. The meeting will be held in Washington, D. C.

The Board gave unanimous consent for the establishment of a state-wide chapter of Local 189 in Indiana.

Financial Secretary Owen Tapper presented a plan for the revision of Executive Board regions so as to have Executive Board regional representatives more closely represent an equal number of members in keeping with our belief in the concept of "one-man, one vote". Tapper explained that if the Board approved the revised regional plan, it would become operable next year since nominations for 1969-1970 officers had already taken place.

The Board approved the plan for revised regions as presented by Brother Tapper. Copies of the map and membership breakdown is attached.

President Rosen opened a discussion of the duties and responsibilities of Executive Board regional representatives. It was generally agreed that Board members should have the following areas of responsibility: (1) New membership recruitment, (2) Coordination of Regional Labor Education technique conferences, (3) Expansion of Job Clearinghouse, (4) Collective Bargaining responsibility where Local 189 has bargaining units, (5) Liason between the Local and University Labor Education Association and the Labor Movement.

Motion by Al Wickman and seconded by Keith Knauss that Executive officers prepare a proposal for membership consideration at the Fall Meeting detailing the duties and responsibilities of regional representatives and outlining any compensation and/or expenses necessary for their meeting to discuss this proposal. Passed.

Ruth Wiencek indicated the interest on the part of some members of the Washington, D. C. and IUE collective bargaining chapters to merge. Questions involved include who would bargain for the IUE unit, what kind of precedent would this set, is this merger possible under our present Constitution and By-Laws?

Motion by Jim Wolfe, seconded by Stuart Brock empowering the President to explore the possibility of merger with the two chapters and that possible Constitutional changes be considered for presentation at the Fall Meeting. Passed.

Dues structure change suggested by Jim Robinson to give a dues break to "ad hoc" labor education personnel was discussed. The Board came to the conclusion that to open such a loophole in the dues structure at this time would be a step backward. We are, however, sympathetic to the individual who from time to time teaches in a labor program and would like a casual relationship with Local 189. The Treasurer was given to understand that an unofficial dues break might be given when warranted.

The Board urges Local 189 members to use union personnel whenever possible to do part-time teaching.

Intern Committee Chairman Joan Suarez submitted a mini-report on the Internship, a copy of which is attached. She reported an excellent response to the 1969 Internship both in number and quality, with a strange increase in the number of Spanish-surname applicants.

President Rosen raised the question of expanding the Internship program through a Title 1 grant under the Adult Education Act. Motion by Jim Wolfe, seconded by Stuart Brock to further explore the possibility of a federal grant for an Internship program. Passed.

President Rosen read a letter from AFT President Dave Selden on AFT help in organizing. The letter indicated that AFT help would be available to Local 189 as needed, and that the AFT Militancy Fund was available for use by Local 189 in the same manner as other AFT locals use it.

President Rosen read a proposal for "Protecting Job Rights of Local 189 Members." Motion by Ruth Wiencek that President Rosen present the proposal at the membership meeting. Seconded and passed.

Lee Balliet was asked to present any AFT Constitutional amendments to the membership at the full meeting.

A resolution on the Unity of Labor Educators was assigned to Irv Rosenstein as chairman of the Resolutions Committee.

The Board acted to commend AFT President Dave Selden for his testimony before Congress on the Higher Education Act. A letter of congratulations is to be sent.

President Rosen reported that the International Affairs Committee, under the chairmanship of Bill Kemsley, was going ahead with its survey.

He also reported that Chairman of the Labor Education History Committee Oliver Peterson reported his committee is proceeding.

The resignation of Board member Joyce Miller was accepted.

The Local Chapter By-Laws Committee, appointed at the last meeting, was reactivated by President Rosen. Jim Wolfe will serve as chairman. He will develop and send out to other committee members a set of sample By-Laws, along with a proposal to help "jazz up" the local chapters. Other Committee members are Steve Remsen, Holgate Young and Jack MacKenzie.

Motion by Joan Suarez, seconded by Ruth Wiencek to endorse the work of the Haymarket Workers Memorial Committee and to contribute $25.00 to the project. The Chicago Chapter is to be the official representative of the Local to the Committee. Passed.

President Rosen reported to the Board on the meeting he, Owen Tapper and several other Board members had with AFL-CIO Education Director Walter Davis and ULEA Chairman Herb Levine. For future meetings, Davis proposed that Local 189 have their own day, the the AFL-CIO and the ULEA have one day to meet separately and one/day to meet jointly. A letter of confirmation will be sent to Walter Davis.

The Local 189 Spring meeting will be held at 4:30 p.m. on Tuesday, May 20. The Board will reconvene for breakfast to finish any business left. Meeting was temporarily adjourned at 2:00 p.m.

The Executive Board reconvened on Tuesday, May 20 at 8:00 a.m. Board members present were Stan Rosen, Martin Duffy, Owen Tapper, Jim Wolfe, Keith Knauss, Steve Remsen, Irv Rosenstein and Joan Suarez.

The agenda for the full meeting in the afternoon was discussed. There followed a discussion of AFT convention delegates and the question of remuneration. The Board agreed that no remuneration is possible for Convention delegates, but that once again we should select delegates who live close to the convention site which this year is New Orleans.

President Rosen reminded the Board that Walter Davis, AFL-CIO Education Director, has asked Local 189 to submit a list of suggested meeting places for the Spring meetings over the next three years. The Board concensus was: (1970) Minneapolis, (1971) St. Louis, (1972) in the East somewhere close to Brookwood College as Local 189 will be celebrating its 50th Anniversary.

The Board discussed the possibility of a newspaper to replace the present newsletter. No decision.

Suggestions made for the Fall meeting included a discussion of chapters and their functions; and further discussion of the Regional Conference-Council idea proposed by Holgate Young at the last meeting.

The Board was adjourned at 9:00 a.m.

Respectfully submitted,

Joan Suarez
Recording Secretary

Mini-Report on Labor Education Internship from Committee Chairman Joan Suarez

Press releases, copies of the printed flier and letters explaining the Internship were sent to Education Departments and House Publications of International Unions with education programs and to all universities engaged in labor education.

We seem to have had some good response to our requests for free publicity. Many people reported seeing our story in a number of union publications.

Forty-five (45) requests for applications were received in time to permit the applicant to file a timely application (five (5) requests for applications were received on or after April 30) and 1969 applications were sent to twenty-one (21) 1968 applicants. A total of sixty-six (66) applications were sent out.

Thirty-one (31) completed applications were received this year. Only three applications were received from students who have had no previous affiliation with a union. Applicants with union memberships fell into the following categories: AFT - 5; Steelworkers - 3; UAW - 2; TWUA - 2; IUE - 2; Teamsters, Brewery Workers, Printing Pressmen, Musicians, URW, United Nurses (Canadian), Carpenters, IBEW, Sheetmetalworkers, Laborers, Ironworkers, RWDSU, United Textile and Utility Workers - 1, each one.

Only two applications were received from institutions desiring to undertake programming the 1969 Intern. Other institutions will be contacted after an initial selection of finalists has been selected by the Internship Committee. Other institutions will be selected based on the background and geographic location of the applicant finalists, and representatives of those institutions will be asked to sit in on the final selection of an Intern for 1969.

Internship Committee members (many invitations to serve were sent; these are the Local 189 members who replied affirmatively) are:

Martin Duffy, University of Minnesota
Marjorie Rachlin, American University
James Robinson, Virginia Polytechnic
Lee Balliet, West Virginia University
Owen Tapper, West Virginia University
Joan Suarez, Amalgamated Clothing Workers

Several Local 189 members who work for unions were asked to serve, but either never replied to the invitation or refused the assignment to the pressure of other commitments. No two people from the same institution were originally invited to participate on the committee, but fate intervened.

The Internship Committee will meet in Philadelphia during the Labor Education meetings to make their final selection of an Intern for 1969-1970.

Proposal for protecting the Job Rights of Local 189 members

Labor Educators, with a few exceptions have no job security. They are often the victims of political change in their unions or of union personnel practices of questionable justness. Many labor educators are reluctant to voice independent opinions for fear of their repercussions.

It is therefore proposed that Local 189 develop as a minimum first step, a grievance procedure to protect the job rights of each member whether he works for a union or a university.

This proposal would provide each member with a final court of appeals for unfair discharge or inadequate separation arrangements (i.e. in terms of severance pay, etc.)

The proposal calls for the establishment of a grievance procedure with an independent Review Board as the final step.

The grievance procedure would be as follows.

First Step: When a member has a grievance concerning job security or related questions, he would bring the grievance to the attention of the Local 189 Executive Board. A written statement would be required.

Step II: The Officers would attempt to negotiate the problem voluntarily with the parties involved. Officers would decide whether to take the matter further.

Step III: If no suitable agreement could be reached, the Officers would contact the American Federation of Teachers, who would provide a staff representative to take up the case on behalf of the aggrieved party.

This representative would report back his findings and recommendations to the Local 189 Executive Board.

Step IV: If no amicable solution could be arrived at the case would then be submitted to the Local 189 Independent Review Board.
This Board would be empowered to investigate both sides of the questions, hearing all arguments on both the management and union side, and rendering a judgement and a recommendation. A written report would be submitted to the Local 189 Executive Board under any circumstances.

The recommendations would not be legally binding but would carry with them a moral imperative.

The Review Board would be made up of 2-3 public persons with a knowledge of labor-management relations, but with a reputation as impartial persons.

These persons would be paid from funds from the Local 189 Defense Fund or the AFT Militancy fund where appropriate in an organizing situation.

Such a system would:
1. Tend to be Preventative
2. It would provide an accepted method for reaching an intelligent and fair decision

Such a procedure might be expanded to meet other C. B. problems in the future.

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

HAYMARKET SQUARE WORKERS MEMORIAL COMMITTEE

In the welter of myths, legends, and misconceptions that have grown up around the tragic events of May 4, 1886 at Haymarket Square in Chicago, the central issues of that occasion have been obscured and too often forgotten.

Lost from sight are profound lessons to be drawn from the real history of Haymarket. These are lessons which have important contemporary significance to public officials, social activists, civic and business leaders, labor unionists, and the general public. The lessons of Haymarket relate to the legitimacy of social protest and its tactics, to the wise and temperate use of police forces by city authorities, and to the importance of responsive attitudes and actions on the part of those in control of business and social institutions in a time of social upheaval.

To the public at large there is the further lesson that prejudices, emotional hostilities, and simple ignorance of the true situation can all too easily be manipulated by self-serving interests into overwhelming pressures for the subversion of Justice and the service of Reaction.

The Haymarket Square Workers Memorial Committee undertakes to restore the Haymarket story to its proper focus and to disseminate historically accurate and significant information which can assist today's authorities, today's activists, and a deeply troubled public to make intelligent judgments about today's problems within a pertinent historical framework.

We will point out that on May 4, 1886, there were some 65,000 Chicago workers on strike under the leadership of the predecessor organization of the American Federation of Labor. The eight-hour day was the goal of this massive strike, a part of a nation-wide campaign for a reduction in the intolerably long workday then prevalent in American industry and business.

We will point out that employers of over 35,000 Chicago workers, including those in the meat packing industry, had already granted the eight-hour demand; but less responsive leaders of business and industry refused to make any concessions to the aspirations of "the scum of Europe," a phrase then much in vogue within so-called respectable circles, referring to the immigrant slum dwellers of the city who labored in its burgeoning industries.

We will point out that the demonstrators who were in Haymarket Square on the evening of May 4, 1886 were in legitimate protest over the fatal police shootings of the previous day at the McCormick Harvester plant. Regrettable as were the deaths of the police officers at the hands of an unknown bomb-thrower in Haymarket Square, there would have been no bomb, nor would scores of workers been subsequently shot down by a revengeful police force, if the authorities had not sought unwisely and unnecessarily to disperse the protest meeting.

We will point out that the thrust of the eight-hour day struggle was blunted and diverted by the ensuing arrest, trial and execution of the Anarchist leaders who had addressed the crowd assembled in the Haymarket, and that the striking workers lost their cause, and the Anarchist orators lost their lives, in the subsequent atmosphere of hysteria whipped up by the newspapers in support of lynch law, administered under the color of legality by those who managed affairs in the Chicago of the 1880's.

Accordingly, the Haymarket Square Workers Memorial Committee undertakes in all appropriate ways to honor the memories of the Eight-Hour Day Strikers and their dead, who were like the police themselves, victims of a philosophy of resistance to change, and a policy directed to the repression of the aspirations of the poor and powerless for a share in the satisfactions of life.

In this effort we are mindful of the traditions in the struggle for truth and justice in the service of the un-privileged established by Chicagoans who have gone before us, among them the great Clarence Darrow, Jane Addams, and Governor John Peter Altgeld.

EXECUTIVE BOARD MINUTES

Local 189, AFT

Campus Inn
Ann Arbor, Michigan

June 3, 1970

The Executive Board of Local 189, AFT, convened near 10:00 a.m. on Wednesday, June 3, 1970, with President Stan Rosen presiding.

Board members present were Owen Tapper, Anne Green, Bill Kemsley, Emory Via, Martin Duffy, John Mikrut, Prince Moon, Steve Cook and Joan Suarez.

On motion by Duffy, seconded by Moon, $500 was appropriated to cover the expenses of John Froines, guest speaker at the Spring Meeting of Local 189 which was to begin at 1:00 p.m. this date.

On motion by Tapper, seconded by Moon, the Board agreed to informally extend a life membership in Local 189 to members who have belonged to the local for thirty or more years. It was understood that formal constitutional language would be proposed at the Winter meeting along with overall dues restructuring language.

On motion by Mikrut, seconded by Green, it was agreed to recommend to the membership a constitutional revision which would permit Chapter Chairmen to designate a representative to attend the Executive Board meeting with full voice and vote in the event a Chapter Chairman could not be present. (Language change appears in the Spring Minutes of Local 189).

Discussion of a constitutional change, submitted by John Mikrut, dealing with a special dues structure for people who work only part time in labor education, resulted in John withdrawing his proposal with the proviso that a Committee to review the entire dues structure be appointed and directed to report at the Winter Meeting of Local 189. In the interim, the Secretary-Treasurer is to continue to exercise discretion in accepting part-time members at a special dues level.

President Rosen appointed John Mikrut as chairman of the Dues Review Committee. Serving with Mikrut are Owen Tapper, Al Wickman, and Joan Suarez.

A petition by two members in Maine to form a Chapter was discussed. On motion by Emory Via, second by Suarez the petition was rejected for insufficient number of members. An amendment by Bill Kemsley that a Committee review the whole matter of Chapter organization, structure and function was accepted by the Board.

Bill Kemsley was appointed chairman of the Chapter Review Committee. Steve Cook will serve with him along with other members who Kemsley may draft.

A petition by Local 189 members in Ohio to form an Ohio Chapter was approved on motion by Suarez and second by Moon.

On motion by Suarez and second by Mikrut, the Winter Meeting for Local 189 was set for November 20-21-22 in Washington, D. C.

A report from Wells Keddie, chairman of Project COSPIRO (Council of Staff, Professional and International Representatives Organizations) was read. It recommended that an initial meeting of COSPIRO be held in the Fall, 1970.

On motion by Green and second by Cook, the report was accepted and a recommendation to the membership that the COSPIRO meeting be held in conjunction with the Winter Meeting of Local 189 was agreed upon. Mikrut was assigned to give the report on behalf of Keddie at the membership meeting.

Anne Green volunteered to handle the 1970 COPE collection at the Local 189 meeting.

A suggestion by Dorothy Oko that Local 189 designate the New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations Library as our official archives, along with correspondence from the Library, was discussed. On motion by Moon and second by Tapper, it was agreed to recommend to the membership that we do as Dorothy suggested.

Owen Tapper informed us that Dorothy Oko is very ill. The Board agreed to send flowers immediately, along with a message expressing our love.

Membership chairman Ann Green made a short report, asking for guidance in carrying out the task of contacting all potential members. Joan suggested that Anne send a letter to each potential member with a copy of the letter or a notification of some sort going to the Regional Board member and/or Chapter chairman where one exists for follow-up.

Internship Committee Chairman Joan Suarez reported that the Amalgamated Clothing Workers were thus far the only institution to volunteer to co-sponsor the Intern in 1970. She said that applications had not been read and asked for volunteers to read them during the next two days in Ann Arbor so that a group of finalists could be selected.

Martin Duffy offered to act as chairman with Mikrut and Green also reading applications (Lee Balliet later offered to help read also), with the Committee to convene for breakfast one morning and make their final selections.

It was agreed to make one final offer at the membership meeting for another institution besides the ACWA to make a bid for co-sponsorship. Final Intern selection would be made by June 15.

Joan Suarez reported that discussions were currently going on among members of the Missouri Chapter of Local 189 and the University of Missouri in regard to a Labor Education Techniques conference along the lines proposed some time ago by Hoagy Young.

President Rosen announced that a Rank & File Conference, spearheaded by the "Labor Today" group in Chicago, has been scheduled for Sat.-Sun., June 27-28, at the Packinghouse Labor and Community Center, 4859 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Joan Suarez reported that three responses to Local 189's letter to all international unions concerning April 22 ("Earth Day") activities and Environmental Action, Inc. had been received. The ACWA sent a donation to Environmental Action, the UAW replied they were already involved and the GBBA said we should be careful not to take jobs away from their members.

The Board meeting adjourned at 1:15 p.m.

Respectfully submitted,

Joan Suarez, Rec. Sec'y.

SPRING MEETING

Local 189, AFT, Campus Inn, Ann Arbor, Michigan
June 3, 1970

The Spring Meeting of Local 189, AFT, was called to order by President Stan Rosen at 1:30 p.m. on Wednesday, June 3, 1970 at the Campus Inn in Ann Arbor, Michigan.

President Rosen opened by announcing that our guest speaker, John Froines of the Conspiracy 7 (8) would be arriving at about 3:00 p.m. and that we would attempt to finish with our business before then.

On motion by Connie Kopelov and second by Prince Moon the minutes of the previous meeting were accepted as printed.

President Rosen announced that Local 189 member Dorothy Oko was very ill. He said the Board had taken action to send flowers and a message of love.

President Rosen asked that the membership pause for a moment of silence in the memory of two education associates, Jimmy Noe and Francis Levine, who had passed away since our last meeting.

Recording Secretary Joan Suarez summarized the minutes of the Executive Board meeting which had been held earlier in the day. They were approved as summarized.

REUTHER RESOLUTION

President Rosen called for a special order of business-- a Resolution on Walter Reuther. The resolution was read by Steve Cook and is attached. On motion by Joan Suarez, second by Jim Wolfe, the resolution was approved. Copies of the resolution will be sent to the UAW Executive Board, the ILPA, the ALA, the AFL-CIO News, etc.

SPECIAL COMMITTEES

President Rosen explained the action of the Executive Board in regard to Chapters, indicating that a Committee chaired by Bill Kemsley has been instructed to bring a report to the Winter Meeting of Local 189 on Chapter organization, structure and function.

President Rosen explained the discussion at the Executive Board in regard to the Dues Structure and the Review Committee, chaired by John Mikrut, which has been directed to report to the Winter Meeting.

WINTER MEETING

The Winter Meeting of Local 189 was announced for November 20-21-22, 1970 in Washington, D. C. Suggested topics for that meeting should be directed to the Executive officers of Local 189.

LOCAL 189 CHOOSES ARCHIVES

President Rosen explained the discussion at the Executive Board meeting of Dorothy Oko's suggestion that we declare the New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations Library in New York as our official archives. He said that in planning our 1970 50th Anniversary celebration of the founding of Local 189 at Brookwood Labor College many people may turn up papers and files which could be turned over to the Library.

He asked for membership approval for Executive Board action and received it.

REPORT ON TEXTILE UNIT

President Rosen reported that the professional unit at the Textile Workers in New York had apparently decided upon the Newspaper Guild, Local 2 as their bargaining agent and are now engaged in collective bargaining.

Stan said that Ruth Weincek had sent a copy of the IUE unit contract to the Textile unit and that our services had been offered. Connie Kopelov commented that the problems faced by the Textile unit in their negotiations with their employer have been profuse and that perhaps the outcome of the negotiations confronts Local 189 with the problem and the reality of attempting to represent collective bargaining units.

COMMUNICATION?

President Rosen announced that we had received a communication from AFL-CIO President George Meany in response to receiving a copy of our resolution on Vietnam.

FINANCIAL REPORT

Secretary-Treasurer Owen Tapper made the most comprehensive report of his term of office. He said that "through good stewardship" Local 189 is now in the black. On motion by Chris Piluras and second by Jim Wolfe, the Financial report was accepted, with special commendation to Owen for managing the report without a blackboard. (A copy of the report is attached.)

MILITANCY FUND AND VIEWPOINTS

John Schmidman, chairman of the Militancy Fund Committee, thanked Owen Tapper for preparing the Militancy Fund report for him and urged continued contributions. (A copy of the report is attached.) While he was on his feet, he also reported that the Summer 1969 edition of Viewpoints which has now become the Spring of 1970 Viewpoints is published and copies were available at the head table.

Schmidman said that the choice of colors had not been multitudinous and that the "proletarian" wrenches had seemed infinitely more preferable that the other two choices, one of which was obscene and the other green and gold -- or maybe he said the obscene green and gold -- in any event, one article has been received for the next edition. He urged further contributions.

On motion by Tapper, seconded by Suarez the local commended Schmidman for "finally" getting a copy of "Viewpoints" out. Schmidman was recorded as voting Nay on the question of commendation.

LOCAL 189 DIRECTORY

Owen Tapper reported that a new Directory of Local 189 would be compiled and printed in the Fall for 1970-71. He said that 1969 Directories were still available even though now "worthless." He indicated that since publication there had been 144 changes, 72 drops, 66 adds. Someone suggested we set up a committee to promote job stability for labor educators.

PROJECT COSPIRO

John Mikrut, reporting for Wells Keddie on Project COSPIRO (Council of Staff, Professional and International Representatives Organizations) presented the Executive Board recommendation that the initial meeting of COSPIRO be held in conjunction with the Winter Meeting of Local 189. Keddie's report indicated interest in the project on the part of several trade union units. (Copy of the report is attached.)

In the discussion that followed, Ruth Wincek reviewed the reasons for beginning the project at the 1969 Winter Meeting of Local 189 and allowed as how the decision of Textile unit had little to do with the Project.

Ruth then recommended that the first exploratory meeting of COSPIRO be co-sponsored by a university labor education program in conference form. The conference could discuss the changing relationships of staff people to their organizations and some of the problems involved in dealing with unions as employers.

She said that university co-sponsorship should make such a conference or meeting more acceptable to the staff organizations that are more closely tied to their respective unions. Meanwhile mutual problems could be aired and machinery for interchange of information established.

She further suggested that Local 189, rather than the university, continue to do the recruitment of potential member organizations for such a Council.

On motion of Anne Green, second by Allan Morrison, the recommendation of the Executive Board to set the Winter meeting of Local 189 as a target date for the first meeting of COSPIRO (taking into consideration Ruth's suggestion) was approved. The present committee will continue to function between now and then.

MEMBERSHIP COMMITTEE REPORT

Membership Chairman Anne Green reported that she has been continuing the organization work begun by Keith Knauss before his induction into the Army. She summarized the discussion of avenues of approach to potential new members at the Executive Board meeting, indicating that she would be sending letters to potential members inviting them to join Local 189. Copies of the correspondence will go to the Regional Executive Board member and/or Chapter Chairman where they exist for a personal follow-up on the invitation.

On motion by Martin Duffy, Local 189 said thanks to Pfc. Keith Knauss for his work on the Membership Committee prior to greetings from "Uncle Sam."

INTERNSHIP REPORT

Internship Committee Chairman Joan Suarez reported that thus far the only bid for co-sponsorship of the 1970 Labor Education Intern had been from the Amalgamated Clothing Wjorkers. She asked that any further bids be made in the next two days and be directed to Martin Duffy who was chairing the Intern Selection Committee.

Joan said that applications had not been read yet, but would be in the next two days by Martin Duffy, Anne Green and John Mikrut. Any other members desiring to serve on the Selection Committee should talk to Martin Duffy. (Lee Balliet volunteered to serve.)

She said that the Selection Committee would pick a group of finalists who would then be interviewed by the co-sponsoring institution, as was done in 1969. The final selection should be made by June 15.

Motion by Roger Rines, seconded by Chris Piluras, to disband the Internship Program after 1970. Motion to table until Winter Meeting made by Allen Morrison, seconded by Joan Suarez. Passed.

REPORT OF NOMINATING COMMITTEE

A written report of the Nominating Committee, submitted by Committee Chairman Ray MacDonald, was read. Nominations from the floor which were accepted by the nominee included Allen Morrison for recording secretary; Lee Balliet and Connie Kopelov for AFT Convention. Joan Suarez declined the Nominating Committee's nomination for Convention delegate, as she would be unable to attend the AFT Convention which is scheduled for August 16-22, 1970 in Pittsburgh.

The language on the constitutional amendment is as follows:

"RANK AND FILE CONFERENCE" ANNOUNCED

President Stan Rosen announced that under the leadership of "Labor Today" in Chicago, that a "Rank and File Conference" was being planned for Saturday and Sunday, June 27-28, at the Packinghouse Labor and Community Center, 4859 S. Wabash Ave. He urged Local 189 members to attend if possible.

"EARTH DAY" REPORT

Joan Suarez reported that Local 189's appeal to all international unions to participate in April 22 - "Earth Day" - activities had resulted in three responses from international unions. The ACWA responded with a donation for Environmental Action, Inc., the UAW responded that they were already involved and the GBBA said we should be careful not to take jobs away from their members.

She also announced that Environmental Action, Inc. is staying in business in an attempt to coordinate lobbying and citizen activities on behalf of environmental legislation. This group is sponsoring a seminar at Black Lake in July. More information on the seminar will be sent to Local 189 members shortly.

President Rosen announced that our guest speaker had arrived. The meeting adjourned for coffee prior to hearing John Froines.

A summary of John Froines' presentation will be forwarded at a later date. (A copy of Froines' bio is attached as 9).

Whereas, Brother Reuther served for 24 years as president of the UAW, was the last president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, a former member of the AFL-CIO Executive Council and a founding father of the Alliance for Labor Action, and

Whereas, Brother Reuther, for many years, served as the conscience of the labor movement, a collective bargaining innovator, and a pioneer in the field of labor education,

Therefore, be it resolved that Local 189 of the American Federation of Teachers expresses its sincere sorrow at the death of a trade unionist without equal, Walter P. Reuther.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Members, Local 189, AFT

FROM: John Schmidman, Militancy fund Chairman

RE: AFT, Militancy Fund

Somewhat over two years ago, AFT initiated a campaign to raise one million dollars for a militancy fund for teachers. The purposes of the fund were to assume certain legal obligations connected with strikes by teachers and to conduct legislative campaigns in various states against restrictive laws.

On the basis of AFT's membership during 1968, each AFT member would be obligated to the extent of $6.25 to meet the million dollar goal.

On the basis of Local 189's average paid membership during 1968 (277), the local's goal was set at $1731.

To this date, approximately 125 local 189 members have contributed a total of $1139.69 to the fund. Contributions have ranged in size from $1 to $35.

Efforts to obtain contributions will continue until the Local meets its goal (or responsibilities).

REPORT ON THE COSPIRO-CY

Acting under the mandate of the Fall, 1969, meeting of Local 189, the Committee on Staff, Professional and International Representatives (COSPIRO) of our union has contacted eleven persons identified as potentially interested in the purposes of COSPIRO. (These purposes are: first, to convene a conference for discussion purposes sometime in the Fall, 1970; and, second, to move towards the early establishment of a Council of Staff, Professional and International Representatives with the explicit goal of strengthening collective bargaining positions.) The letter sent to these individuals is included in this report as Appendix A.

Those contacted were: Al J. Zankl, President, Field Representatives Federation; John Skiffington, United Rubber Workers field staff; Robert Pollock, President, CWA Staff Union; William Gerhauser, Jr., Field Representatives Union, Insurance Workers; J. W. Sullivan, President, IAM Representatives Union; Richard Hixon, PUSH AFT Unit, ANG; Frank Martino, International Chemical Workers Representatives Union; Anthony Heyes, Textile Workers ANG Unit (does not include Heyes, but he was the contact); Charles Hughes, AFL-CIO Unit, ANG; John Powderly, United Steelworkers Education Department; Connie Kopelov, Amalgamated Clothing Workers ANG Unit.

Of this group, replies were received from: Al Zankl, Robert Pollock, William Gerhauser, and Connie Kopelov. Each of these responses was positive; excerpts from their replies have been included in this report as Appendix B.

The letters to these contacts did not go out until May 15, for reasons largely associated with the COSPIRO chairman's innate resistance to law and order. This undoubtedly is a partial explanation of why others have not yet replied.

Where do we stand?

At this moment, there is enough interest in the conference to warrant our continuing to seek replies from those we have already identified and to try to identify still more contacts in staff unions. We do not, however, have enough information or warm bodies to state definitely that a conference will be held. As the replies noted in Appendix B indicate, there have been attempts at coordination in the past which were initiated by a single individual. (There may have been others on a more organized basis; we do not know about them as a committee, however.) The chances are that if we persevere, by the time of the Fall 189 meeting we should have had the conference, provided Local 189 authorizes COSPIRO to keep struggling.

Therefore, the committee asks the Executive Board to recommend to the membership that COSPIRO continue its work, aiming at a Fall, 1970, conference of interested parties prior to the Local 189 meeting. Unless otherwise indicated by the members of COSPIRO, it is also recommended that the present personnel be continued on the committee. Further, all members of 189 are asked to forward suggested contacts to the COSPIRO chairman.

It should be noted that because of circumstances usually associated with 189 committees, this report has been prepared by the chairman and not formally approved by the rest of COSPIRO. Therefore, it should be treated as a tentative statement, subject to amendment by other committee members present at either the Executive Board or membership meetings.

APPENDIX A

Letter sent to COSPIRO Contacts

Dear _____:

Workers Education Local 189, American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, last Fall became interested in getting together with representatives from the various unions which bargain on behalf of international representatives, staff professionals and office workers working with or for the labor movement. We set up a committe, of which I am chairman, to explore this possibility; in the course of such explorations your name came up.

The prupose of this letter is primarily to find out if you would be interested in a conference, probably put together by sometime next Fall, at which the problems facing those of us who work with or for the labor movement could be discussed. I am aware that there have been earlier attempts to do something like this, but at the moment we do not even have the name of any previous organizations. If you know of anyone else (organization or individuals) who is working in a similar direction, I'd very much appreciate knowing about it.

To sum up: Our committee is anxious to know these things: (1) Would you be interested in exploring the possibilities of cooperation at some level among the various unions representing those working with and for the labor movement? (2) Do you know of any other attempts, current or not, to do something similar? (3) Do you know of any other individuals or organizations our committee ought to contact?

It has taken us some time to get moving on this investigation. Consequently, I must ask a favor of you: Would you please let me hear from you as soon as possible? If you wish, please call me collect at Area Code 814, telephone 865-5425. I apologize for allowing our inefficiency to impose urgency upon you, but our local's semi-annual meeting (we are a nation-wide "local" union) come up June 3 and I should like to present a preliminary report to the members at that time.

Thank you very much for your consideration.

Fraternally,

Wells Keddie
Vice President Local 189,
Chairman, Committee on Staff, Professional and International Representatives Organizations

Comments from COSPIRO Contacts - Confidential, for Local 189 Internal Use

From Robert G. Pollock, President, CWA Staff Union: "The CWA Staff Union would be very interested in a meeting of the type described. . . . We have made some preliminary moves in this direction, with little success. On October 23, 1969, I wrote . . . to the Staff Unions of the Steelworkers and the Machinists, and to this day my letters remained unanswered....We have wage arbitration with CWA the last part of February and ran into an Exhibit presented by CWA*...which we were unable to verify because we have no contacts with other unions representing International Representatives. CWA had more information than we had at the arbitration hearing....Delores Lysalowski is president of Local 13 of the Office and Professional Employee International Union in St. Louis....She advises me Local 13 would be interested in a meeting of the type described in your letter."

*(The exhibit CWA prepared for the arbitration hearing is reproduced below, as part of the communication from Brother Pollock; it gives an interesting survey of salaries as of February, 1970, which has some relevance to COSPIRO activities.)

We of FRF just came out of a five month bargaining session in Washington, and as the saying goes, nothing comes easy. We in FRF are the only chartered (Directly Affiliated) group of staffers in the country; we operate with an executive board from various areas in the U.S., namely, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, New Orleans, and Charlotte, N. C. We operate on one year agreements....We have made several attempts to have our Charter broadened from Field Representatives to a National Union or International Union. As expected, our requests have not borne fruit....The day must come when all staffers must out of necessity join ranks and assist each other when bargaining with our employers, as they are no different than any employer I deal with (but smarter)."

From William Gerhauser, Jr., Field Representatives Union, Insurance Workers (by telephone, paraphrased): Very much interested in both the expressed purpose of COSPIRO and in the conference itself. Had no further leads to give COSPIRO regarding contacts, but he will send the FRU newsletter to the chairman; the Newsletter is the principal means of communication among FRU members. He asked for a copy of the COSPIRO report when it was finished.

From Connie Kopelov, ANG unit, Amalgamated Clothing Workers (by telephone, paraphrased): Favorable to the purposes of COSPIRO and to the proposed conference. Since Connie is a Local 189 member, she will discuss this matter further with COSPIRO members at the June 3, 1970, meeting in Ann Arbor. She reports that the United Federation of Teachers (in New YOrk City) staff members have a union, with substantial benefits; she will try to make contact in that group.

JOHN R. FROINES, CONSPIRATOR

John Froines was born in 1939 in Oakland, California.

Froines represents the widening connection between radical activism and the academic radical community. A member of the Mobilization's convention organizing staff, he is specifically charged with consipiracy and demonstrating and teaching the making of incendiary devices to street demonstrators.

He received a Bachelor of Science Degree from the University of California at Berkeley in 1962, a Master of Science Degree in 1964 and a PhD in 1967 from Yale University. At Yale he held fellowships from DuPont, National Science Foundation and National Institutes of Health. He did postdoctoral research with a National Institutes of Health fellowship at the Royal Institution of Great Britain where he worked with Professor G. Porter, nobel laureate in Chemistry. He is currently assistant professor of chemistry at the University of Oregon.

He is married and has one daughter, Rebecca, who is twenty months old.

An early SDS member, Froines served for two years as a community organizer in the New Haven ERAP project. He was a fund raiser for SNCC and CORE in 1963-64. At Berkeley he was a member of Slate student political party. He taught in a ghetto tutorial project in summer 1964, and was chairman of Students for Johnson at Yale in 1964. In 1966 he was an original founding member of AIM (American Independent Movement) in New Haven and along with Dr. Allen Steinbach founded the Radical Science Information Service in 1968.

(Radical Science Information Service provides information about science and technology to the Movement by way of its own media. It encourages scientists of a radical bent to begin making explicit connections about science and society. RSIS has no formal meetings of officers. Members become active by contributing short articles that deal with science and technology to the Liberation News Service in NYC, which serves over 100 underground newspapers and radical projects.)

While in England, Froines was a founding member and signer of the New Left Manifesto. At present he is a member of the steering committee of the New Mobilization. He is a member of the American Chemical Society, American Association for the Advancement of Science, The Royal Institution and Sigma Xi.

Professor Froines' primary professional interests are in the physical and chemical aspects of the behavior of electronically excited molecules. He has published extensively in professional journals. Presently he is working on problems of ecological breakdown and on the general implications of the technological society.

Dear 189 Member:

As many of you know by now, the 1970 189 Intern selection was Miss Joycelyn Thompson of Washington, D. C. Her internship program is being "co-sponsored" by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Miss Thompson, an employee of the IBEW in Washington, D. C. is a member of the Office and Professional Employees Union, Local 2. She is a native of Guyana (formerly British Guiana), South America. She has been a permanent resident of the United States for the past eight years.

Active in the Guyana labor movement, Miss Thompson came to the United States to go to school. She attended Howard University and has a degree in Labor Economics. Preferring to remain close to the Labor Movement, she took a job as a clerk-typist at the IBEW while preparing to do graduate work at Howard and American University.

The Internship program began on August 1. A copy of the eight week schedule is attached. If the Intern is scheduled for your area and you wish to meet her, please notify me as soon as possible.

Sincerely yours,

TIME TABLE

The following time table will be observed in conducting this referendum as provided under ARTICLE XII, Section 2, of the AFT constitution:

The six-week period shall begin Friday, September 4th, and shall end Friday, October 16th. During this period special referendum information shall be provided in the October issue of the AMERICAN TEACHER.

3. On October 16, 1970, ballots will be mailed to the individual members of all locals and to the individual members-at-large of state federations.

4. The closing date of the referendum shall be November 16, 1970. (thirty days from the date the ballots were mailed from the national office.) Only ballots that are received by November 16, 1970 shall be counted.

SUMMARY OF TIME TABLE

2. September 4 . . . . . .Official notice of referendum
3. September 4 to October 16. . . . . .Debate
4. October 16 to November 16. . . . . .Balloting
5. November 16. . . . . .Last date for receipt of ballots

REFERENDUM PROCEDURE

1. All voting in the referendum is to be by individual members on official ballots. Each member is entitled to cast one secret vote. No member or officer of a local is entitled to cast more than one ballot.

2. The ballot is to be returned in the official envelopes provided to each member. The ballot is to be inserted into the ballot envelope without the member's name. This envelope is then inserted into the return envelope which bears the member's name so that eligibility can be verified.

3. Each local that holds a membership meeting for discussion of the question shall give equal opportunity for the proponents and the opponents to present their arguments.

4. The number of votes from any local shall not exceed the number of members for whom per-capita was last paid prior to October 16, 1970. The officers of each local shall be responsible for paying full per-capita on all members to the national office in order to assure each member of his vote. Ballots of locals in bad standing will not be counted.

5. The membership roster at the national office must be as accurate as possible. All additions, deletions and name changes must be in the AFT Information Center, 162 N. Clinton, Chicago, Illinois 60606, prior to October 2, 1970. Please use forms provided to each treasurer.

6. A majority vote of all members of the American Federation of Teachers in good standing whose ballots are cast in conformity with the above procedures and with the AFT constitution shall be necessary for the adoption of a position on the war in Indochina.

7. A "YES" vote indicates you wish the AFT to adopt the policy. A "NO" vote indicates that you do not wish the AFT to adopt the policy.

Since it is possible that some of the officers of locals have recently been elected and not yet reported to the national office, this communication is being sent to not only the president, but also to the secretaries and treasurers of the locals.

In case this communication is received by any person no longer serving as an officer of the local, it should be promptly delivered to the person who is holding office at the present time. Additional forms for you to report officer changes are enclosed.

It is hoped that this democratic procedure can be conducted in your local as efficiently as possible.

I solicit your cooperation in making this referendum truly reflective of the wishes of our members.

My very best regards.

Fraternally,

/Signed/

President

EXPLANATORY NOTE

ON

THE TWO REFERENDA

The AFT convention voted to send to referendum a resolution opposing the war in Indochina. Soon after the convention adjourned, the AFT Secretary-Treasurer received a properly submitted petition for a referendum reiterating the past position of the AFT -- not to take a position in regard to the war.

One way to handle this situation would be to send the convention referendum out first, followed in a few days by the referendum submitted by nineteen locals. Both referenda would be before the membership at the same time although the voting deadline would be a few days earlier for the convention resolution than for the other. Therefore, in order to save money, and to avoid confusion, we have included both in the same mailing.

Since the proposals are mutually exclusive, members should vote FOR only one or the other to prevent the possibility of both resolutions passing. They may vote AGAINST either or both.

Local 189's position on the war in Indo-China is also enclosed.

OAT/jt

Resolution from Local 189 AFT for submission to the AFT Convention:

RESOLUTION ON THE WAR IN INDO-CHINA

Workers Education Local 189, American Federation of Teachers, hereby expresses its continuing and growing distress over the American presence in Indo-China.

With this statement, we call upon the Executive Board of the American Federation of Teachers and the Executive Board of the AFL-CIO to issue a call upon the President of the United States demanding that he order an immediate end to the war in Indo-China and that he bring the American troops now there home from Vietnam, Laos, Thailand and Cambodia at once.

We also call upon all labor educators, whether members of Local 189 or not, to take prompt action to insure the fullest possible discussion within the labor movement of the reasons for ending the war and bringing the troops home now.

It is also resolved that this statement be given the widest possible circulation in the press, with copies sent to the President of the United States, to the AFT officers and Executive Board, to the next AFT Convention for consideration, to the officers and Executive Board of the AFL-CIO, to all of the major wire services, to television networks, nationally-known newspapers, and the The American Teacher and the AFL-CIO News. WAR IN INDOCHINA

WHEREAS, the major job of the AFT is to remain strong and united so that it can continue to be as successful in forthcoming struggles as it has been in the past, and

WHEREAS, the Vietnam issue divides our members as it does our national, and

WHEREAS, AFT members who wish to be active on the issue have adequate opportunity for doing so in organizations established for that purpose without dividing the AFT, and

WHEREAS, we must continue to take a "no position" or our union meetings, executive committees, state and national conventions will be prevented from reaching on agenda vital trade union and educational issues because of time consumed on implementing our policy, and

WHEREAS, there are already demands that if the AFT adopts a policy that we take ads, sponsor demonstrations, contribute funds, that we make the campaign a top priority, and

WHEREAS, taking a position is not an end it is a beginning of a continuing campaign in which the AFT will absorb all its energies, time and money, and

WHEREAS, in all our strikes we have only one strong source of support --- the organized labor movement, and whatever position we take we will be alienating major union support which we will need again, and

WHEREAS, we oppose taking any positions which identify the AFT not merely with a desire for an end to the war but for a victory of the Vietcong, and any position for immediate withdrawl which does not clearly dissassociate AFT from those who welcome a United States defeat and a Vietcong victory must be rejected, and

WHEREAS, the other resolution submitted for referendum in proposing a 1971 deadline for all troop withdrawal is, in effect, an immediate withdrawal position and because it makes no demands on the other side and offers no safeguards, it is tantamount to supporting a Vietcong victory; therefore, be it

RESOLVED: that we reaffirm the position voted by our entire membership in referendum that the AFT not take any position directly or indirectly on the war in Indochina.

SHALL WE REAFFIRM THE "NO POSITION" POLICY ON THE WAR IN INDOCHINA?

☐ YES ☐ NO

The above is not your official ballot. The proposal printed above will appear on the official ballot to be mailed directly to each member October 16, 1970.

The time table and referendum procedure will be exactly as that set up for the resolution on the war, submitted by the convention.

MOTION #1 - EXECUTIVE BOARD PROCEDURE

MOTION: That the Executive Board authorize the President to follow the following procedure for Executive Board Meetings recognizing that it is extremely difficult for the Board, as a body, to meet together with regularity.

1. MEETING - The President will schedule Executive Board Meetings whenever possible and 12 Executive Board members shall constitute a quorum of the Board.

2. MOTIONS WHEN A MEETING IS NOT POSSIBLE -- When it is not possible to obtain a quorum, motions may be adopted in the following manner:

   a. Members of the Board may submit motions to the President for action by the Board.
   b. The President will call a meeting of members of the Executive Board for the purpose of discussing motions or other business which may be required. Members of the Board shall be present to consider and discuss the motion.
   c. A summary of the discussion and the views of those present is then to be mailed to members of the Board along with the motion in mail ballot form.
   d. The result of the vote and the comments of members of the Board is then sent to the members of the Board before action on the motion is considered final.

Re: Board Procedures - Motion #1

It is virtually impossible for an international body, such as ours, to meet regularly. It is almost as impossible for the Executive Board to meet regularly. It is, therefore, important that we develop a method by which the Board can conduct its business with some efficiency.

Beginning in 1962 the Board adopted a procedure involving mail ballots. This procedure has worked reasonably well. It provides for consideration of each issue as well as for maximum participation by the Board.

It is proposed that we continue this procedure.

The ballot is enclosed. Vote and then return the bottom portion of the ballot in the enclosed envelope.

STATEMENT OF PRESIDENT SELDEN IN SUPPORT OF AN ANTI-VIETNAM POSITION FOR AFT. OAT

EXCERPT
Wednesday Afternoon Session
AFT Convention
August 19, 1970
Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania

(President Selden speaking on Resolution re War in Southeast Asia)

PRESIDENT SELDEN: Mr. Chairman, I am Dave Selden, United Federation of College Teachers Local 1460.

I rise to support the Majority Report. (Applause)

This has not always been my position. As a matter of fact, until three years ago I was a rather mild supporter of the administration.

My reasons are primarily these:

I am interested in domestic problems. I think that foreign problems are extremely complicated, and I tend to shy away from them. But I am intensely interested in domestic reform.

As you will recall, many people tried to raise the cry that you have to choose between domestic reform or the war, one or the other, and I took the position that the productive capacity of this nation, if properly organized, could support both if it wanted to.

Now, what caused me to change my position?

Well, it is very simple.

My position -- my position originally -- was that I viewed the Vietnam War as the extension of our containment policy adopted some time, or immediately after World War II; and it seemed the logical extension of that policy.

My shift in opinion was caused by the defense of Greece, and I became convinced after the military junta took over in Greece that the containment policy was bankrupt. (Applause)

It is the minds of people and not artificial boundaries of countries which count. (Applause)

And for that reason I felt that we had to fight our battle on a different front; and gradually I have shifted my position until I now support the moderate position. I therefore strongly advocate the Majority Report.

But there is another, I think, more important reason.

This issue divides the liberal community. In this issue as long as we do not come out in opposition to the war, we divide our strength in politics and almost every endeavor.

I think the time has come that there is such a preponderance of opinion, the time has come to reunite the liberal community behind an anti-war division, and therefore again I strongly urge support of the Majority Report.

Thank you. (Applause)

Dear Owen,

We have a labor education vacancy in our Center for Labor and Management. We are looking for someone with experience directly or indirectly in labor education, a Ph.D. or a person winding up a Ph.D., preferably with interest in a particular phase of industrial relations or labor history, who could teach an academic course in our college.

Could you please supply information about this vacancy through your normal channels? I realize that there are a number of people looking for work in this field, but I must stress that it is imperative in our situation to have the necessary educational requirement mentioned above.

If anyone is interested they could contact me here at The University of Iowa.

1. The Executive Board meets at 10:00 A. M. at the Manger-Hamilton Hotel in Washington, D. C. on April 28, 1971. Please see the "Events Board" for the exact room location.

2. As many of you are aware, the 189 bargaining unit at IUE has been gradually shrinking over the years from a high of 17 to 6 now. It is also anticipated that 2 more individuals will be shifted from the unit -- leaving 4 -- possibly only 3.

This left the unit rather powerless.

With these factors under consideration, and with the unanimous consent of all concerned, it was decided to dissolve the unit if IUE would agree to a suitable grievance procedure to protect present 189 members -- and their successors.

IUE did agree. And on March 11 an agreement was signed dissolving the unit and instituting a grievance procedure. A copy of both documents is enclosed.

189 members at IUE will now become part of the D. C. Chapter.

MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

By and Between the International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers (IUE) and Workers Education Local 189, American Federation of Teachers (AFT)

It is understood that all employees of IUE at its National Headquarters who are currently in AFT Local 189 bargaining unit -- and their successors -- who do not become supervisors (as defined by the Act), and who maintain membership in Local 189, shall receive the protection of a grievance and arbitration clause as follows:

1. An IUE employee (as described above) who may have a grievance with the IUE, shall take his dispute to the Executive Officers of AFT Local 189. A grievance is defined as a dispute between an IUE employee and IUE administration which concerns discrimination of any type, discipline or discharge.

2. The Executive Officers of AFT Local 189 shall determine whether there is sufficient cause to pursue the matter. If the Local determines that sufficient cause does exist, it shall file a notice with the President of the IUE, AFL-CIO-CLC or his designee. The notice shall set forth the gneral nature of the dispute and the corrective action the Local wishes the IUE to take.

3. Within the thirty (30) days following the notice, a representative of the AFT Local 189, together with the aggrieved employee, and the President of the IUE, AFL-CIO-CLC or his designee shall meet in an effort to resolve the dispute.

4. Within the thirty (30) days following the meeting, described in 3. above, the Local may submit the dispute, if unresolved, to arbitration. The parties will make every reasonable effort to select an individual closely associated with the labor movement to serve as the arbitrator. If there is no agreement within 10 days, the parties shall request that the American Arbitration Association submit a list of five (5) arbitrators, from which the IUE and Local 189 shall each strike two names alternately.

5. The award of the arbitrator shall be final and binding on the parties. The arbitrators fees and expenses shall be borne equally by the parties.

UNION PHILOSOPHY

THE PROFESSIONAL

By JACK BARBASH★

MUCH of the discussion about white collar workers, professional workers and unions has been obscured by folklore and confused thinking. I believe it is necessary, therefore, to get at some fundamentals about the way people, whether professionals or not, behave in our kind of economic society. Unless we fully understand certain principles, the problem of finding a sensible way of dealing with this problem of professionals in unions will continue to evade us.

PRINCIPLE NUMBER 1: An employee-employer relationship inevitably, and I underscore the word inevitably—generates problems between the employer and employee. The more employees, the more problems, and the more complex are the problems. When the employees are few, it is possible for the employee to settle or resolve these problems on a face-to-face basis with the employer.

Mr. Barbash

Professor of labor education, University of Wisconsin School for Workers, and member of Workers Education Local 189; formerly, research and education director AFL-CIO Industrial Union department.*

PRINCIPLE NUMBER 2: The character of the work makes little difference as to whether problems exist between the employee and the employer. The sweeper, the milling machine operator, the clerk, the engineer, the social worker, the doctor, the lawyer and the teacher—all of these, if they stand in the relationship of employee to any employer, will inevitably experience feelings of irritation, dissatisfaction, ill treatment, or what have you.

The sweeper doesn't always want to be a sweeper. He wants a better job. The milling machine operator knows a fellow who is doing the same work across the street, in another department, who is getting more money than he is. The clerk sees the fellow in the shop getting higher wages. The engineer is assigned to a job which doesn't comport with his notion of what a professional should be doing. The social worker doesn't think she should be getting less than a sweeper just because she is working for a philanthropic agency. The teacher resents the fact that merit increases are made by the whim of a supervisor.

PRINCIPLE NUMBER 3: It doesn't matter, either, who the employer happens to be, for serious problems to exist. The employer-employee relationship has the same thrust whether the employer is an individual, a corporation, a government, a social agency or a union.

Many people used to think that problems develop only when the employer is a private employer. We now know better. The most striking example is, of course, Soviet Russia. The fact that the employer is the state does not in any way mitigate the problems of working for a living. In the case of Soviet Russia, the problem is even worse. The workers have no one to turn to.

Even in the case of a democratic government, as in Great Britain, nationalization does not, somehow, transform the employer-employee relationship into a romantic idyll. Work is work for whomever you work. And in all candor, working for a public agency doesn't transform the employer-employee relationship into an idyll, either.

To bring the situation closer to home, when the union becomes an employer, we are not suddenly ushered into an era of brotherly love. The employees of the union believe they have to have a union to protect their interests in dealing with the union as employer.

Why? Why should it be that regardless of what kind of work the employees do, who the employer is, the employer-employee relationship must inevitably create serious problems? I am not sure that I have a complete answer to this.

I think I am certain of what the answer is not. It is not the inherent cussedness, cupidity, greed of employers. It is not something in the psychological makeup, the genes, of a person when he becomes a worker. I think part of the answer lies in the way people perceive their interests. And this brings me to:

PRINCIPLE NUMBER 4: I would state Principle Number 4 like this. There are essential differences of interests between those who are employed and those who employ. The employee wants to earn or save more money. The employer wants to get more money out of the business and keep costs down. It is as simple as that. The employer wants greater freedom in running his business. The employee wants greater freedom as an individual.

Who is right? Why, of course, both are right. There is nothing wrong with either position.

There is a good deal of innocent but sometimes malicious mischief inflicted by well-meaning people who say that there are no differences in interests between employer and employee. Anybody who has ever worked for a living, or anybody who has hired others to work for a living or who has supervised others knows this is not true.

Am I preaching the Marxist doctrine of eternal class conflict? No. The difference is that the Marxists believe in a doctrine of eternal conflict until one side vanquishes the other. They do not believe that these conflicts of interests can be resolved into a viable relationship.

I do not believe in an eternal struggle. A society in which one side has vanquished the other is a totalitarian society and it doesn't really matter who vanquishes whom.

On the contrary, I hold that it is possible to find instrumentalities through which these differences in interests can be resolved. The industrial history of the United States is a vivid illustration that it is possible to find a mechanism through which employees and employers can live together in relative peace.

There is really nothing subversive or immoral about this conflict of interest. In fact, this is the whole theory of our constitutional form of government. The constitution rests on the notion that the interests of the legislature representing the people, the judiciary and the executive are different and that this difference in interests is good and can be relied upon through a system of checks and balances to advance the common good. All of history is of an attempt to find a way of resolving conflicting interests.

There is no point in attempting to sweep this problem under the carpet through human relation and communications techniques. There are too many people who obscure the real question by cluttering up the central issue. To be sure, efficient communications can help in focusing attention on the real differences of interest. But it is charlatanism of a high order to hold out the promise that there is some kind of a gimmick which will eliminate the differences of interest. How, then, do you deal with these differences in interest in a sensible way? This brings us to:

PRINCIPLE NUMBER 5: If there is a difference of interest between two parties, neither side can be trusted to protect adequately the interests of the other. There is no such thing in group relationships, where differences in interests are involved, as my knowing better what's good for you than you do for yourself. Even if I do know better you won't believe me.

In political affairs, this means that no man and no special interest groups, no matter how high minded and well intentioned, can be trusted to exercise power without restraint and checks and counterbalancing influences on the exercise of authority.

In employer-employee relationships, the application of this principle means that no employer, no matter how high minded and well intentioned, and no matter how much above narrow self-interest he thinks he is, can adequately deal with his employee's interests on his own power.

And it works the other way, too. No group of employees, no matter how idealistic they are, can adequately protect the employer's interests. I then derive:

PRINCIPLE NUMBER 6: The only practical way to resolve differences in interests between employers and employees is through a mechanism which permits either side to say No and get away with it. Or as an alternative, if both sides say No to each other, which means an impasse has been reached—then there must be some impartial third party who can decide between the parties.

Of course, what I am describing is collective bargaining between a free union and a free employer and the right of the union to strike and the employer to say No. Or as an alternative, the use of some method of impartial arbitration. The collective bargaining process must, of course, be tailored to the special circumstances surrounding each situation.

The institution of collective bargaining carried on by free unions and free management represents one of the greatest social inventions of our time. Collective bargaining is the answer to the forces in our society who say that differences in economic interests can be resolved only by one side vanquishing the other; that is, by a totalitarian system of one color or other.

It is indeed of the gravest import that no totalitarian system tolerates free collective bargaining. By the same token, collective bargaining is an indispensable pillar of modern democracy. Collective bargaining provides a system of due process for the sensible resolution of differences between employers and employees.

I do not want to be understood to say that the answers provided by collective bargaining are always perfect answers, or that the unions which emerge always represent the interests of their constituents in the best possible way. Unions are made up of a cross-section of the American people. I dare say that unions have a share of the social afflictions of the society at large.

But it can be said without effective contradiction that the unions have done a stunning job of improving the working lives of their constituents. They have done it with a high degree of creative adaptation to a rapidly changing economic environment. A strong case can be made that the whole society and the virility of the democratic way of life have benefited from the upsurge of unionism in the United States in the last twenty years or so.

IF ALL OF THE THINGS that I have written herein are really fundamental principles, what's all this noise about white collar workers and unions and professionals and unions? Why are only about 17% of white collar people in free unions, in contrast to the high degree of union organization in mass production industry?

I suggest that our culture has developed an array of myths and pieces of folklore that attempt to deny the applicability of these principles to the white collar worker. Or, to put it another way, so far, many white collar workers and particularly the professionals have been effectively convinced that they are different:

1) That, as one item of folklore goes, the white collar worker has no problems on the job;

2) That with respect to a white collar worker employed by a government nonprofit agency, the government is not really an employer in any real sense of the word;

3) That if there are differences of interest, the white collar worker can depend on the employer, whoever he is, to do the right thing, and

4) That in any case, unions and collective bargaining are fine for manual workers but they won't work for professionals.

For many professionals this folklore is a rationalization—the good reason rather than the real reason. The real reason is, to put it plainly, fear.

What, then, is the job of the professional employees' union? First, the rationalizations have to be dealt with and it is the job of the union to get across to the non-union professional in terms of his own experience that these are, indeed, myths. Second, the union must get across the idea that belonging to the union gives him strength and security.

One thing about the professional worker has been very interesting to me as a student of the labor movement. Despite all the talk about professionals being a separate breed, when professional workers do organize unions, they negotiate agreements which in the main headings do not differ from other kinds of contracts. They concern themselves with the day-to-day grievances of the workers they represent; and professionals strike when they have to.

The element of difference is the shape and pattern which these needs and aspirations take in each individual situation. And, I think, we are beginning to appreciate how to build strong unions of professional workers at the same time that these unions give expression to the diversity of particular goals that particular groups seek.

As a member of the family, in a manner of speaking, I hope you will allow me to write plainly. As I see it, one of the problems of bringing professional workers into unions is the professional himself.

We—and I hope you will let me say we because I, too, think of myself as a professional teacher—we tend to overtalk, overthink, and overintellectualize our problems. This holds true when professionals think about unions.

FLORENCE SYTZ, professor of social casework at Tulane university, produced a classic parody on the procedures of a conference of professionals (in this case, social workers). It follows:

"1) Profess not to have the answer. This lets you out of having any.

"2) Say that we must not move too rapidly. This avoids the necessity of getting started.

"3) Say that the problem can't be separated from all the other problems. Therefore, it can't be solved until all the other problems have been solved.

"4) For every proposal set up an opposite one and conclude that the 'middle ground' (no motion whatever) represents the wisest course of action.

"5) Discover that there are all kinds of 'dangers' in any specific formulation or conclusion.

"6) Appoint a committee.

"7) Wait until an expert can be consulted.

"8) State in conclusion that you have all clarified your thinking. This obscures the fact that nothing has been done.

"9) Point out that the deepest minds have struggled with the same problem. This implies that it does you credit even to have thought of it.

"10) In closing the meeting thank the problem. It has stimulated discussion, opened new vistas, shown us the way, challenged our inventiveness."

The teaching profession is in a unique position to make a major contribution to the growth and development of unions among professional employees. An understanding of group relationships and social processes is an integral part of professional stock in trade. These insights which must be part of the professional's daily job, can be applied to the union as an organization.

The creative qualities which professionals bring to their jobs can also be transferred to the union situation. The challenge which confronts the professional is this: The dignity, status and scientific competence that go with being a professional cannot be fully realized unless, in the first instance, the professional has a measure of economic and personal security on the job; the kind of economic and personal security that can be achieved only through effective union organization.

THE OUT-AND-OUT professional organization cannot do this kind of job for several reasons. First, it is temperamentally incapable of fully understanding the logic of working for a living. So, although it dabbles at economic representation, it shies away from the full implications of the task. Secondly, the professional association tends to contain with it inherently disparate elements, so that its effectiveness as an economic representative of any one element is blunted and dulled.

Only a union which is clearly a union can do the job. It must be a union which is custom-built to meet the special needs of its own constituents but there must be no self-indulging illusion that the economic problems of the professional can be dealt with in any way except through an economic organization and this means a union.

Local 189, American Federation of Teachers, hereby expresses to our union brothers and sisters, by way of the pages of The American Teacher, its deep concern over the conflict which has erupted between the United Federation of Teachers and the Black and Puerto Rican communities of New York City.

We see this conflict as symptomatic of a growing cleavage between the residents of our urban ghettos and the American labor movement, particularly where the legitimate demands of Black and Puerto Rican citizens for direct control over their own destinies impinge upon the traditional and no less legitimate needs of workers to control their work environments.

Without attempting at this time to judge the rights and wrongs of the dispute between the United Federation of Teachers and the Ocean Hill-Brownsville school district, it is apparent that the issues are far more complex than is implied by the simplistic assertion that "due process" was at stake for New York teachers. It is certain that the traditional defenses relied upon by the United Federation of Teachers have widened the breach between the ghetto community and the union, and, indeed, between members of the union itself.

Local 189 therefore urges that:

(1) The pages of The American Teacher be opened to a full-fledged airing of the issues highlighted by the UFT-Ocean Hill-Brownsville confrontation, with direct invitations to participate in the discussions sent to both non-striking teachers and members of the suspended local board.

(2) The proposed national conference on decentralization guidelines include as full participants the principal figures in the New York City dispute, as well as legislators familiar with the lobbying activities of the UFT at the time the decentralization bill was under consideration.

(3) The efforts of the AFT be ~~primarily~~ in the direction of trying to achieve true understanding of the aspirations of the ghetto communities as the first step towards resolving the conflicts certain to arise as more and more demands for neighborhood control of urban schools are made.

RESOLUTIONS

BI-ANNUAL MEETING

Growth in both programs and personnel in the field of labor education has resulted in growth in membership in Local #189, AFT, during the past several years. Growth has made communication and exchange of ideas between labor educators on a regular basis increasingly important.

Local #189 is now beginning to seek ways of helping to fill this void As a beginning step, a system of "task force" committees were established by the Executive Board to examine both internal operations and the broader aspects of improving the field of labor education. These committees, composed of a sizeable number of Local #189, met during the Winter Executive Board meeting in Washington, D.C. in January, 1966. The results of this new committee system were exciting and pointed up the possibilities of fruitfully expanding the membership activities of Local #189.

THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, the annual membership meeting of Local #189 now be expanded in the following manner:

1. An annual membership business meeting to be held in conjunction with the annual meetings of the AFL-CIO Education Directors and the ULEA in the Spring of the year.
2. An Annual membership weekend workshop and to be held during the winter in conjunction with the annual Executive Board meeting of Local #189, said workship to continue the exploration of new and improved "ideas" for the field of labor education.

AFT CONFERENCE

WHEREAS, the AFT is sponsoring a conference on "RACISM AND THE SCHOOLS" December 10, 1966 in Washington, D.C. (This program will be headed by Professor John Hope Franklin, University of Chicago, and Arthur Reese, AFT Freedom Schools Director. Other labor and civil rights leaders will participate).

LOCAL 189, therefore, goes on record in support of the purposes of this conference and offers its assistance in publicity, recruitment and administration of the conference.

AND, that the Washington Chapter be notified to make contact with the AFT on this matter.

SUPPORT OF AFT ADMINISTRATION

During the past two years the American Federation of Teachers under the leadership of President Charles Cogen, has made outstanding progress. Total membership has increased by more than 20%. Publications have been improved in content and format. Research facilities have been expanded and revitalized. State federations have been strengthened. Teacher collective bargaining has advanced. The relationship between the AFT and other unions has been deepened and made more meaningful. A sound and imaginative financial program has provided a firm underpinning for expanded AFT activity, therefore be it

RESOLVED that Local 189 supports the program of the incumbent administration and that local delegates to the 1966 AFT Convention consider this support when voting in the AFT presidential election.

SPECIAL COPE PROJECT

In order to participate in a meaningful way in the 1966 Congressional elections,

LOCAL 189 goes on record in selecting for support Representative John J. Gilligan, Congressman for The First Congressional District of Ohio, as our special candidate.

This Congressional election is especially important since Gilligan whose seat will be hotly contested by Robert Taft, Jr., has a record of liberalism and political independence.

WE, THEREFORE, appoint Jim Wolfe to coordinate a campaign to solicit the membership of Local 189 for COPE contributions in support of Representative Gilligan and that this money be gathered and presented to Representative Gilligan in an appropriate ceremony.

TEACHER-UNION EDUCATOR COOPERATION

WHEREAS, organizing is a major concern of the AFT; and

WHEREAS, Local 189 members could help in many ways, such as getting the case for teacher unionism to union members and others, and

WHEREAS, teachers are an excellent source of speakers and information for local unions or AFL-CIO state and central bodies who wish to discuss problems of public education; and

WHEREAS, Local 189 could be a valuable resource to teachers who wish to discuss the labor movement in new courses; and

WHEREAS, local AFT chapters may wish to draw on the experience of labor educators in developing union building activities and materials,

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED:

1. That the executive boards of the AFT and of Local 189 seek ways to develop greater cooperation and joint activities.
2. That the executive board of AFT explore the possibilities of offering a resolution to The 1966 AFT Convention on this matter.

AFT WORK IN CENTRAL BODIES

WHEREAS: - The Labor Movement has a continuing need for education because of the complexities of our society, and

WHEREAS, the members of the AFT are equiped to train workers for leadership in their Unions and the Community, now therefore

BE IT RESOLVED that AFT Local 189 calls upon the AFT to encourage the affiliated Local Unions to take an active part in the affairs of the City Central bodies, and be it FURTHER RESOLVED that the AFT Locals encourage the formation of active education committees in City Central Bodies and that AFT members volunteer their services.

16 YEARS OF FREE EDUCATION

WHEREAS, The advance of automation has eliminated and will continue to eliminate millions of jobs now and formerly performed by working people, and

WHEREAS, New categories of jobs requiring varying degrees of advanced education are being continuously created, and

WHEREAS, Income levels of working people in this country are generally too low to permit them to finance higher education for their children, and,

WHEREAS, State funds, private funds, scholarships and charity cannot begin to meet the need for the education of millions of children on the post high school level,

THEREFORE, be it resolved that the American Federation of Teachers AFL-CIO call upon the Congress of the United States to pass such legislation as will guarantee the equivalent of sixteen years of education to all children at no tuition costs to their families, and be it

FURTHER RESOLVED, that Congress be called upon to appropriate such funds as are necessary to construct colleges and junior colleges and staff and equip these institutions to carry out the purposes of this resolution, and be it

FURTHER RESOLVED that the AFT seek the support of the AFL-CIO and all its subordinate bodies and departments for this purpose, and be it

FURTHER RESOLVED that a full campaign toward the ends of this resolution be prepared to win the support of the American People.

CONSTITUTION CHANGES

Constitution changes are voted by the membership meeting (majority) and ratified by membership - (majority of mail ballot).

STUDENT MEMBERSHIP

(New Section)

The dues for a member of Local 189 who is a student shall be 40 cents a month. A student shall be defined as an undergraduate or graduate college student currently engaged in workers education as defined by Local 189, a student aspiring to a career in workers education; or a student on leave from college engaged in workers education in the civil rights movement, Peace Corps, VISTA, or in similar organizations or movements. A student member shall enjoy all rights of any other member of Local 189, including joining a chapter, forming a chapter and running for office in his chapter or in Local 189.

AFT-189

STATEMENTS OF CANDIDATES

OFFICE: PRESIDENT

CANDIDATE: JOAN SUAREZ

STATEMENT: Joan Suarez, Candidate for President of Local 189; Education Director for the S.W. Regional Joint Board, Amalgamated Clothing Workers since 1964; previously served Local 189 as a Vice-President, Recording Secretary, Chairman of the Resolutions Committee and the Labor Education Internship Committee.

As worker education programs grow in both unions and universities, I believe Local 189 takes on increased responsibility in serving both professional and collective bargaining needs of its membership. During a term in office, I would like to pursue proposals for worker education techniques conferences throughout the country, possible expansion of the labor education internship program, continued and expanded relationships with youth and equal rights movements and continued experimentation with such projects as COSPIRO.

OFFICE: VICE PRESIDENT

CANDIDATE: PRINCE MOON

STATEMENT: For two years I was a staff member of the Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations, University of Michigan and Wayne State University, Detroit, Michigan.

The duties of this position were to coordinate the labor programs, teach classes in the Worker's Basic Study Program and handle the various administrative duties.

Also, during that period, I taught classes for the Michigan State University Labor Program and University of Wisconsin School for Workers, Madison Campus.

I resigned from Wayne State University in October, 1968 to accept the post of Education Director for Region 1-E, UAW. The responsibility of this position is to coordinate educational classes, programs, seminars and conferences for 31 Local Unions which represents more than 74,060 members.

It is my opinion that the role of Local 189 should be to decide whether we want to be an association or a union. If 189 is to be a union, then we should set a sound regional structure to project our planning to include Collective Bargaining.

I am aware of the problems that the Local would face in bargaining with Universities and other agencies. I am also equally aware that Unions have survived against overwhelming odds in the past. However, with some imagination and innovation we can accomplish goals that in the past were imaginary.

OFFICE: VICE PRESIDENT

CANDIDATE: ANNE C. GREEN

STATEMENT: Current position: Education Associate, International Chemical Workers Union
Past Labor Education Experience: CWA Materials Project
Education: MA, University of Illinois, Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations

Within Local 189, discussion and presentation of ideas on content and methods of Labor Education are readily available to every labor educator. For an inexperienced person, this forum atmosphere is an invaluable source of knowledge. This important function is performed uniquely by 189 without operating within a series of constraints imposed by non-educational interests. Obviously 189 should strive to inform all persons involved in labor education, whether inexperienced or experienced, of the local's availability, in order to continue successfully in this function. I shall continue as membership chairman and with the help of the Executive Board, and all members, attempt to increase 189's membership. Local 189 should also continue with its exploration of forming a council with other unions representing union employees for the purpose of exchanging information. If reelected to the position of Local 189 Vice President, I will work with the Executive Board and 189 members to promote the interests of Local 189 and its members.

Workers Education Local 189 offers a media of expression and exchange -- a platform from which new and controversial ideas can permeate without the restrictions of non-educational interests. The continuation of this atmosphere, in my belief, will continue to enhance labor education.

Many pressing issues and responsibilities must be confronted during the next year by the Executive Board and membership of Local 189. Among them is included the continual examination and reexamination of 189's position with regard to serving as a collective bargaining agent. The importance and magnitude of this question cannot and should not be minimized. The time has come for 189 to set up all the necessary machinery in order to serve its membership, where desired, in collective bargaining. The development of these procedures will not be easy. Many obstacles still lie in our path, but it can and must be done.

If elected to the office of Recording Secretary of Local 189, I will do all within my power to guide and assist this local to achieve the wants of its constituency.

OFFICE: FINANCIAL SECRETARY

CANDIDATE: OWEN TAPPER

STATEMENT: Currently Assistant Director for Education, Institute for Labor Studies, West Virginia University. Formerly with School for Workers, The University of Wisconsin.

Bargaining, for the most part, for university and union labor educators (as a separate unit) is impractical. It is impractical because of the lack of sufficient power. Local 189 should devote its efforts to developing alternatives, i.e., job referral systems, salary surveys -- even arbitration of grievances where and if possible.

Local 189, apparently, needs to be the organization that has a major responsibility for educating (liberally) labor educators. The other two existing organizations are more policy conscious -- which is fine. But it does leave labor educators without a sense of "what's happening" in the world. In this respect, Local 189 already does more than the other two organizations.

During the next year, if Local 189, in addition to those programs already operating, can initiate, perhaps sponsor, several regional teaching technique conferences, then the year can be termed successful.

OFFICE: REGIONAL EXECUTIVE BOARD -- NORTHEAST

CANDIDATE: ROGER V. SNOW, JR.

STATEMENT: I have been head of the labor education program at the University of Maine since December 1967. We operate a growing program for members of labor organizations which includes tool courses such as techniques of collective bargaining and labor law, and also programs designed to inform and involve members of the labor movement in the life of their community and state.

My own union background is limited to 6 years as a member of the Newspaper Guild in the Portland area. During this 6 years I served as the vice president of the union and as its chief organizer and was successful in organizing and winning an election at a daily newspaper in Augusta, Maine. I hold a Bachelor's degree from Williams College. Among a variety of community and state responsibilities, are included 2 terms as a member of the state Senate, during one of which I served as chairman of the state legislative education committee, with memberships on a variety of other committees. I have been active in United Community Services work, the Boy Scouts, Dollars for Scholars and numerous other community projects.

My chief interest in Local 189 relates to helping it maintain stature as an organization able to improve the quality and timeliness of labor education efforts, both by university educators and by union educators.

I am married and have 4 children ranging in age from 13 to 7.

CANDIDATE: GEREL RUBIEN

STATEMENT: Education: Graduate of the Columbia University School of Journalism. M.A. in economic history from Columbia University Graduate School.

As Educational Director in Local 62, ILGWU, where I have been for 20 years, I am responsible for educational programs with members, classes and many social events.

Am editor of Local 62's paper which covers an entire industry in the metropolitan area of New York City.

Have done a good deal of political work through the union, lobbying both in ALBANY and WASHINGTON. Have worked to form pressure groups in circles outside the trade union movement, of persons friendly to various measures labor backs. Was sent by AFL-CIO in cooperation with HEW to Florida on 5 occasions to rally public opinion 1) for Medicare passage, 2) for pressure on Congressman of the area to raise Social Security payments.

Was former president of the Women's Trade Union League, where I did a good deal of lobbying, dissolving League in the '50's as case of mission accomplished, unions being able to handle their own organizational, educational and political activities.

Interests: Industrial Relations, Comparative Labor Movements, Politics of Pressure Groups; Interrelations of Poverty, Civil Rights, Job Development and Organized Labor.

Local 189 should function as an effective forum for new ideas and approaches in the labor movement. It should not serve as a collective bargaining agent. It has no staff and usually cannot produce support. Negatively, at best, it might be able to serve as a protest vehicle in the event one of its members receives unfair treatment from an employer. This requires stated professional standards and rights.

My major job was that of Director of the American Labor Education Service (1934-1962), a national labor education organization, which functioned in all parts of the United States.

ALES work offered many types of service: setting up resident schools (as, for example, for the study of the U.N. and international issues, and a school for white-collar workers -- White-Collar Workshops); conferences on the role of labor in the community, problems of older workers, questions of urban development, and on current economic affairs, as well as conferences to bring together professional labor educators for the consideration of their common problems.

ALES also organized demonstration centers, sending a staff member to work with unions in various cities and sections of the country, for a period of up to two and a half years.

ALES pioneered in many fields, including labor education with white-collar workers, education to combat discrimination, the study of international affairs, projects on farmer-labor relationships, and the preparation of material for workers' classes.

Labor's Commitment

The AFL-CIO is firmly determined to achieve full equality in America in all fields—education, employment, accommodations, housing and justice.

The problems faced by the civil rights movement cannot be resolved in an economic vacuum.

Equal opportunity in employment is meaningless unless there is full employment.

Equal housing is impossible until we eliminate the slums and build the homes America needs for all its population—black or white.

Equal education is impossible until America builds the kind of schools and supplies them with enough well-paid teachers to do the job of providing good education for every one of our children.

The AFL-CIO is dedicated to building the kind of America which will supply the answers to all of these problems. Our goal is to provide the schools, provide the jobs, provide the homes, provide the health care and provide the understanding that it is poverty and ignorance and despair that are the real root causes of all of America's domestic problems.

The AFL-CIO will not retreat from its commitment to the cause of civil rights any more than it would retreat from its commitment to abolish poverty, illness, suffering and want in this nation.

There is, in America today, a so-called white backlash. It is deplorable. It was born out of the ability of demagogues to capitalize upon rioting. It stems from unreasoning fear stimulated by the reckless cries of "black power."

It thrives on the ignorance of many citizens as to the real issues involved in equal rights controversies.

Extremism is the antithesis of democracy and extremism by advocates of justice for America's minority population cannot be countenanced any more than extremism by advocates of white supremacy. The advocates of black supremacy and white supremacy belong in the same camp and the American trade union movement opposes both equally.

No one could honestly pretend that the road to the achievement of full civil rights for all will be an easy one but it is a road America must traverse.

Let me reiterate the AFL-CIO's position: We reject out of hand the concept that there can be any first-class or second-class citizenship in the United States. In our country there can be only one class—citizen—the highest and most meaningful title in a democracy.

George Meany

The Moral Basis of Civil Rights

by A. Philip Randolph

The moral foundation of the civil rights revolution is the source of its strength, hope and promise. The universal imperative of this moral basis is that all men, black and white, Jew and Gentile, Catholic and Protestant, African and Asian, are members of one common human family, of which God is Father and Creator.

If all men are members of one common human family, then all men are brothers. If all men are brothers, then all men are equal. If all men are equal, then all men are entitled to equal treatment and, consequently, discrimination based upon race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry is morally wrong.

The foundation of the moral order is respect for the dignity and infinite worth of the personality of every human being. This means that no law, no government, no constitution, can give me my right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. And no law, no constitution or government can take away from me my right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. This right is God-given and not man-made.

It is a natural right. I was born with this right. I have it as a result of my being human and God made me human. Therefore, the civil rights struggle is designed to secure legislation and the attitude of the public at large to protect every human being's right to exercise and enjoy his natural rights.

We have in this country today growing tension between the black people and white people of America. If it continues, there will be a confrontation of blacks and whites in America, not from the point of intellectual dialogue but from the point of view of a struggle, one to secure its full citizenship rights and the other to deny him the right to get these rights.

I am greatly concerned about this condition. I looked upon the faces of white citizens on the television when Negroes were marching in Chicago for the right of open occupancy in housing and the faces were ugly with rage and resentment. This was an unhappy thing.

And then, elsewhere, some Negroes who were not part of the civil rights movement were throwing bottles and bricks, Molotov cocktails, turning over automobiles, throwing rocks into stores, looting the stores, engaging in lawlessness and so forth.

I deplore lawlessness of any kind. I deplore riots of any kind. Throwing Molotov cocktails is not the answer to the problem of the Negro.

I want to see the civil rights leaders take great care against overheating ghettos that have the racial and social chemistry full of ingredients of explosive potentialities. This could escalate into a race war in this nation which could become catastrophic to the Negro and to America.

Workers know what it is to be deprived of their rights. There have been battlefields all over this nation where the workers have been fighting for their rights. And so Negro workers have a right to come to the labor movement, to call upon it to help in winning their fundamental rights that are God-given and not man-made.

I believe that the time has come when the street

A. PHILIP RANDOLPH is President of the Sleeping Car Porters and a Vice President of the AFL-CIO. He probably holds top seniority among the nation's civil rights leaders. He served as honorary chairman of the 1966 White House conference, "To Fulfill These Rights."

marches and demonstrations have about run their course. I believe that the strategy now in order is to shift from the streets to the conference room for the purpose of discussion of the problems in the interest of finding an answer.

I don't mean by this that all demonstrations must be eliminated immediately, all boycotts, all picketing that are now carried on by Negroes, any more than labor can eliminate strikes or picketing in the interest of winning their rights. But we know that the public has lost some of its sympathy for the cause of civil rights because of demonstrations and disorders in the street.

You have heard a lot about black power. Well, the civil rights organizations are not committed to black power. That is a slogan and you cannot solve basic social and economic problems with slogans. It is based upon the assumption of salvation through racial isolation, which is absolutely unsound. It has been created by oppression of Negroes in this country. It didn't come just out of the air. It came out of frustration, a sense of despair and hopelessness.

Negroes are grabbing at every straw they think might help in bringing emancipation. Instead of separation, we need cooperation. That is why we have proposed a Freedom Budget, which is based upon the alliance between labor and the civil rights movement. This alliance will go farther and build what is known as a coalition.

I am very proud of the position that the American labor movement has taken on this freedom budget. We are attempting to transform the civil rights revolution into a social revolution which is concerned not only about the Negro, but about the poor whites as well, and we realize that there are 35 million people, according to the Department of Labor, under the poverty line in this country. Twenty percent of them are black and about 75 percent are white. Therefore, the black working poor and the white working poor must unite in order that we can fight for full employment under the leadership of organized labor.

There is no remedy for the problem that confronts the civil rights revolution without full employment. Full employment is the basis of fair employment.

The Roots of the Negro-Union Alliance

by Ray Marshall

Relations between the labor and civil rights movements have important implications for unions, minorities and the nation. Both have objectives which are necessary for the economic, political and moral health of the country. If these movements are united they become a powerful force for the realization of these objectives; if, on the other hand, they dissipate their energies in conflicts with each other, they strengthen their common adversaries.

The historical roots of the Negro-union relationship lie in the racial pattern of segregation, which became firmly entrenched in the South around 1900. Segregation was less rigid, but no less real, outside the South.

Legalized segregation was not established immediately after Reconstruction, however, because there was a period of ferment when it appeared that race relations might be established on some other basis. It looked for a time as if the Knights of Labor might form a viable political alliance with the Populists

RAY MARSHALL is Professor of Economics at the University of Texas. Dr. Marshall has taught at the University of Mississippi and Louisiana State University and has written widely on racial problems in employment and on labor relations in the South. He is author of "The Negro and Organized Labor."

which would include Negroes. But this alliance was destroyed by racial prejudices and the Negro's political and economic weaknesses. The Populists were condemned throughout the South for splitting the white vote and raising the prospect that Negroes would hold the balance of political power.

Most Negroes were concentrated in the plantation belts where their votes could too easily be controlled by planters. Many Populists consequently favored disfranchising Negroes in the hope that depriving the planters of these votes would remove the race issue from politics and weaken the political power of conservative economic forces. But once Negroes were disfranchised, they were unable to combat racism, which often obscured economic issues in southern politics.

Since discrimination extended to jobs, its impact was economic as well as political and social. Whites regarded Negroes as suitable only for certain kinds of menial or otherwise disagreeable occupations. It was understood that Negroes would get the better jobs only where these were performed for the Negro community. Negroes were almost never permitted to hold supervisory positions and often lost their jobs when technological change or unemployment made the jobs more attractive to whites. Job segregation was motivated partly by a desire to restrict good jobs to whites, but partly also because the slavery-induced image of the Negro as an inferior person caused a prevailing belief that Negroes would "degrade" a trade or occupation.

While labor organizations did not create these racial employment patterns, few unions in the South openly challenged segregation before the 1930s because most southern unionists, like most southerners, were segregationists. Many southern unions excluded Negroes from membership. But in some cases unions had to organize Negro workers who were strategically located or who were used to break strikes or otherwise jeopardize the conditions of discriminating unions. The typical response in these cases was to organize Negroes into segregated locals, although there were some integrated unions in the trowel trades and coal mines.

Although AFL union leaders like Samuel Gompers opposed discrimination by local and national unions—for the obvious reason that it weakened the labor movement by making it difficult to present a united front to management—they were, like the Knights of Labor, powerless to change the system and ultimately adjusted to it. AFL leaders argued that it was better to try and reform unions inside the house of labor than to permit them to continue their discriminatory ways beyond the reach of the federation's admittedly limited influence.

The anti-union attitudes of some Negro leaders was an additional factor used to justify the labor movement's actions. These Negro leaders reasoned that, in view of the prevailing racial practices of unions, Negroes should ally themselves with employers, who controlled jobs. In most cases, however, employers were willing to hire Negroes for non-traditional jobs only where the latter served as a buffer to prevent unionization or accepted lower wages than whites for the same work.

Relations between Negroes and unions underwent considerable change during the social ferment of the 1930s, when some Negro leaders felt that the encouragement of union growth by the New Deal would create an important new power center which could benefit Negroes if they got in on the ground floor. The Negro's power to influence unions was enhanced by competition for Negro votes in the representation elections introduced by the Railway Labor and Wagner Acts. The CIO adopted programs to gain a favorable image among Negroes and the AFL acted along similar lines.

Although the CIO undoubtedly acquired a more favorable image in the Negro community, it did not eliminate discrimination by its affiliates in the South. The CIO's problems were different, of course, because few of its affiliates had the power in terms of jobs to restrict membership. While some CIO affiliates had segregated locals and, on rare occasions, excluded Negroes from membership, the main racial problems for these unions were segregated seniority rosters which, before World War II, existed in the North as well as in the South.

Because of its impact on race relations in the South, it was inevitable that the Supreme Court's 1954 school desegregation decision would have a profound influence on relations between the labor and civil rights movements. This decision came on the eve of the merger between the AFL and the CIO, both of which were committed to equalitarian racial policies.

Union leaders were apprehensive, however, that implementation of these policies would hurt organizing and lead to the loss of southern membership. These apprehensions were strengthened by the strong upsurge of segregationist sentiment in the South following the school desegregation decision, the pervasiveness of appeals to racial prejudices by employers and newspapers during representation elections and the formation of a number of segregationist labor organizations designed to win members away from legitimate unions. There also were vociferous protests from southern union members concerning the AFL-CIO's support of the 1954 school desegregation decision and the support given by various unions to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and other civil rights organizations.

Southern union leaders also were afraid that the budding political alliances which some of them had formed with civil rights leaders would be destroyed by the segregationist reaction.

In spite of these fears, the AFL, the CIO and the merged AFL-CIO insisted on compliance with national racial policy. George Meany, for example, announced that equalitarian racial policies would be pushed in the South whether or not the AFL-CIO organized a single worker in the region. The southern state federations also adopted resolutions supporting equalitarian racial policies, in spite of vigorous protests from some of their members and the withdrawal of some local unions.

There seems to be little question that the AFL-CIO's consistent policy has done a great deal to prepare the way for change in race relations in southern unions. There also seems to be little question that the labor movement's gains from this policy far outweighed its losses.

Because of inadequate leadership and the demonstrated improbability of building a labor movement on purely racist grounds, the segregationist labor organizations were uniformly unsuccessful and little is heard from them today.

The experiences of the years following the Supreme Court's decision also demonstrated the strength of unionism among southern union members. In spite of strong segregationist feelings, very few of them were willing either to pull their locals out of regular labor organizations or withdraw from their local unions.

Besides some withdrawals from state federations, the main effects on union membership seem to have been the loss of a few locals by such unions as the Letter Carriers, the Auto Workers, the Packinghouse Workers and the Teachers. The use of race arguments in representation elections also had surprisingly little effect on the outcome of these elections.

The main conclusion that I draw from these experiences is that southerners who attribute their good conditions to the labor movement will not lightly abandon their unions for racial reasons.

A number of events accompanying the AFL-CIO merger tended to increase differences between Negroes and unions. The AFL-CIO accepted two international railroad unions which had race bars in their constitutions. In addition, continued migrations of Negroes out of the South had increased their political power, resulting in the adoption of anti-discrimination laws and orders by the federal government and a number of states and municipalities. Civil rights groups also were adopting more militant tactics, some of which they learned from organized labor. The AFL-CIO gave major support to civil rights legislation and adopted a stronger racial position than either the AFL or the CIO, but the publicity given to anti-discrimination cases against some unions, particularly in the building trades, produced demands from the Negro community that the federation undertake more vigorous policies against discrimination.

These demands were accentuated by the Negro's high unemployment and worsening income positions in the years following the merger. And, while Negro-union relations have improved during the 1960s, some civil rights leaders have continued to attack certain union practices, especially segregated seniority rosters and the fewness of Negroes in some construction crafts.

The seniority problem is complicated by a number of factors. Some unions fear the interests of white union members will be ignored in order to compensate Negroes for past discrimination. Civil rights leaders argue, on the other hand, that preferential treatment of Negroes is necessary because merely eliminating discrimination will not permit Negroes to advance rapidly enough.

Disputes also arise over the terms for integrating seniority rosters. Will Negroes carry their company seniority into the new line for promotion purposes? Will tests be required if they were not required for whites already in those lines? How often may the tests be taken? Are the tests reliable predictors of job performance? Will it be necessary for Negroes to take pay cuts and enter the bottom of the line of progression from which they were previously excluded? Job integration problems also may be complicated by the fact that separate unions have represented different jobs, making it necessary to integrate locals as well as jobs.

Segregated seniority settlements vary from case to case depending upon such factors as relative power positions, technology and skill requirements, and the vulnerability of unions and employers to governmental pressures.

In many ways the building trades problem is more significant for Negro-union relations than the question of segregated seniority rosters because the seniority issue is mainly a problem for the South and cannot be attributed primarily to unions. The building trades problem, on the other hand, is more general geographically and has attracted attention primarily in major northern metropolitan areas. The publicity given this issue has caused it to assume a symbolic significance out of proportion to its quantitative importance for Negro job opportunities.

One's view of the dispute between Negroes and the building trades unions obviously depends upon his vantage point. Union leaders emphasize the absence of qualified Negro applicants while civil rights leaders emphasize discrimination. Similarly, various groups differ in their assessment of the progress that has been made. Civil rights groups look at the fewness of Negroes in these trades and regard changes as only tokenism, while unions stress the relative progress made.

One of the most obvious conclusions flowing from events during the 1950s and 1960s is that, in spite of the continuation of discrimination by unions and employers, this obviously is not the only reason why there are so few Negroes in some building trades. Negroes also are barred because inadequate education makes it difficult for them to meet the qualifications for these trades. Unions and employers have justifiable interests in maintaining the standards of their trades. Unions can maintain their wage levels only if their members are more productive than their non-union competitors. Unions and employers could lose the right to determine qualifications if their standards are unrealistic or are administered in a discriminatory fashion.

It would be a mistake to conclude that we are likely to return to the situation of the 1920s when many major Negro leaders were anti-union. Regardless of continued attacks on unions by some civil rights leaders, and the possibility of increasing demands for measures to weaken union security, seniority, referral systems and apprenticeship training programs, there is little prospect of a complete break between the major union and civil rights leaders, who fully realize their mutual dependence.

Negroes have been strong supporters of such union objectives as the repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act and state anti-union laws, and unions have furnished decisive support for civil rights legislation, have extended union protection to Negroes on the job and have fought to eliminate racial wage differentials. Both movements have united behind welfare legislation and political reforms of vital importance to the nation.

However, much remains to be done to combat discrimination and to deal with the very urgent problem of improving the economic position of disadvantaged groups. The severity of this problem was emphasized by the 1966 report of the National Commission on Technology, Automation and Economic Progress, which predicted that "if non-whites continue to hold the same proportion of jobs in each occupation as in 1964, the non-white unemployment rate in 1975 will be more than five times that for the labor force as a whole. . . . If trends in upgrading the jobs of non-whites continue at the same rate as in recent years, the non-white unemployment rate in 1975 would still be about two and one-half times that for the labor force as a whole."

There is a danger, however, that the urgency of this problem will precipitate remedies which will create unnecessary frictions. It would seem to be particularly important to avoid taking public policy measures designed to help one group at the expense of others, not only because these measures cause racial tensions but also because they are not necessary. Almost all of the things that need to be done to help Negroes also need to be done for other disadvantaged groups. This does not mean, however, that there is no need for positive action to include Negroes where they have been excluded. Because of the pervasiveness and strength of segregation, specific measures often must be taken to assure Negroes that the barriers are down and that new opportunities are available to them. But such measures obviously do not constitute preferential treatment; they merely extend to Negroes rights which they should already have but have been denied because of discrimination.

Public policy also should avoid the erroneous assumption that the Negro's problems can be solved entirely by adopting, or more rigorously enforcing, anti-discrimination measures. I do not wish to imply, however, either that discrimination is no longer a problem or that anti-discrimination laws are unnecessary; these measures are necessary and they have done a great deal to give people of goodwill an opportunity to promote equalitarian measures, they have caused considerable education concerning racial employment patterns and have reduced many racial barriers to employment. The difficulty with these measures, however, is that they change the demand for Negro employes, members and trainees but do very little to increase the supply of qualified applicants.

A preoccupation with sanctions also tends to stiffen resistance to change by many of those who, although perhaps guilty of discrimination, can defend their positions legally and who are not very much concerned with public attacks on them. But intransigence is more likely to be strengthened where the fewness of complaints or applicants causes respondents to feel that the charges against them are unfair and exaggerated.

It would, therefore, seem that at this juncture public policy should emphasize measures to expand the total number of jobs through economic growth and full employment and programs to increase employment opportunities for all disadvantaged groups.

It also seems clear that this problem cannot be solved entirely by governments. Unions, employers and civil rights groups also have major responsibilities for improving employment opportunities for Negroes and other disadvantaged groups. The AFL-CIO has adopted a strong anti-discrimination policy and, although any program can be improved, the federation seems to be actively implementing that policy. The international unions bear the greatest responsibility for eradicating discrimination because they have sufficient power to accomplish this objective. The excuse of local autonomy should be no more permissible in cases of racial discrimination than it is where locals violate other trade union policies.

Unions should be encouraged to so arrange their affairs, through proper procedures and recordkeeping, that they will be able to demonstrate the fairness of their admissions procedures. Affirmative action to actively seek qualified Negro members rather than merely passively receiving applications is needed because, as noted earlier, special efforts are necessary to convince many Negroes that they are welcome. By maintaining orderly and open procedures and a willingness to discuss their affairs and by fairly administering referral admissions and training programs, unions can do much to regain some of the public support that slipped away during the 1950s and 1960s.

Union leaders at every level also might do well to establish close working relationships with civil rights organizations, based on mutual trust and understanding. Union leaders also should pay attention to the structure and objectives of various civil rights organizations in order to understand the nature of the problems these organizations face. It is surprising, for example, to hear union leaders, who would themselves never agree that they have gained enough for their members, argue that the trouble with Negro leaders is that they are never satisfied with what they have achieved or, worse still, what the "unions have done for them."

Civil rights organizations also have major responsibilities in this area. They can effectively work with the Negro community to produce qualified applicants and improve the quality of information and counseling available to Negroes. If Negroes are encouraged to take advantage of the opportunities open to them, they can produce the labor supplies which experience demonstrates do more than anything else to reduce overt acts of discrimination.

Moreover, civil rights groups should pay careful attention to facts and analysis and should use poverty and manpower programs to provide training opportunities for Negroes and other disadvantaged groups.

Wherever possible, civil rights organizations might establish close working relationships with representatives of human relations agencies, companies, employers' associations and unions. These groups can do many things to promote the upgrading of Negro youngsters and many unions undoubtedly would be glad to form effective alliances with responsible civil rights groups which understood their problems and needs.

In view of the importance of cooperation to unions, Negroes and the nation, it would be tragic if the labor and civil rights movements dissipated their energies in internecine conflict. The civil rights movement might lose a very strong supporter and the labor movement could face legislation which would weaken its ability to effectively represent workers in collective bargaining and in political affairs.

There are some things that both groups can do to seek solutions to the pressing problem of inadequate job opportunities for disadvantaged groups. Unions can move to end what discrimination remains, take affirmative action to include Negroes in their programs and promote better understanding with the Negro community. Civil rights leaders can avoid forcing government officials to take measures which will unnecessarily increase the resistance of whites; they also can pay careful attention to those things which really increase opportunities for Negroes rather than those having purely symbolic or publicity value. Really effective programs will challenge discrimination, but they also will provide the means for actually getting Negroes on jobs rather than merely demonstrating an organization's militancy.

Labor's Role: Democracy on the Job

by Donald Slaiman

When it comes to making democracy complete for all Americans, this nation has, to use Abraham Lincoln's phrase, much "unfinished work."

Trade unions are crucial to this task of making democracy complete because they are closest to the people and are made up of people. The union member found long ago that, alone, he was helpless. By uniting with his fellow workers, he found he could achieve dignity, win justice, improve his conditions and defend his gains. His family and community benefited only as he did.

The individual worker learned that in union there is strength. It is in his self-interest to understand that his gains are secure only so far as he helps others to improve their condition.

For these sound trade union reasons, the labor movement supports the full integration into American life of the Negro, the Spanish-American and other minorities.

If the labor movement means anything, it means dignity for the little man, regardless of the circumstances of his birth. Unions should no more discriminate against a man because of the color of his skin than they should turn their backs upon a man because he was born into a poor family. Without these members, the labor movement would have lost its democratic character. With these members, labor won many victories, victories won not by the wealth or status or color of our members but by our numbers and solidarity.

When civil rights groups testified before Congress in backing up labor's effort to win repeal of Taft-Hartley's Section 14(b), one of their spokesmen commented on our mutual interests:

"We believe," said Clarence Mitchell, "that Negro workers, as do other Americans, need a strong, vigorous and democratic labor movement.

"We have worked with the leaders of the AFL-CIO and its civil rights department and with the leaders of many affiliated unions of the AFL-CIO on civil rights matters.

"They have marched with us in Washington, D.C. and in Montgomery, Alabama. They fought valiantly for what is now Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. And we freely acknowledge that without their help that title would not have been included in the law."

What both the labor and civil rights movements knew was that, if democracy was to work, it had to be made to work—on the job, in the union and in the community.

The AFL-CIO is not a monolithic entity. It is made up of 129 affiliates with great diversity in their size, structure and background. These affiliates contain tens of thousands of local unions which have hundreds of thousands of elected officers and millions of members living in communities in all parts of the country. The AFL-CIO also has chartered central bodies in over 700 cities and counties and a federation in each of the 50 states.

The labor movement, especially at the national level, has a clear and firm policy on civil rights and it has helped importantly to obtain civil rights legislation. Nevertheless, as with other American institutions, there remains a variety of discrimination problems at the local level.

The mass media frequently carry news of the local union that is charged with discrimination, sometimes fairly, sometimes not fairly. Rarely, however, are there stories of the daily efforts made by local unions and international unions in their normal course of activity: negotiating non-discrimination clauses in contracts, fighting for the elimination of discriminatory pay differentials and taking up grievances against discriminatory dismissals or failure to obtain promotion under the terms of the collective bargaining agreement.

For many of both races, a trade union has been their first experience in integrated relationships. For many Negroes and other minority group workers, the trade union movement has been the area of their first organizational and democratic experience.

Shortly after the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the AFL-CIO Executive Council hailed its passage and called for massive voluntary compliance.

The Council warned that the implementation of the Act would not be automatic and would require not only vigilance but long effort; and further that even the complete success of the Act would not bring fulfillment of the hopes it raised without a social and economic climate and measures which would allow for the "fulfillment of the rights."

A special AFL-CIO conference met in late 1964 to work out this program:

1. an educational program for union members and other citizens as to the actual terms of the Civil Rights Act.
2. work through central bodies at the community level to create a climate for compliance.
3. special emphasis on compliance with Title VII, the fair employment section of the Act.
4. the assurance of adequate funds and staff necessary for the administration of the new law.
5. to keep under review possible need for new legislation.

The AFL-CIO felt that while legislation was passed in Washington or in state capitols its impact was felt at the community and grass roots levels and therefore the federation directed part of its compliance and implementation program to over 700 central bodies.

Even before the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the AFL-CIO had called on all its central labor bodies to create civil rights committees and develop local programs. In 1963, Meany responded to President Kennedy's appeal to private groups and established a task force which carried out pilot projects in selected cities. The AFL-CIO later developed a manual for central bodies. It spelled out the new Civil Rights Act and offered guidelines to local union leaders in dealing with civil rights problems in employment, education, housing and public accommodations. Union officials also were urged to familiarize themselves with state and federal fair employment laws so they could process complaints for workers in non-union firms.

The implementation of a law goes far beyond the question of budget and staff. The Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, chaired by Roy Wilkins, has been the coordinating body for civil rights, labor, religious and liberal groups which has formulated, campaigned for and lobbied civil rights bills through the Congress. Earlier this year, Wilkins appointed a special subcommittee on implementation to work with, and criticize when necessary, government agencies on policies, guidelines and problems involved in the administration of the various titles of the Act.

By 1965, the events in Selma demonstrated a need for new civil rights legislation to improve coverage of the right of minority citizens to vote. By 1966, it became evident that full utilization by citizens of existing legislation necessitated another civil rights act to deal with the question of equal protection under the laws both to safeguard from physical violence those trying to use the law and to ensure the right of Negroes to be represented fairly in the judicial process.

In addition, both civil rights groups and the Administration decided the elimination of discrimination in housing was long overdue and should be added to the civil rights measure.

The legislative record of Congress in 1966 showed that civil rights groups and the labor movement had a mutual interest not only in enactment of civil rights legislation but also on reapportionment, minimum wages and the repeal of Taft-Hartley's 14(b).

In the two items that were lost—the Civil Rights Act of 1966 and repeal of 14(b)—it was a filibuster in the Senate that prevented a vote rather than the failure to obtain a majority commitment to legislative enactment. In both cases, opposition essentially consisted of a coalition of conservatives—southern Democrats and northern Republicans.

Liaison with civil rights organizations also is an important part of labor's program.

When Dr. Martin Luther King's voter registration workers were assaulted by Sheriff Clark at the bridge in Selma, Alabama, Meany dispatched a delegation of members of the Civil Rights Committee to Selma. The labor group first went to Selma for the James Reeb memorial meeting, where it met union leaders and delegates from other international unions. We then returned for the start of the Selma to Montgomery march and again went down for the final leg of the march into Montgomery.

AFL-CIO Vice President Randolph, who was on the platform in front of the state house in Montgomery, reported at the 1965 AFL-CIO convention:

"On the very steps of the capitol of Alabama, labor's voice was raised high and clear in the name of freedom. President Meany, I participated in that historic event and I can tell you that nothing so inspired the embattled Negroes of Alabama with courage and confidence as the visible and dramatic support of the labor movement in those glorious days."

Cooperation has been a two-way street. In the last few years, particularly, civil rights leaders helped the labor movement bring the advantages of union organization to both Negro and white workers.

The Reverend Martin Luther King helped the teachers win an election in Philadelphia and the chemical workers win satisfactory settlement of a strike in Atlanta. The NAACP helped the painters win an election at a large brickwork in Augusta, Georgia. Civil rights activists in Alabama worked with retail and wholesale workers to enable them to organize an integrated local and obtain collective bargaining agreements in Selma and other cities. Campaigns to organize laundry workers and hospital workers in a number of cities by a variety of international unions have received enthusiastic support and aid from the civil rights movement.

In the field of education, there has been important cooperation. Civil rights leaders have spoken at union institutes and educational conferences, providing direct contact as well as information for rank-and-file members and local officers. A highlight of the AFL-CIO's third Southern Staff Training Institute were two appearances by Roy Wilkins of the NAACP.

At the advanced southern labor school, Aaron Henry, state chairman of the Mississippi NAACP, was an invited speaker.

In 1965, Bayard Rustin spoke at a luncheon sponsored by the AFL-CIO Southern Advisory Committee on Civil Rights, to which local union people, Negro ministers and representatives of civil rights organizations in Atlanta were invited.

Representatives of the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department have spoken frequently at NAACP regional conferences, participated in training sessions of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and appear frequently at conferences of the Urban League.

Support and cooperative work is also carried on with the Southern Regional Council, the Jewish Labor Committee, the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing and many other organizations.

Whitney Young of the Urban League came to the February 1966 meeting of the AFL-CIO Executive Council and proposed a new labor education and action program to improve cooperation between the Urban League and the labor movement.

Meany and the Executive Council received the program enthusiastically, endorsed it and voted to contribute $10,000 a year for three years for its work.

Liaison also has been established with Reverend Leon Sullivan's Opportunities Industrialization Center (OIC) program in Philadelphia and the Workers Defense League program in New York City.

The AFL-CIO has worked for fair employment legislation which covered unions as well as employers and employment agencies because it has never been satisfied with the rate at which discrimination has been eliminated from the house of labor by voluntary and internal efforts. However, labor did not wait for legislation.

Shortly after its creation, the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Committee established a compliance procedure whereby any worker could file a complaint with the Civil Rights Department, which would then receive a report from the international union whose local was involved. If the complaint was not satisfactorily settled, it would be reviewed by a compliance subcommittee of the Civil Rights Committee.

The AFL-CIO's 1959 convention called on affiliated unions to set up their own civil rights committees and machinery to work on problems of discrimination within their own unions and to mobilize support for civil rights and carry on an educational program. The AFL-CIO identified such possible areas of discrimination as segregated locals, separate lines of seniority and promotion, exclusion from membership, unequal or unfair representation or "any procedure which would deny to any worker the full benefits of union membership because of race, creed, color or national origin."

In 1962, 122 AFL-CIO unions signed a joint statement on union programs for fair practices with President Kennedy's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity.

Shortly after the September Conference on the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Meany asked each international union president to designate an international officer who would:

1. work with government agencies, especially the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, to obtain voluntary compliance;

2. develop an equal opportunity program for the union internally and with companies with which it bargains.

In January 1965, the Civil Rights Department held a conference attended by representatives of 53 international unions to discuss Title VII of the Civil Rights Act and what could be done to ensure its success. In April 1965, Meany convened a larger conference which 74 international union officials attended.

To deal effectively with complaints, the AFL-CIO proposed and the EEOC adopted a two-fold procedure. In states lacking a fair employment law, a report on each complaint confirmed by a field representative would be sent to the local union involved, to its international headquarters and to the AFL-CIO. In states with a fair employment commission, EEOC recommended that the state agency work in the same fashion with the AFL-CIO and its affiliated unions.

Failure to utilize the procedures and the cooperation available from international unions has on occasion impeded the effectiveness of the Commission's work.

In December 1965, a complaint was filed in Memphis by three Negro laborers. A contractor had told them he would hire them as journeymen rodmen if the local Ironworkers would either give them a work permit or accept them into membership. The local union had no Negro members. The complaint was that the applicants could neither gain membership nor receive work permits because of their race.

The EEOC investigator could not get all the information he needed from the local union. The Civil Rights Department was asked for cooperation. It asked whether the international union had been notified. The answer was no. It then asked the EEOC to make such notification. The international union, when it heard of the complaint, sent a representative to the local. He interviewed the applicants, found they had knowledge of the trade, spoke to the local union officers and found they had no unemployed members. He convinced them to immediately give work permits to the complainants. They went to work at journeyman pay scales and conditions. Within a month they were given an examination by the local union, passed it and were accepted into membership.

The only thing left hanging in this success story is the fact that to this day the Commission has not worked out a procedure by which it could notify the international union that the case has been satisfactorily settled. There is no question that the cooperation of the international union following its notification had brought a rapid as well as satisfactory solution to this complaint. If the Commission and the complainants had taken any other route, through conciliation or the courts, no more could have been obtained and certainly the men would not have been working or admitted into membership so quickly.

One of the problems in the labor movement has been the existence of segregated locals in some industries and unions. In 1959, the AFL-CIO, by convention resolution, called on its affiliates to "take appropriate action to eliminate segregation of their local union membership on the basis of race or color. There is no blinking the fact that segregation is discrimination. Just as we cannot accept the maintenance of separate but equal schools, so we refuse to countenance the existence of separate but equal unions in the ranks of our movement. We ask for a concerted effort by each of our affiliates having local unions with membership segregated on the basis of race to eliminate such segregation with all possible speed."

Since that time, a number of international unions have merged all such separate locals, others have merged portions of the ones they have had. Several internationals have successfully obtained merger agreements, even when either the white local or the Negro local, or both, desired to maintain its separate existence.

The first guideline issued by the EEOC ruled that segregated local unions and separate lines of seniority and promotion based on race were a violation of the Act. Meany agreed with the ruling and again called on all affiliates that still had such segregated locals and/or such separate lines of seniority and promotion "to merge such separate locals without delay and to adopt contractual clauses that will eliminate barriers to equal opportunity for promotion and seniority for all workers."

While there still remain somewhere between 125 to 175 segregated locals out of over 50,000 locals in international unions affiliated with the AFL-CIO, the Civil Rights Department will continue to work with our affiliates before complaints under the law are processed to achieve the elimination of segregated locals and any other remaining forms of discrimination.

The record shows that significant progress has been made in identifying and eliminating discrimination. But it also shows there is still a long way to go before equal rights become a reality for everyone.

For its part, labor has firm policies, clear programs and the tools with which to tackle civil rights problems. With goodwill and understanding, labor is determined to finish the job.

Making Apprenticeship Work

In New York City in 1963, the civil rights movement picketed building sites in Harlem, lower Manhattan and Brooklyn. Hundreds of activists were arrested in Brooklyn and demonstrators demanded that work on an annex to Harlem Hospital be stopped until an integrated crew could be hired. The Mayor quickly stopped construction of the hospital annex.

The City Commission on Human Rights then announced it was recruiting applicants for building trades jobs. Hundreds of youths applied. Their names were added to a list, but they were not contacted for months. Eventually the city sent them telegrams announcing some openings, but few of the original applicants responded.

Meanwhile, within the civil rights movement bitterness against the unions increased. Despite all the demonstrations, there seemed to be no more Negroes on the job. The unions, for their part, were annoyed because the civil rights movement had not brought forth qualified applicants.

The Workers Defense League, a human rights organization with strong ties to the labor movement, was disturbed by the division between the civil rights and labor movements and by the lack of progress being made. WDL Board members Bayard Rustin, Robin Myers and Katrina Barnes began discussing a program that would increase the number of minority youths in union-management apprenticeship projects.

A little research revealed there was no one place in New York City where a young man could find out about apprenticeship jobs. The City Department of Labor maintained an information office in City Hall. A young man would walk in and tell the woman in charge the trade in which he was interested. She would then give him an address of a joint committee and send him on his way. There was no follow-up.

The WDL committee decided that information about apprenticeship was desperately needed. After weeks of research and interviews, WDL was able to publish a handbook listing all joint apprenticeship programs in the city. The book described the programs in simple language and listed the places where youth could apply. The Taconic Foundation then awarded the League $35,000 to hire a staff that would recruit and place Negro youth in apprenticeship programs. An office was opened in the Bedford-Stuyvesant section of Brooklyn.

The first year was spent distributing the handbooks, recruiting qualified applicants, establishing relationships with trade unions and youth agencies.

Now, after two and a half years, the WDL has a large file of Negro youth who want to be apprentices. They have been recruited from churches, civil rights groups, vocational and academic high schools and anti-poverty agencies.

Candidates are interviewed by staff and are told the benefits of union-management programs. They are tested to see how much help they'll need to qualify for a program. If they are unemployed, the staff tries to get them interim jobs. Local 99 of the Ladies' Garment Workers, Local 259 of the Auto Workers and the United Federation of Teachers have been particularly helpful in placing youth temporarily. WDL staff help the youth fill out application forms. Local 28 of the Sheet Metal Workers Union sends the forms directly to the WDL office, where young applicants fill them out before returning them to the union.

When a test date is announced, WDL begins a tutorial program to prepare the candidates. Dennis Derryck, a former mathematics teacher, supervises the three to four-week study. He teaches test-taking techniques, spacial relations, mechanical reasoning and basic mathematics. If the joint apprenticeship committee requires a personal interview, WDL volunteers go through role-playing sessions with the applicants.

The staff remains in contact with the apprentice after he has been placed. When young men were admitted to unions on the basis of a father-son relationship, the youth had somebody to turn to if he were having trouble on the job, needed extra money for shoes or just felt like griping. The WDL staff plays the father role for Negro and Puerto Rican youth placed—lending them money for tools, encouraging them to keep going and counseling them on other problems.

Relations between the program and unions are excellent. Peter Brennan, President of the New York City Building Trades Council, addressed this year's WDL conference for vocational school youth and Raymond Murphy, Director of the WDL program, was guest speaker at a Building Trades Executive Council luncheon. The Secretary-Treasurer of Local 28 of the Sheet Metal Workers Union recently called the WDL office to tell the staff when the new class is to be formed.

Problems still exist, however, and it would be wrong to conclude everything is going smoothly. Nevertheless, the WDL program has scored notable successes in the two and a half years it has been in existence. More than 175 young men have been placed. Most of them would have spent the rest of their lives working on menial jobs and earning $4,000 a year. They are earning more than that today and look forward to salary increases and advancement.

The program placed the first Negro apprentices in Local 28 of the Sheet Metal Workers, District 15 of the Machinists and Locals 40 and 351 of the Ironworkers. A large number of youth were placed in the program of Local 3 of the Brotherhood of Electrical Workers through an imaginative program worked out by Ernest Green, assistant director of the WDL Apprenticeship Program and Harry Van Arsdale, President of Local 3 and head of the New York City Central Labor Council.

The Urban League Expands Opportunities

by Whitney Young

Since its founding 56 years ago, the National Urban League has practically reshaped the field of social welfare as far as Negroes are concerned.

It trained the first professional Negro social workers. It has made significant breaks in industrial and business employment for Negro workers. It has stimulated and channeled the interests of the general public and of educators in Negro education. It was at work for close to a half century before the current civil rights revolution began. Its job was, and is, to make the Negro a visible and fully participating part of American life.

Allowing for the natural modifications of time and growth and the constant change of social conditions, the goals of the National Urban League are not essentially different from those of 1910 when the National Urban League started in New York with a staff of two and a budget of $8,500. The organization was called into being by the beginnings of the migration of Negroes from rural areas of the South to the urban areas of the North. Its goal was to eliminate racial segregation and discrimination from American life.

The National Urban League is a charitable and educational organization, operating as a professional community service agency using the tools and methods of social work. It has always been an interracial agency working for increased job opportunities for Negro citizens and other disadvantaged groups, for better housing, for adequate health and welfare services, for quality education and for better race relations. The League was not, and never has become, a mass membership organization; nor has it ever become an organization which lobbies for legislation or handles court cases.

Today, the League has grown way beyond its modest beginnings in 1910. It now has national headquarters in New York and affiliates in 78 cities in 31 states and the District of Columbia. It has regional offices in Akron, Atlanta, Los Angeles, New York and St. Louis, and a Washington Bureau. Its day-to-day activities are carried on by a professionally trained staff of 800 and aided by more than 8,000 volunteers who bring expert knowledge and experience to racial matters.

The Urban League's identification with labor is one of long standing. The first official contact was in 1913, when the National Urban League held its first conference with Samuel Gompers and other representatives of the American Federation of Labor to seek wider acceptance of Negroes. In 1918, the National Urban League held a Conference on Negro Labor which called upon the AFL to adopt favorable attitudes on the admission of Negroes, and upon the U.S. Department of Labor to appoint Negro represenatives to handle matters affecting the welfare of Negro wage earners in America. The conference resulted in a meeting with Gompers and, for the first time in history, the naming of three Negroes as AFL organizers. For its part, the Department of Labor established a Department of Negro Economics and selected George E. Haynes, the League's first executive, to head it.

Today, through its Economic Development and Employment Program, NUL works with management, labor and government to assist in establishing sound hiring and promotion practices; in promoting apprenticeship and job training programs; and in recruiting qualified Negro workers.

- The Labor Education Advancement Program (LEAP), funded by the Ford Foundation and the AFL-CIO for a three-year period, seeks to increase the participation of Negro and other minority group members in local union affairs, involve unions in community affairs of interest to local Leagues, help motivate nonwhite youth to make early vocational choices and expand their employment opportunities and encourage labor to open its doors to them. This program is operated with the assistance of a Trade Union Advisory Committee, composed of prominent national and international labor officials.
- The National Skills Bank, established in 1963, is designed to seek out and identify minority citizens across the nation who are unemployed and underemployed and place them in jobs which make full use of their skills and training. The Bank has registered and screened more than 33,000 people and placed more than 7,300 men and women in jobs. In Essex County, N.J., 1,200 Negroes have been placed in new jobs and the result has been a $2 million rise in total annual income for the Negro community.
- The League's On-Job-Training programs have contracted to provide training for 11,000 people and have already placed more than 5,500 trainees in positions with 2,500 employers.
- The Secretarial Training Program recruits and trains young women for administrative and clerical jobs in the New York area.
- A Summer Fellowship Program brings teachers in predominantly Negro colleges to work in business and industry for the summer so they become better equipped to prepare students for positions in modern industry.
- The OMAT Project, named for the Office of Manpower, Automation and Training of the U.S. Labor Department, is developing two experimental programs to provide training and placement for women returning to the job market.
- In cooperation with the Neighborhood Youth Corps, NUL will train and place 400 out-of-school unemployed youth in learn-and-earn positions with governmental and non-profit organizations.
- In housing, NUL consults with national, state and local housing officials, planners, builders, lenders and real estate brokers on the housing needs of Negro families. Operation Equality, initiated in 1964, is expanding with the aid of a $1.5 million grant from the Ford Foundation and matching funds to be raised in participating cities. It is a multi-faceted program which operates storefront offices in ghetto areas as local clearing houses for information and counseling on housing opportunities; cooperates with local fair housing committees; conducts educational campaigns; and works at neighborhood stabilization to ensure that newly integrated neighborhoods don't develop into new ghettos. Operation Equality works with brokers and builders to help expand the supply of low and moderate income housing.

- In the field of education, NUL operates a Human Resources Program to prepare out-of-school, out-of-work young people for educational training and manpower development programs. In a continuing program in health education, scholarships are awarded to student nurses under the Belle Sampson Scholarship Program. Youth Community programs have been established in 32 cities to build effective leadership in young people. The NUL's Student Transfer Education Plan (STEP) makes it possible for academically gifted southern Negro youngsters to live with families in northern communities where better schools and cultural facilities are available. In addition, programs are being developed in literacy, citizenship education and college recruitment and work is being done on the establishment of southern summer schools and neighborhood youth centers.

- In the field of health and welfare, NUL is engaged in a wide variety of programs, prime among which is Project ENABLE (Education and Neighborhood Action for Better Living Environment). ENABLE is designed to break up the cycle of poverty through a program of local organization, action and supportative services concentrating on home environment and community attitudes in disadvantaged neighborhoods. Working in teams, social workers and social work aides (trained residents of the neighborhoods), will hold a series of meetings to assist people in finding ways to cope with and change a hostile environment. The program is jointly sponsored by the National Urban League, the Child Study Association of America and the Family Service Association of America and is operative in 61 cities.

The challenge to labor in the field of race relations is to put its own house fully in order. Top labor leadership has fought consistently against the evil of discrimination. But official statements from the top are not necessarily transferred into local action and unions everywhere are faced with the problem of closing the gap between policies and practices. The extent to which the Negro can be fully integrated into the mainstream of organized labor can be considered a measure of his chances for equal opportunity in a country of which he is an integral part by birth, by tradition and by personal devotion.

Civil Rights at the Crossroads

by Bayard Rustin

The nation has come through the first phase of a peaceful, democratic revolution. There is no other way to describe the sweeping changes won by the civil rights movement on the American scene in the last decade.

But now, having made historic progress, "the movement" is at a crossroads. One road leads to the fulfillment of our national ideals—the achievement of complete racial equality and justice in every aspect of our common life. The other road leads to failure and despair, frustration and strife. For at this very time, before the battle is half over, there are voices in Cicero—and even in the U.S. Senate—that call upon us to re-examine our fundamental commitments to equality; and there are other voices—in Watts and Harlem—proclaiming that these commitments were false and hypocritical to begin with. Where do we go from here—forward or backward?

Society rarely goes backward. It may fail to move forward, leaving problems unsolved and festering, courting new perils in the future. But once lived, the past cannot be relived.

With dignity and determination, Negroes and their white allies have left a permanent mark on the nation's landscape. Thanks to the courage of thousands of young people, acting in the best American tradition, the barriers of segregation were smashed in lunchcounters, hotels, restaurants and other public accommodations. Thanks to the Freedom Riders, and responsive legislative action, the ban on segregation in interstate travel became the practice as well as the law of the land. And, thanks to a multiplicity of pressures and actions, laws have been passed against discrimination in employment, against federal aid to segregated institutions and, perhaps most important, against disfranchisement of Negroes at the voting polls.

Throughout all of this, the Negro learned what the trade unions had learned before—that it takes mass action to get Congress, the Executive and other instruments of lawful power to act. And precisely because our gains have been won by supreme sacrifice, perseverance, sweat and tears, the overwhelming majority of the Negro community is proud of them—just as good trade unionists are proud of the unions they have built, brick by brick, and the advances they have made through countless struggles.

And when a small minority denounces our victories as empty and meaningless, we react the same way a good labor man would to the worker who stands up at a union meeting and says: "The union hasn't done enough for me! What good is it?" The answer is: "Sure, not enough has been done—far from it. But we don't get to the roof by tearing down the foundation. We don't make further progress by destroying what we have built."

Take, for example, the Voting Rights Act of 1965. With all of its inadequacies in enforcement—and many improvements are necessary—the fact is that since the passage of this Act, 1,874,000 Negroes have been added to the voting rolls in the southern states covered by the Act, for a total at present of 2,969,392. True, hundreds of thousands of Negroes of voting age have yet to be enrolled and many still face harassment and intimidation; but these problems are neither clarified nor overcome by pooh-poohing the positive results of the Act, which have begun to be felt in Atlanta, Birmingham and other parts of the South. This is a step toward what President Johnson has called "democratic power"—which by definition means the realization of the Negro's full participation in the political process.

Yet, if such substantial progress has been made, why are our cities torn by riots, why the violent rhetoric of "black power"; why the ugly "white backlash"?

To explain this apparent contradiction, we must remember that the Negro has suffered discrimination and exploitation on two counts: color and class. Negroes are not only dark-skinned (hence a more visible target for persistent discrimination than other minority groups); they are also poor. About 50 percent of all the Negro families in America have incomes of less than $4,000 a year! They are poor not only in income but in housing, education, medical care and other social services enjoyed by most Americans.

Like the AFL-CIO, many of us foresaw that the removal of color barriers was not enough, that unless the fundamental social and economic problems besetting the Negro were solved, our movement, and the nation, would be in deep trouble. In early 1964, I wrote:

"The very decade which has witnessed the decline of legal Jim Crow has also seen the rise of de facto segregation in our most fundamental socio-economic institutions. More Negroes are unemployed today than in 1954 and the unemployment gap between the races is wider. The median income of Negroes has dropped from 57 percent to 54 percent of whites. . . . More Negroes attend de facto segregated schools today than when the Supreme Court handed down its famous decision. . . . And behind this is the continuing growth of racial slums, spreading over our central cities and trapping Negro youth in an unimaginable demoralization . . . these are the facts of life which generate frustration in the Negro community and challenge the civil rights movement."

The facts of life have not basically changed since these words were written. Government statistics show, for example, that despite the overall drop in unemployment, joblessness among Negro youth (male) has actually risen in the last year. Their unemployment rate in Watts, Harlem and other ghettos is at depression levels and worse.

To anticipate, as so many young Negroes have, that the civil rights revolution would usher in a new day of dignity and status, a place in the sun, only to find that the daily conditions of life in the ghetto remain cruelly the same—this is a bitter experience. It gives rise to a desperate politics of frustration, whose ultimate expression is the slogan "black power."

Behind "black power" is the belief that cooperation between Negroes and white liberals has failed, that whites cannot be trusted, that integration is either meaningless or a dilution of the Negro's potential militancy. Negroes, the advocates of this philosophy argue, must look only to themselves for their own salvation.

Now, of course, every group of people, to win freedom, must fight for itself. The Negro can no more expect his rights to be handed to him than the labor movement could rely on the paternal benevolence of management. But, in struggling for its rights against management, the labor movement sought the support of other segments of society, including government, from which it won protective legislation.

To anyone who knows history, it is clear that "black power," for all its verbal militancy and violent rhetoric, is a step toward conservatism, a retreat from the battle. It goes back to the nadir of the Negro's struggle, to the days of Booker T. Washington, who advised Negroes to forget political and social equality and to "cast down your bucket where you are." It is a withdrawal back into the ghettos, wounded and bitter, there to develop isolated enclaves of Negro power.

It is not surprising that "black power" has been endorsed by such rightwing luminaries as Barry Goldwater and William Buckley. For they understand, perhaps better than its Negro spokesmen, that this strategy makes no real demand on the rest of society. It lets white people off the hook; it poses no challenge to corporate wealth; it requires no changes of our political institutions; it leaves segregated housing intact; it demands no massive social investments in schools, hospitals and so forth.

Thus "black power," the politics of frustration, is not a program but a slogan, not a step forward but a retreat, not a confrontation but a "cop-out." Unfortunately, it must be said, this cop-out is duplicated by many white liberals who felt comfortable in the civil rights movement in the earlier days, when simple color barriers were the target and the moral issues seemed clear-cut, but who are now confused or overwhelmed by the complex social and economic problems that block the road to full equality. Their retreat is all the more tragic because it comes in the midst of a growing white backlash, intensified by the riots and the rhetoric of black power and encompassing many working class and lower-middle class whites who are ensnarled in many of the same problems that face the Negro.

It is difficult for a Negro to have any sympathy for those white people of Cicero who, their faces filled with hate, attacked peaceful Negroes demonstrating for open housing. Yet these whites have only barely made it themselves; they are only a few years removed from the hard struggle for a decent home, in an economy where decent, modestly-priced housing is hard to come by. It is a sad commentary upon our society that their struggle against want and scarcity has brought out the ugliest traits of selfishness, tenacious greed and fanatical survivalism.

But this is an old story in our "melting pot" society. Those who have just "made it" the hard way, desperately fearful of sliding back, step on the fingers of those struggling up the ladder beneath them. Haunted by insecurity, the haves made scapegoats of the have-nots.

And so, a vicious cycle is set in motion. Failing to deal with the social and economic roadblocks to equality, we stoke the fires of frustration in the ghettos; violent riots and cries of "black power" in turn feed a white backlash, which makes constructive solutions to the problems of blacks and whites more difficult. Finally, the backlash only confirms Negro isolationists' hostility to white America.

We are indeed at the crossroad. For if this cycle is not broken, it will propel us all into a racial nightmare. How do we break it?

On June 2nd, 1966, at the White House Conference "To Fulfill These Rights," AFL-CIO Vice-President A. Philip Randolph, who was honorary chairman of the event, announced that he would meet with prominent economists, social scientists and other experts to draw up a "Freedom Budget for All Americans." Now completed, this historic proposal calls upon the federal government, in cooperation with the private sector of the economy, to carry out a massive $100 billion program to abolish poverty by 1975.

This Budget is not for the Negro alone. It is for all the poor—75 percent of whom are white. And, in the largest sense, it is for all Americans because all of us are affected—by the persistence of poverty—in the conditions of our neighborhoods and schools, in our tax rates and public services, in the quality of our lives. The Freedom Budget recognizes that the Negro can make the most progress when society as a whole is advancing toward economic democracy.

Recognizing that fully 40 percent of U.S. poverty results from excessive unemployment, the Freedom Budget sets top priority upon achieving full employment and full production by early 1968. And, since an additional 20 percent of our poverty problem is due to low wages, the Budget demands rapid advance toward a federal minimum wage of $2 an hour.

Toward these ends, the federal government—which alone has the resources—must sponsor massive job-creating activities. This is an enormous task, for it is estimated that achieving full employment may entail creation of a gross total of 22 to 27 million new jobs by 1975.

But the Freedom Budget demonstrates that these jobs can be created if the nation will turn not only its attention but its tremendous resources to its crying social needs. Foremost among these is the removal of the slum ghettos which infect our cities. It is estimated that in our metropolitan centers, 60 percent of renting families with income under $3,000 live in unsound housing. Indeed, throughout the country, at least 20 percent of all Americans are ill-housed.

Replacing slums is an end in itself because substandard housing is both a cause and by-product of poverty. But it is also a means toward full employment, for a rapid expansion of home construction can contribute perhaps half of the 22 to 27 million new jobs we need by 1975.

We have other pressing needs as well. In the field of education, we need a hundred thousand new classrooms a year for the next six years and an equal number of new teachers. There are now at least 200,000 young people who are ready for college but lack the means; and our institutions of higher learning lack the facilities and personnel to absorb the doubling of the student enrollment between 1963 and 1975.

Outlays for hospital construction must be doubled in the next ten years merely to keep pace with the population growth. By 1975 we must increase the number of physician graduates by 50 percent and double the number of dentist graduates—just to maintain present unsatisfactory ratios of health personnel to population.

These are but a sampling of our needs. They cannot be met in a piecemeal, harum-scarum way. They cannot be left to the market system or to the private sector. The federal government must take the lead in formulating a coherent national economic policy which quantifies our needs and the resources to meet them, and which matches both in a system of priorities.

There are those who will argue that, because of the war in Viet Nam, we cannot afford to pursue this investment in social justice at home. These backsliders and reactionaries in patriotic dress hope we will forget that they opposed such a program even before the escalation of the war. In any case, the fact is that the war accounts for less than 3 percent of our gross national product.

If the principles of the Freedom Budget are put into effect, then, as a consequence of the resulting full employment and full production, we can expect the gross national product to rise from $663 billion in 1965 to about $1,120 billion by 1975.

This, the wealthiest nation in human history, poised on the threshold of still greater abundance, has not lacked the resources for the abolition of poverty and social injustice. We have lacked the will, the sense of urgency. We have let our economy drift rather than harness it to humane purposes. We have viewed poverty as an isolated phenomenon and focused on the personal characteristics of its victims. We have, above all, sought to solve the problem through uncoordinated, piecemeal programs aimed at this or that head of the many-headed monster; chop one off and another appears in its place.

Of all the institutions in America, the labor movement has been foremost in recognizing the limitations of this approach. While supporting the specialized anti-poverty programs, it has continued to insist upon the federal government's responsibility to live up to the Employment Act of 1946, to raise minimum wages and expand coverage to the working poor, to build new housing, to sponsor public works, to outlaw "right-to-work" laws. It did so even though many of these demands were of immediate benefit less to union members than to the unorganized working poor.

The Negro has come to a similar recognition. He has seen how difficult it is to integrate schools when our housing is segregated. He sees how difficult it is to escape the racial ghetto when decent housing is in short supply and when his income is inadequate to purchase what is available. And he sees how difficult it is for his children to hope for better jobs and income in a technologically advancing economy when they come from inferior, segregated schools. Here again, a vicious cycle. Here again, the crossroads.

Having knocked their heads against brick walls, some Negroes will decide they have had it; they will go the road of "black power," comforted by its militant rhetoric, untroubled by its emptiness of program.

But the great majority of the civil rights movement will press forward, seeking allies against great odds. In their search, they will remember the support of the AFL-CIO in winning the civil rights legislative victories of the last few years. And when they contemplate the obstacles ahead, they will remember that both the repeal of Taft-Hartley's Section 14(b) and the 1966 civil rights bill, though backed by majorities in the Senate, were defeated by filibusters launched by the reactionary coalition of southern Democrats and conservative Republicans. Against that coalition, our common enemy, we need to strengthen the coalition of Negroes, labor and liberals in the interest of a new social program for America.

The alternative is social chaos.

Negroes and Jobs

by Nathaniel Goldfinger

Unemployment among Negroes remains high at about 8 percent despite the generally improved job picture in recent years. And Negro teenage unemployment persists at disastrous levels. To understand these trends, one must look at the record of the postwar period.

In the early postwar years, the job market for production and maintenance workers—mainly unskilled and semi-skilled workers—was fairly good. Industrial production and construction increased rather rapidly. Moreover, the GI Bill provided veterans with money to resume their schooling—formal education and vocational training.

Under these conditions, unemployment generally was low by comparison with conditions during most of the 1950s and early 1960s. For example, in 1948 there were 2.3 million unemployed or 3.8 percent of the entire civilian labor force. In 1953, the number of unemployed was 1.9 million or 2.9 percent of the labor force.

During those years, Negro unemployment was also relatively low—5.9 percent of the Negro labor force was jobless in 1948 and 4.5 percent in 1953. Moreover, Negro unemployment in those years was somewhat less than double the white unemployment rate of 3.6 percent in 1948 and 2.7 percent in 1953. This was far from an ideal condition, but it represented a solid foundation for hope in the future.

However, this hopeful foundation began to crumble in the latter months of 1953 and 1954. After the end of the Korean War in mid-1953, the general level of unemployment rose sharply—from 2.9 percent of the labor force in 1953 to 5.6 percent in the recession year 1954. Moreover, when the unemployment situation improved after the 1954 recession, it did not decline all the way down to the previous level but settled at about 4.3 percent of the labor force in 1955-1957.

In the 1954 recession, Negro unemployment rose somewhat more rapidly than white unemployment. And, in the 1955-57 general economic pick-up, Negro unemployment declined somewhat more slowly than white unemployment. There were similar trends in the 1958 recession and the weak pick-up that followed, as well as in the recession of 1960-61 and the early part of the economic upturn in 1962-63.

The general deterioration of employment opportunities for white workers after the end of the Korean War, in mid-1953, brought even worse deterioration for the Negro workers. As a result, Negro unemployment was more than twice the level of white joblessness in 1955 and has remained more than twice the level of white unemployment ever since.

Between 1953 and 1963, unemployment was in a rising trend generally—from 1.9 million unemployed or 2.9 percent of the labor force in 1953, to 4.2 million or 5.7 percent of the labor force in 1963—with even higher levels of joblessness during the recessions of 1958 and 1960-61.

Negro workers were especially vulnerable to the recessions, economic stagnation and radical changes in technology during the decade, 1953-1963. In those 10 years, farm employment dropped 1.6 million or 24 percent. Hundreds of thousands of families, many of them Negroes, left the farms and rural areas to seek jobs and homes in the cities, particularly the cities of northern and western states.

Almost 1.5 million Negroes left the South in the 1950-60 decade, according to government estimates. But the traditional types of employment that had provided job opportunities for previous migrants from the rural areas and immigrants from foreign countries were shrinking at the very same time. Hundreds of thousands of better-paid, unskilled and semi-skilled jobs were being wiped out by the combined impact of automation and economic stagnation.

The number of factory production and maintenance jobs dropped 1.5 million or 11 percent between 1953 and 1963. In that same period, the number of non-supervisory employes in mining was cut 267,000 or 35 percent; employment of production and related workers in soft coal mining alone dropped about 60 percent. And railroad employment fell 530,000 or approximately 44 percent.

Unskilled and semi-skilled workers generally, and Negro workers in particular, were hit hardest by these trends. The heaviest blows fell on the new migrants to the cities, who were displaced from employment in farming—especially unskilled Negroes from the southern rural areas, with little if any education or vocational training and confronted by discrimination in employment and housing.

However, in 1963 the rise of economic activities began to pick up substantially. Between 1963 and 1965, the real volume of total national production increased at a yearly rate of about 5.5 percent, in contrast to an annual economic growth rate of only about 3 percent in the previous 10 years. And this upturn of national production was concentrated in heavy goods industries, construction and related activities, which employ large numbers of unskilled and semi-skilled workers.

Since production and maintenance type jobs picked up significantly in 1963-65, Negro unemployment as well as joblessness among whites moved down. This improvement continued into the early months of 1966. In the January-March quarter of 1966, the number of unemployed was down to 2.9 million or 3.8 percent of the labor force—down from 4.8 million unemployed or 6.7 percent of the labor force in 1961 and 4 million jobless or 5.7 percent of the labor force in 1963.

THE SHOCKINGLY HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG NEGRO TEENAGERS*

This general improvement in production and employment was accompanied by a drop in Negro unemployment as well—from a 12.5 percent jobless rate in 1961 to 10.9 percent in 1963 to 7.1 percent in the early months of 1966. Nevertheless, even in the January-March quarter of 1966, unemployment among Negroes remained somewhat more than double the 3.4 percent jobless rate for whites.

But there is a good deal more to the employment and unemployment situation among Negroes during the past several years.

The substantial decline in the unemployment rate for Negroes—from the recession year 1961 to the early months of 1966—was concentrated among adults, mainly among adult men. However, there was practically no improvement among Negro teenagers. Gains in employment for Negro teenagers were not great enough to offset the rising number of Negro youth entering the job market.

Among Negro adult men 20 years of age and over, the unemployment rate dropped from 11.7 percent in 1961 to 9.2 percent in 1963 and down to 4.8 percent in January-March 1966. This was a substantial and most welcome improvement.

Unemployment among Negro adult women 20 years of age and over also declined, although at a slower pace than the substantial improvement among adult men. The unemployment rate for Negro adult women declined from 10.6 percent in 1961 to 9.4 percent in 1963 to 5.9 percent in the January-March quarter of 1966.

However, Negro teenage unemployment remained at disastrous levels. Among Negro young men 14 to 19 years of age, there was hardly any improvement at all —from a 24.7 percent unemployment rate in 1961 to 25.4 percent in 1963 to 21.2 percent in January-March 1966.

And among Negro women in the teenage group, the unemployment situation was no better in the early months of 1966 than in the recession year of 1961. The unemployment rate among Negro young women rose from 26.6 percent in 1961 to 33.1 percent in 1963 and was 27.8 percent in January-March 1966.

Much of the reason for these divergent trends can be found in an examination of economic developments.

As the general rise of sales and production proceeded from the bottom of the most recent recession, in the early months of 1961, companies boosted their working hours back towards full workweeks and began to recall workers on layoff. Up to the fall of 1963, general improvements in employment were modest and recalled employes were, for the most part, those with long years of seniority. Among Negroes, it was primarily those workers with long seniority and previous work experience who were recalled or hired. This was reflected in the small decline of Negro adult unemployment, while Negro teenage unemployment actually increased.

Between 1963 and the early months of 1966, the general economic improvement picked up steam. The faster pace of economic growth—under the impact of the tax cut of 1964, followed in mid-1965 by the additional impact of rising military spending as well—was concentrated in heavy goods manufacturing, construction and related activities. This brought the first significant improvement in factory production and maintenance jobs since 1953. It also brought the first significant increase of construction employment since 1956, with a related rise of job opportunities in the production and distribution of building materials and equipment.

The number of factory production and maintenance jobs, which had dropped 1.5 million between 1953 and 1963, rose about 1.5 million between 1963 and May 1966. Jobs in contract construction, which had increased 400,000 between 1953 and 1956 and then leveled off for seven years, rose 220,000 between 1963 and 1965, with further improvements in early 1966. In addition, the decline of employment in mining and on the railroads slowed down.

This pick-up of economic activities generally, with a concentrated improvement of production and maintenance type employment, brought substantial improvement in the employment situation among Negro adults, especially men. By 1965 and the early months of 1966, most unemployed workers with seniority rights and previous work experience were recalled or hired in most major industrial centers.

Left out, for the most part, were the unskilled generally and unskilled youth in particular—those with little, if any, education, vocational training and regular work experience. Unfortunately, this is a larger group than the Labor Department's unemployment statistics indicate since there is considerable hidden unemployment among the poor and particularly among the Negro poor.

Obviously, the effects of 10 years of a rising trend of unemployment in 1953-1963 and a continuing period of technological revolution and migration from rural areas to the cities—on top of several generations of segregation and discrimination, after more than two centuries of slavery—could not be wiped out in less than three years of general economic improvement.

The Labor Department's Report on Manpower, issued in March 1966, underscores the fact that the general economic advance had not lasted long enough, or gone deep enough, to prod employers to hire large numbers of unskilled Negro workers—both young people and adults—with little, if any, skills, education, vocational training or regular work experience. Moreover, it verifies the persistence of discrimination in hiring.

By the early months of 1966, with the jobless rate among adult Negro men down to 4.8 percent, the economic advance had generated job opportunities for the vast majority of Negro workers who had some skills, education, vocational training, seniority or regular work experience. But a continued rapid advance of economic activities—and elimination of discrimination in hiring—was required before the job markets would get tight enough to provide substantial numbers of jobs for the most disadvantaged Negro adults and young people.

However, the pace of rising economic activities slowed down in the April-June quarter of 1966. The increase of employment among Negroes—which had proceeded at a faster pace than among white workers during the previous year—halted immediately. And the improvement of Negro unemployment halted, too.

As a result, unemployment rose from 7.1 percent of the Negro labor force in the early months of the year to 8 percent in the July-September quarter of 1966.

Among Negro adult men, who had benefited most substantially and directly from the rapid economic advance, the jobless rate moved up slightly from 4.8 percent to 4.9 percent. Unemployment among adult women increased to a greater degree. And unemployment among Negro teenagers, which had persisted at disastrous levels even during the economic advance, was 20.6 percent for young men and rose to 33.9 percent for young women in the July-September quarter of 1966. This would mean that, in the summer months of 1966, there were neighborhoods in the Negro areas of the major cities where over 10 percent of the adults and 50 percent or more of the teenagers were unemployed!

Negro workers hardly needed this additional lesson that the employment and unemployment conditions of the Negro labor force respond quickly and directly to a slowing of economic activities—particularly when it is concentrated in heavy goods industries, home-building and related activities. Moreover, it underscored the fact that another full-blown recession could be a calamity for Negroes by displacing experienced adult workers and sharply reducing the pace of new job opportunities for the growing number of youngsters entering the job market.

Since jobs are the key issue, the creation of job opportunities is the major necessity—obviously accompanied by effective enforcement of the fair employment provisions of the Civil Rights Act to wipe out racial discrimination in hiring and employment practices. Full and fair employment should be the goal.

The most effective action the federal government could take to reach full employment and maintain it would be the creation of job opportunities in the construction and improvement of public facilities and services such as schools, health centers, mass transit systems and the rebuilding of the cities. These programs are needed by a rapidly growing and increasingly urban population.

The planned expansion of such a federal effort is needed in the next 10 years—with federal leadership and adequate federal funds—to improve the quality of life for all Americans while creating job opportunities for an expanding labor force. Planned programs along these lines can create large numbers of unskilled and semi-skilled jobs, as well as skilled, in building the facilities, producing and distributing the materials and equipment and in providing additional services.

However, the record of recent years also shows that such foundation of general economic policies must be supplemented by special measures if Negro unemployment is to be driven down to minimum levels in the near future and kept there.

For example, the Neighborhood Youth Corps, with its part-time jobs for youngsters, could be expanded considerably and enriched with an emphasis on vocational training and guidance. The operation of the new GI Bill adopted in 1966 should be followed closely, with an eye on improving its effectiveness. Government and private groups should encourage the development of programs to prepare young people for job-entry qualifying exams, such as civil service and apprenticeship entry tests. Adult education and training programs that emphasize literacy and basic arithmetic should be stepped up.

Since education and vocational training are essential to improve a person's ability to compete in the job market, a continuing emphasis on providing Negroes with full and fair opportunities for top quality education and vocational training is fundamental. But the basic prerequisite is an environment of sustained full and fair employment—with expanding employment and increasing opportunities for upgrading and promotion.

Making Equal Rights Laws Work

by Walter G. Davis

The public policy of the United States has declared an end to any and all discrimination against any citizen because of race, color, religion or national origin.

In the last 12 years, each branch of the federal government has played a significant role in fashioning remedies to deal with the overt practices of discrimination which have persisted over the past century.

The federal courts, beginning with the historic 1954 school decision, have been whittling away at the concept of the separate but equal doctrine legally initiated by the Plessy vs. Ferguson decision in 1896.

The Congress of the United States, after its meager beginning in the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1957, has responded to the pressure of public opinion with the enactment of the Civil Rights Acts of 1960, 1964 and 1965.

The executive branch of government, under the leadership of the President, has been irrevocably involved in the implementation of programs enacted into law and created by executive orders.

A simple historical analysis of the plight and suffering of the American Negro over the past 100 years can, indeed, serve as a frame of reference for the problems of the 1960s. We are now engaged in correcting the wrongs of the past in the context of a highly sophisticated society, with all its political, economic and international implications. So complete has been the separation of the races, both physical and otherwise, the social change of the magnitude called for today cannot realistically occur on a piecemeal basis.

Yet that is our present approach and it is a major reason for the frustration in the large Negro ghettos—the frustration that inevitably leads to the unrealistic "let's go it alone" cries of some civil rights leaders.

The present federal government effort must be regarded as only the beginning in a long struggle to make real the goals of our public policy. We also must recognize that laws and federal programs by themselves are not self-implementing and are not always immediately beneficial. These laws and programs require a high degree of citizen participation and goodwill, for we are dealing today with subtle discrimination difficult to attack and even more difficult to detect.

In any event, it will be helpful to examine the existing federal government programs in the field of civil rights. These are the responsible agencies and their functions:

U.S. Commission on Civil Rights

The Commission was established by the Civil Rights Act of 1957. Its responsibilities were expanded by the Civil Rights Acts of 1960 and 1964. It is an independent, bipartisan, fact-finding agency.

The Commission is the national clearinghouse for information on the denial of federal rights because of race, color, religion or national origin, including but not limited to, the fields of voting, education, housing, employment, use of public facilities and transportation and the administration of justice, including police-community relations.

The Commission collects, publishes and disseminates information to promote a better understanding of constitutional and statutory requirements relating to civil rights. Its recommendations for corrective actions are made directly to the President and to the Congress. Complaints which it receives with respect to denial of rights are referred to appropriate federal agencies having jurisdiction over such complaints. The Commission also has developed a network of state advisory committees to meet within the respective states periodically to evaluate the problems within the state. In some states, subcommittees are formed to study specific problem areas and to hold hearings which result in the highlighting of discriminatory practices within the state or in local communities. Generally, the state advisory committees represent a broad cross-section of labor, business, civil rights and religious organizations.

The Commission performs a valuable service to other federal agencies in the field. Of its recommendations to the President and to the Congress, approximately 75 percent have been put into effect either by legislation or executive order. Its information role creates a better climate for other federal agencies to move ahead in the field.

Like most other federal civil rights agencies, the Commission lacks adequate funds and staff to enable it to further decentralize its efforts to the grass roots.

Department of Justice—Civil Rights Division

The Civil Rights Division of the Justice Department, headed by an Assistant Attorney General, enforces all federal statutes affecting civil rights. The Division, under authority granted by the Civil Rights Act of 1957, can initiate civil suits to prevent and get relief from racial discrimination in voting. The Division institutes investigations and takes legal actions in connection with complaints that citizens are being coerced, threatened or intimidated either by officials or by private persons, in the exercise of their rights to vote for candidates for federal office.

Under authority of the Voting Rights Act of 1965, the Attorney General may assign federal examiners to register voters in those states and/or counties covered by the Act.

Under the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Attorney General may file suits to end patterns or practices of job discrimination; to require the desegregation of public facilities and public institutions such as schools; and to desegregate and to stop interference with the desegregation of public accommodations, including hotels, motels or restaurants. He also may take legal action to enforce non-discrimination requirements on programs or activities receiving federal funds.

The Division also is responsible for the enforcement of federal criminal statutes dealing with unlawful obstruction of justice, and barring peonage and slavery, and on any illegal use of search warrants. The Division can investigate and prosecute federal, state or local law enforcement officers whenever there is reason to believe they have deliberately misused their authority to deprive a citizen of his constitutional rights. The Division also initiates the necessary action to protect the integrity of orders of federal courts in civil rights cases.

Community Relations Service

Created by the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and originally placed within the Department of Commerce, the Community Relations Service was transferred in September 1965 to the Department of Justice under the President's realignment of federal responsibilities.

The mission of the Community Relations Service is to help communities cope with disputes and difficulties relating to discriminatory practices based on race, color or national origin. CRS thus helps communities make peaceful progress toward securing justice and equal opportunity for all their citizens. The agency not only aids in resolving disputes after they have erupted, but also assists communities in achieving the kind of progress in race relations which will enable them to avoid serious upheavals. The latter task requires concern about those deprivations occurring in the lives of minority group citizens which help cause community conflict.

Currently, members of the field staff are working in 43 cities on a regular and part-time basis in large metropolitan areas which have heavy concentrations of minority group citizens. The CRS aim is to help guide social change within the local community without relieving local leadership of its responsibility. As CRS views big city problems, there are several universal characteristics. The most important is the debasing nature of ghetto life. High unemployment among Negro youth and the problem of de facto school segregation also rank high.

CRS provides a valuable aid to local communities because its professional staff is skilled in intergroup relations and is trained to anticipate disputes which may erupt into violence and disorder far in advance of the occurrences. It is the policy of the Service to encourage the formation and strengthening of local human relations commissions. CRS provides on the spot information and materials about existing federal programs and performs a valuable task in putting other federal agencies in communication with local community leaders.

Equal Employment Opportunity Commission

Created by Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the EEOC was activated one year later on July 2, 1965. Title VII prohibits employers and unions with 75 or more employes or members from discriminating because of race, color, religion, sex or national origin except in those instances where sex or religion is a bona fide occupational qualification. The law also prohibits discrimination by employment agencies.

The Commission's procedures involve the receipt of complaints from aggrieved persons, analysis of complaints to determine jurisdiction, investigation and the finding of reasonable cause where the complaint is valid. When a cause finding is made, attempts to conciliate the matter are immediately begun between the charging parties and respondents. The Commission cannot initiate legal action to resolve a complaint but it can recommend to the Attorney General that he intervene in a private proceeding brought by the complainant or respondent or that he on his own initiative bring suit where he finds a pattern of practice of employment discrimination.

Independent of the complaint procedure, the Commission promotes affirmative action by employers and unions. Such affirmative action programs relate to the process of hiring, promotion, admission to on-the-job training and apprenticeship programs either unilaterally administered by the employer or those administered by a joint labor-management committee.

To provide racial data for the development of affirmative action programs, the Commission has distributed a questionnaire to some 78,000 employers—the EEO1 Report Form. It has recently completed Report Form EEO2, which will provide racial data on existing apprenticeship training programs. It plans to develop Report Form EEO3 for data regarding union involvement in the hiring process. Information gathered with respect to the latter form will come from unions which operate hiring halls and job referral systems.

The Commission recently activated a field program in 10 major U.S. cities and hopes to expand it.

Among the basic problems plaguing the EEOC are budget and staff limitations which limit the scope of its activities and the lack of definition of what is or what is not a violation of Title VII in many situations.

The agency welcomes the cooperation of the trade union movement and the business community in reaching equitable settlements to the valid complaints before it. Quite often when communication breaks down at the local level, contacts made with the national union headquarters and corporate headquarters facilitate the handling of complaints during the investigation and conciliation stages.

Another major problem facing the Commission is that much of its work places it within the collective bargaining process—a sore point with both business and labor. Unions are concerned that the law does not tamper with valid rights and benefits gained through collective bargaining. Employers, on the other hand, are concerned about the encroachment upon what they consider traditional management prerogatives.

The AFL-CIO Department of Civil Rights, recognizing the difficulties facing the Commission, has maintained close liaison with its operations over the past year. The need to refine procedures in support of a joint cooperative effort between the Commission, labor and management is high on the Commission's agenda.

U.S. Department of Labor—Office of Federal Contract Compliance

The Department of Labor is charged, among other things, with ensuring that federal government contractors and subcontractors do not discriminate against any employe or applicant for employment because of race, creed, color or national origin and that employes are treated, during employment, without regard to any racial, religious or ethnic factors.

Non-discriminatory requirements extend to employment, promotion, demotion or transfer; recruitment or recruitment advertising; layoff or termination; rates of pay; and selection for training, including apprenticeship.

The Office of Federal Contract Compliance is responsible for carrying out the responsibilities assigned the Secretary of Labor by executive order regarding non-discrimination in federally assisted construction, contracts or subcontracting, e.g., contracts made by states to build highways, hospitals or homes with federal assistance. The Office is further assigned the jobs of developing and recommending to the Secretary of Labor rules and regulations necessary and appropriate to achieve non-discrimination goals; coordinating with the EEOC and the Department of Justice on matters relating to Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and maintaining liaison with other agencies having civil rights and equal employment opportunity activities.

In another area of the Department's civil rights responsibilities, Manpower Administration Order No. 22-65, dated July 15, 1965, was issued "to establish the organization, define responsibilities and specify procedures for achieving compliance with Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Department's Non-discrimination in Federally Assisted Programs Regulations." The manpower order covers activities in Employment Service programs, the Manpower Development and Training Act, work training under the Economic Opportunity Act and other government-sponsored training.

President's Committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing

One of the responsibilities of the President's Committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing is to encourage educational programs to eliminate racial discrimination in housing and related facilities provided with federal assistance.

Established by executive order, the Committee also is charged with the supervision and coordination of activities of the various federal departments and agencies in preventing discrimination in housing and related facilities they own and operate and in housing and facilities assisted by programs they administer.

U.S. Civil Service Commission

The U.S. Civil Service Commission is responsible for supervising and providing leadership and guidance in the conduct of equal employment opportunity programs for the civilian employes of and applicants for employment within the executive departments and agencies of the federal government.

It is the policy of the federal government to provide equal opportunity in federal employment for all qualified persons, to prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, creed, color or national origin and to promote equal employment opportunity through a positive, continuing program in each executive department and agency.

The Commission has the responsibility of providing for the prompt, fair and impartial consideration of all complaints of discrimination in federal employment on the basis of race, creed, color or national origin.

To carry out its civil rights responsibilities, the Commission issues regulations, orders and instructions it deems necessary and appropriate and the head of each executive department and agency is required to comply with the regulations, orders and instructions issued by the Commission in the discharge of its functions.

In reality, all federal departments and agencies are responsible for compliance with the civil rights laws and regulations as they affect programs administered by the governmental units, but the main ones can be highlighted:

- The new Department of Housing and Urban Development is responsible for securing compliance with the executive order and federal laws which require non-discrimination in the sale and rental of federal and federally-assisted housing, including public housing, urban renewal, college housing, Federal Housing Administration-insured homes and community facilities.
- The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare is responsible for enforcement of federal laws and executive orders outlawing racial discrimination in the numerous programs administered by its scores of offices and bureaus. The Department's Office of Education, for example, is responsible for assuring non-discrimination in federal aid-to-education programs, including aid to colleges and universities, elementary and secondary schools and libraries.

The Department is charged with the responsibility of administering other major programs such as Medicare, Hill-Burton hospital construction grants and vocational education projects.

The Office of Special Assistant for Civil Rights in the Secretary's office coordinates the departmental civil rights policies and programs, including contracts, federal employment and construction projects.

- The Department of Defense has responsibility for implementing programs requiring equal opportunity in the recruitment, training and promotion of military personnel; carries out programs designed to secure equal treatment of military personnel in off-base facilities near military installations and implements regulations requiring non-discrimination in employment under contracts it lets.

The Department of Defense is by far the largest of the contracting agencies in terms of federal dollars spent.

The record shows there is deep involvement by the government in civil rights matters. There is, however, a competitive spirit between agencies which tends to cause some breakdowns in communications. Sometimes the right hand doesn't know what the left hand is doing. This is a real problem in the employment field.

For example, with each department contracting for goods and services with large business firms, the public policy on employment discrimination sometimes gets lost in the shuffle. What constitutes compliance might be one thing for the contracting agency, another for the Office of Federal Contract Compliance and still another for the Title VII Commission. This leads to confusion and chaos for the business firm and the union with which it deals. The tragic result quite often is a loss of goodwill and cooperation from the private sector, a condition which inhibits the effective implementation of the laws and executive orders.

It would be valuable for the total effort if each agency involved worked toward improving its liaison functions. Otherwise, there should be reestablished an umbrella organization of the type formerly headed by Vice President Hubert Humphrey.

The beneficiaries of civil rights legislation obviously are America's minority groups. We must encourage the utilization of the programs developed by each agency, especially those programs which include the right of grievance. Through stepped-up education programs which portray a total picture of the nation's public policy in this field, all citizens will be better served. It will also help put the aspirations of Negroes and Spanish-American citizens into proper perspective in terms of what they can expect from their government.

The NAACP and the New Strategy

by Roy Wilkins

The forward momentum of the civil rights movement, as viewed nationally, has clearly slowed. There are two main reasons for this, one a matter of basic strategy, the other a temporary stiffening of resistance on the part of the majority population, dismayed and confused by the "black power" cry and by repeated instances of destructive rioting by Negroes in a number of large cities.

ROY WILKINS is Executive Director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

It would be easy, in the latter case, to sound a retreat or a reduction of effort on the theory that the way to deal with the so-called white backlash is to appease it. To take this course, however, would be as self-defeating as it would be tragic and the NAACP rejects such a choice. What is called for, nevertheless, is a sober assessment of the means to be employed—in concert with enlightened white leadership (business, labor, religion and others) in bringing the white majority to a recognition of its obligations in the fight for racial equality. This is an easily stated goal, but difficult of accomplishment. Its accomplishment, however, is vital if the basic strategy is to have any chance of success.

This strategy is based upon the obvious fact that, however much remains to be done in guaranteeing the Negro enjoyment of his constitutional rights, their fulfillment requires a massive upgrading of Negro economic status. The complex of unemployment and under-employment, of poverty and dependency, of low skills and low pay which characterize the Negro community must be radically changed. Since a sizable component of the white population is similarly afflicted, the problem is national, not racial.

The development of solutions for this national problem and the formulation of the interdependent goals and tactics have occupied national civil rights attention for a number of months. Unified effort behind the "Freedom Budget" will almost certainly be a prime element in the programs of the NAACP and other groups in the forseeable future. Again, while the objectives are easily stated, their attainment will demand both comprehension and cooperation by all our constituencies on an unprecedented scale.

At the same time, and especially for the NAACP, the day-to-day job of implementing and extending the civil rights of Negro Americans in a thousand cities and towns must go on. Access to public accommodations, legal redress of all kinds, police brutality complaints, school desegregation and upgrading, citizenship training, job discrimination, voting and housing bias will continue to occupy the energies and resources of our membership, aided by our field and consultant staff.

Because experience has shown that accurate knowledge and understanding of the NAACP, its structure and its operations cannot be taken for granted, a brief discussion of the Association itself is in order here.

It is difficult to understand the NAACP without some knowledge of its institutional function as distinct from its role as a vehicle for day-to-day agitation and protest.

There is no counterpart in the organization spectrum of civil rights for the NAACP's nationwide structure of state and local units, including youth and student groups, and numbering over 1,600. A few big city branches maintain their own offices and paid personnel, but most are volunteer-manned. All the units are served by a national headquarters staff of 75 in New York City, by a Washington Bureau in the nation's capital, by professionally staffed voter registration offices in Richmond and Memphis, and by 18 field and regional offices with paid professional personnel. The paid-up membership at the close of 1965 was some 445,000.

Even allowing for wide variations in the effectiveness of individual NAACP units and for the occasional delays in mobilizing local leaders whose personal capabilities often differ widely, it would be hard to overestimate the strength of the aggregate organizational resource at the NAACP's disposal.

Thus, while the NAACP's leadership may not be everywhere and at all times paramount, the NAACP and its units have collectively borne the lion's share of the burden. This is the case whether the target has been in housing, in employment, in vote denials, in school segregation or in public accommodations.

During 1960, most of the young people arrested in sit-in demonstrations were NAACP youth and college members; indeed, it was the NAACP youth groups in Oklahoma City and Wichita who first applied the sit-in technique on a massive scale to desegregate large numbers of restaurants in 1958 and 1959.

Most of the Negro pupils who desegregated public schools in the South following the 1954 decision depended on NAACP legal and other assistance in order to do so. Most of the Negro voters added to the registration books in southern states during this period were placed there in the course of NAACP campaigns.

NAACP units have sponsored a majority of the marches, boycotts and other "direct" actions of the recent past.

A substantial proportion of the Association's energies is devoted to its organizational maintenance—fund raising, membership solicitation, staff recruitment and training and the complex array of concerns entailed in administering a large enterprise.

The general public addresses between 50,000 and 60,000 letters a year to the national office of the NAACP, seeking assistance with literally every conceivable problem, offering every conceivable kind of advice or suggestion. Hundreds of visitors are seen every year, including newspapermen, radio and television interviewers, writers, students, government officials and foreign observers.

The staff, including specialists in training, housing, labor, public relations, voter registration and education, annually travel hundreds of thousands of miles, conferring with local NAACP leaders, making speeches and investigating complaints. The two-way flow of information, both written and oral, between the staff and the Negro community is constant and prodigious.

The organizational influence of the NAACP is much more than the collective weight of its membership applied to a boycott or other action. It is also an obscure branch in a small southern town, concealing its membership from a bitterly hostile white community, but maintaining from year to year a nucleus of people dedicated to the ideal of racial justice, without which there would be total wasteland.

The Association had small beginnings. Some 60 leaders, representative of both races and three faiths, established the NAACP in 1909, following a national conference in New York City to examine the plight of the Negro. Disfranchised by force and subterfuge in the South, where 90 percent of Negroes resided, and without an effective voice in the North, the Negro was being lynched at the rate of two per week and was being slaughtered in larger numbers in increasingly violent race riots. He was at the bottom of the economic pile, ill-educated if, indeed, he received any schooling and destined, in the view of some social experts, to extinction within a couple of generations.

The years before 1909 had seen numerous efforts to found viable national organizations to advance the Negro's cause, but none had survived more than a brief few years. One of the reasons for the NAACP's success where others had failed was its early decision to establish local branches throughout the country and to pursue the work of the Association equally on local and national levels. As early as 1918, there were 165 branches, 69 of them in southern states, including South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi.

Legal action was an essential first strategy because, lacking both political and economic power, the Negro's most promising means of achieving change was to revive the constitutional guarantees developed to safeguard the freedmen after Emancipation but virtually nullified by the courts in the late nineteenth century.

This strategy paid off well and, in a succession of carefully planned, brilliantly argued NAACP cases, the basic rights of Negroes were creatively reaffirmed and expanded. The culmination was the U.S. Supreme Court's school desegregation ruling of May 17, 1954.

The NAACP is a membership corporation under the laws of New York State. It is governed by a national board of directors numbering 60 members, 42 of whom are elected directly by the local units—with regional, youth and at-large representation—and 18 by the board itself. During the NAACP's first two decades, membership on the board was entirely determined within the board. Side by side with this democratization, the proportion of Negro board members has increased from a minority to a majority of more than four-fifths.

Basic policy is established at annual conventions of delegates elected by the branches. Policies adopted by the convention are submitted to the board of directors before taking effect and may be disapproved by a two-thirds vote in the board; such disapproval can be overridden by majority vote of the branches.

The NAACP operates on a budget which, for the past two or three years, has been in excess of a million and a half dollars a year. The principal source of income is annual membership dues, ranging upward from a minimum of $2.00 (by far the majority), contributions and fundraising by the branches. Until April 1964, the NAACP was unable to receive tax-exempt contributions and gifts have always been small. Treasury approval has now been secured for a Special Contribution Fund, to which tax-deductible gifts can be made for most of the NAACP's programs.

The Association's goal is substantially unchanged since the beginning, namely, the complete elimination of racial discrimination from all aspects of American life. The methods have included every legitimate instrument of protest, agitation and propaganda and remedial action has been sought through courts, legislative bodies and executive authority. Direct action against discrimination will continue to be used wherever it will be effective.

The period ahead will find the NAACP increasingly concerned with matters beyond the confines of civil rights activity, narrowly defined. It is evident that the Negro's advancement depends not only on getting his rightful share, but upon an economy strong enough to ensure him a meaningful share. This has led to a policy expansion in which the problem of poverty will become a major concern. It is also clear that emergence into an integrated society imposes certain demands and obligations upon a Negro community which in some respects has been ill-prepared by segregation to assume them. Here, too, the Association will find additional challenges and will seek new remedies.

Books, Films and Pamphlets

The Negro and Organized Labor.

By Ray Marshall. John Wiley and Sons, Inc., 605 Third Ave., New York, N.Y. 1965. 320 pages. $6.95.

In this balanced work, Professor Marshall reports that "discrimination—by unions and in the larger society—has declined markedly since 1940 and significantly since 1960." But Professor Marshall, who teaches economics at the University of Texas, also notes that progress was long in coming. He traces the historical background, defines problem areas remaining and suggests what can be done. This study grew out of a research program at the University of California.

A Common Goal—Equal Opportunity.

AFL-CIO Pamphlet 8D. 12 pages. Free in limited quantities.

The resolution on civil rights passed by the Sixth AFL-CIO convention in December 1965 is reprinted in this pamphlet. It sets forth the federation's policy on equal educational opportunity, open occupancy, equal employment rights, voting and legal rights.

Changing Employment Practices in the Construction Industry.

Community Relations Service, U.S. Conference of Mayors. Available from AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department. Free in limited quantities.

A background paper designed to acquaint mayors and other government officials with the problems of the building and construction unions and the reason for their concern over job control.

Civil Rights, Employment and the Social Status of American Negroes.

By Harold L. Sheppard and Herbert E. Striner. W. E. Upjohn Institute for Employment Research, 300 S. Westnedge Ave., Kalamazoo, Michigan. 85 pages. Single copy free.

This study emerges from work done earlier under contract with the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights. It reviews present relationships of employment, earnings and family structure to the civil rights of Negroes.

Black Power and Coalition.

By Bayard Rustin. Reprint from Commentary magazine, September 1966. Available from A. Philip Randolph Institute, 217 W. 125th St., New York, N.Y. 8 pages. 15 cents.

Rustin argues in this article that the "black power" appeal among ghetto Negroes reflects despair over the lack of progress towards integration. He observes that legislative and judicial gains of the past decade have been great, but that economic gains have been nil.

The Watts "Manifesto" and the McCone Report.

By Bayard Rustin. Reprinted from Commentary magazine. Available from League for Industrial Democracy, 112 E. 19th St., New York, N.Y. 8 pages. 25 cents.

Rustin points out certain misconceptions in the McCone Report. He says the report shows little understanding of the causes of the riot. He makes some limited proposals, especially in the area of jobs.

The Continuing Crisis: An Assessment of New Racial Tensions in the South.

Southern Regional Council, 5 Forsyth St., N.W., Atlanta, Georgia. 40 pages. Single copy free.

Despite press reports of peaceful progress in school integration throughout the South, a recent survey by the Southern Regional Council and the American Friends Service Committee indicates there was little progress made in integration and retaliation against Negroes was often severe.

Somebody ought to tell Labor leaders — the AFL-CIO — the Brotherhoods are worse than the AFL-CIO unions but very few members of the AFL-CIO are aware of this. Why guess is bad in all Southern States as well as Atlanta

The Southern Regional Council's Labor Program is pleased to send you the enclosed copy of the AMERICAN FEDERATIONIST (November, 1966).

You will note that the entire magazine is devoted to civil rights issues. The articles focus primarily on jobs, unions, and training in the context of what is happening in the struggle for equal opportunity and in the economy.

The magazine as a whole is one expression of the labor movement's recognition of the seriousness of race related problems and a call to find those policies and channels for action which can make equality real.

I would welcome any reactions which you have to this special issue.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Meany:

Through the courtesy of the Southern Regional Council I have just received a copy of your monthly magazine which was devoted to the top of Equal Rights. I would like to congratulate you and your organization on this publication. The articles in the journal are well written but even more important they get to the heart of the problem of equal rights.

I would like to also take this opportunity to congratulate you and your organization on the stand that you have taken in this very difficult and complicated problem which is facing our country. Certainly the support that your group is giving will assist us in moving down the road towards the solution of some of the many problems which face us before all American citizens have equal opportunity.

Sir:
Please accept my thanks for the copy of "The American Federationist" for the month of November 1966.

You asked for my reactions.

In my view, the forthright articles written by the several participants support the fact that there is a Great Universal Intelligence,at the source of all creation. Those who are illumined by this Great Intelligence, to mind compare with a light bulb that is in contact with the generator,or power plant, show that they are in contact with it.

In fact the several articles and editoral could not have been forthcoming without this kind of contact. In the face of facts as I see them the writers of these articles put this contact into reality.

Some others whom I think were in this kind of contact are: (1) Paul who wrote to the church; Galatian (6:7) "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. (2) The scientist who says that for every act there is an equal and opposite reaction. (3) The moralist who says that for every privilege there is a responsibility. (4) The man who wrote no man is an island--each man is my brother each man is my friend. (5)The writers of the declaration of independence "When in the course of human events,------Laws of Nature and Nature's God entitle them etc."

There are two attacks which I consider vital from these articles: One, the use of the law as a doorway to establishing the opportunities for right action and for justice.

The other is to confront forthrightly and candidly the issues that plague our times in such way that the opressed and deprived peoples of the world can recognize a strong support in favor of right. I view the content of this issue of the Federationist as a sort of creed which when digested from the total writings could be disseminated among our growing generation in order to break down or even remove the present day apathy which make our youth and young adults feel that they have no chance to work and share in the development of this world as well as to enjoy the fruits of their labors.

I do believe that a much more nearly perfect world is in themaking. Those who help to bring it about will be rewarded accordingly. Those who have a chance to build their world will enrich it because such people will earn the citizenship for which they will prove worthy. In fact it is imperative that people work and share in the development and promotion of their own livelihood.

"For a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past, and as a watch in the night"

Gratefully yours

Dear Mr. Via:

I have scanned most of your recent publication (that is, the one you sent me, the Federationist) with great interest. I read with some care two or three articles, and particularly profited from reading Nathan Goldfinger's piece on "Negroes and Jobs."

That we have had discrimination against the Negro in the South and elsewhere in the Nation for years and years is an undeniable fact. I deplore this as much as anybody could. I do not know how we can wipe it out until we can change the hearts of men, but there is something that can be done, and should be done, to make it possible for the Negro to compete in the struggle for good jobs and equal treatment. I refer here simply to the most urgent need of trying to improve educational facilities, and thus educational backgrounds of the Negro. Having spent more than thirty years in higher education, and having become quite cognizant of the nature of our institutions of higher learning for Negro youth in this State, I know that the Negro boy and girl go to the college with real disadvantages. He is anywhere from one to four years behind his white counterpart, and of course, through no fault of his own. He has been forced to participate in a cruel, duel system which automatically denied him an opportunity to compete with the best in the land. Even so, I think something, some way must be found to improve the Negro institutions, which cannot be wiped out overnight, in order to improve the educational qualifications of the graduates of these institutions. One could also include vocational schools or technical schools of all kinds and still be speaking relevantly to the issue at hand.

The City of Winston-Salem, where I now reside, has a good record in trying to provide equal employment opportunities. Industries here, and that includes businesses of all kinds, have tried, generally, to be fair and square about this matter. They, meaning the leaders of these industries and businesses, are frequently frustrated simply because they cannot find qualified Negroes to take jobs. This leads me to my point: Can we not, all of us, find some way to improve educational opportunities for Negroes? We have no right to expect business, industry, or Government, for that matter, to employ people who cannot do the job. A double standard is no answer and would only lead us into more difficulty.

How can a foundation be of assistance in this gigantic problem?

Sincerely,

Wm. C. Archie

Dear Mr. Via:

Thanks for the Copy of the American Federationist which has recently come to my desk. I glanced over it at once and then returned to the careful perusal of it, for to me, it is a very interesting presentation of what is taking place under the guidance of the AFL - CIO.

The editorial - "Labor's Commitment" - presented over the signature of Mr. George Meany is a document which expresses all and more than the federal constitution of the United States does. Every constituent of the National Congress should have a copy of the same. In fact he and she should be required to submit a written comment on his or her attitude on the democracy they stand for. Genuine Americans deplore the actions and expressions of the demagogues who are anxious to capitalize upon the much rioting that has been so prevalent here in the country in recent times. We hope for a curbing of that which grows out of unreasoning selfishness.

Thanks for the articles in this edition from the pens of worthy men of nationally known organizations that are doing a good job for the purpose of helping to solve the vital problems of race, education and economics and other forms of democracy affecting the United States of America.

Congratulations and best wishes.

Dear Emory:

Happy New Year!

Your memo with the special AFL-CIO Federationist of November 1966, sent to our Research Department, was referred to me. It came the day after the letter from Ted Ruhig from Hawaii which told me that he is now Executive Secretary of that State's Manpower Commission.

In my opinion, the Equal Rights issue is fine as far as it goes. However, there is need for the AFL-CIO and its affiliated international unions to program in greater depth into urban area problems. There are great opportunities for pioneering in projects that would make basic impact upon equal opportunities, such as with community councils, youth program, public safety and family life.

The experiences of this Commission would be very valuable. As community organization and planning specialists, we have implemented many significant joint government and non-government efforts that have made telling effects upon large numbers of families, youth, and local community agencies.

You will be interested to know that the Executive Director of this agency, Charles Livermore, was an early staff member of national CIO's community services program and had other labor union experiences.

Important non-government bodies, other than organized labor, are addressing themselves to, and participating, in, local community projects. Organized labor will need to move forthrightly to keep up with them. (an issue of the Federationist might be devoted to such activities that organized labor bodies are already engaged in.)

Please give my best to your wife and son. Our new address is 6630 North Newgard, Chicago, Illinois, 60626.

My work here is most interesting and challenging.

This department has four excellent professionals and good, conscientious clerical staff members.

When are you visiting Chicago? Please let me know.

With warmest good wishes

Dear Mr. Via:

Dr. Coyle E. Moore, Dean of the school of Social Welfare circulated a copy of THE AMERICAN FEDERATIONIST, November 1966 to some of the members of the faculty.

I am especially interested in this special issue and feel it calls to attention the fact that the labor unions do have not only a strong commitment to full equality for all citizens but that their interests in eliminating slums, building better homes, providing better health care, etc. are in line with social welfare's goals for the citizens of this country.

In addition to letting you know that I am personally delighted to see such a statement of commitment being circulated, I also wanted to let you know that we have a group of students in our Department of Social Work that are planning with the help of faculty to bring several speakers to our campus on the general subject of the goals of labor unions and the goals of social work. Mr. Hal Farrier, a graduate student now working on his MSW will be writing you about several specifics, I hope that you will find it possible to be of some assistance to him and to the school in finding the best speakers.

May I also ask if it would be possible to get additional copies of the November issue of THE AMERICAN FEDERATIONIST. It may not be possible for you to supply us with 100 copies for the on campus student body but any number would help. We can place it in the library for all to read.

Dear Emory,

We were delighted to hear from you and Margaret at Christmas, but terribly disappointed to realize that we might have had a chance to see you last year when we were in Chapel Hill. We did make several trips to LaGrange to see my parents.

We are very interested to know that you are back in Atlanta, and as you can see, our mutual interests are still strong. I am enjoying this job most days, except when recently we got the word that our tutorial program, involving about 160 kids, has received a low priority from O.E.O. for next year. We've appealed and are hoping. Most of my time is spent in the education area, and thus far I've done very little in the employment field. The copy of AMERICAN FEDERATIONIST was fascinating --- thanks.

For slamin

Regarding mailings from the Council, we are receiving two copies of each (one at school for Bruce, another at home). Could you ask the Chief Mailer to cancel the mailing to Bruce at Harpur College, State University of New York; change our home address from 21 Moore Ave. to 316 Murray Hill Road, Binghamton, N.Y. 13903; and send a second mailing to me at this office address. We do appreciate very much the chance to keep in touch with doings in the New South through your publications.

Mr. Bruce McDuffie

Our kids are rapidly growing up; Susan, almost fifteen, has a great interest and, we think, some talent in art. John, at fourteen, is a long-haired electric guitarist --- and in the loudest combo this side of the Atlantic. Judy, almost ten, is an interesting combination of wise old owl and growing girl. Bruce, at forty-five, is busy with chemistry, revived by his sabbatical year, and enjoying chopping wood in the yard of our new house, which adjoins the campus of Harpur. He is looking forward to his 25th Tiger reunion at Princeton this June. As for myself, approaching forty, I think life gets more interesting and possibly less hectic, even with a full-time job. We would love to see all of you --- perhaps next summer, if we come down.

With best regards,

Wini

Dear Sir:

I have just finished reading the copy of the November 1966 issue of the AMERICAN FEDERATIONIST, the A.F.L.-C.I.O. Publication which you sent to the Library of Calvin Presbyterian Church. I have found the material included in this issue most enlightening and instructive. My imagination has been stimulated by some of the practical efforts to face problems of negro employment, particularly by the article on "Making Apprenticeship Work". It seems to me that these ideas should be seminal for starting similar programs in many other areas.

I'd be very happy to have two or three additional copies of this publication to distribute to members of my congregation who should have the information and might act upon the ideas contained therein. I certainly thank you for including it so that we might have the benefit of it.

Sincerely yours,

John H. LaMotte

Dear Mr. Archie:

I have your thoughtful letter of December 28, 1966, in response to the November Federationist. Thanks so very much for taking the time to write.

The press of travel and program has kept me from answering sooner, and even this note is to let you know that I will be in touch with you further. Your letter deserves, and will receive, a fuller answer.

There are solid suggestions available as to what all of us can do to improve the employability and employment opportunities of the disadvantaged and I look forward to a further exchange with you regarding them.

Dear Mr. Via:

Thank you for providing me copies of the American Federationist November issue.

I sent these with copies of the enclosed excerpt of the Southern California Chapter of A.G.C. to 141 prime contractors in this region. Each contractor has a $1 million or more HUD Federally assisted project.

Both publications were sent to provide these contractors with information on the organized labor viewpoint as well as the viewpoint of a large group of organized contractors. It is expected that use of the information may have some effect in local affirmative actions.

Dear Mr. Pokorny:

My records do not show that I answered your thoughtful letter regarding the mailing of the Federationist for November. Thanks for your response and I will pass on your comments to the Civil Rights Department of the AFL-CIO.

Under separate cover I am sending you the current issue of The New South, and several other publications including the Continuing Crisis, "What Happened In The South, 1966", "School Desegregation, 1966: The Slow Undoing", and " A Home of Our Own". ~~The~~

The Council is a non-partisan, non-profit organization dedicated to the achievement of equal opportunity for all people in the South. The Council is literaly a Board of Directors of one hundred Southerners, bi-racial, from a variety of walks of life. We rely heavily on research and the strategic use of information. Our program is quite varied both in terms of substantive areas of interest and the techniques which we employ. Besides our research and information activities we have an extensive voter education program, a program in housing and planing, a self-help community organization project, a juvenile delinquency and criminal rehabilitation program, a women's work program, a labor project, and a field program which works cooperatively with the various State Councils on Human Relations.

Again, my thanks for your response to the mailings.

Dear Sir:

I received the copy of the American Federationist that you sent and found it very interesting. Two things bothered me in the articles that were in the magazine. First, the negative attitude taken toward the "black power" movement. I have been involved with civil rights work for the last three years, mostly with SNCC and its work in Mississippi. Thus, perhaps my sympathies go more with their thinking on black power. I regret many things SNCC has done, and think they are wrong in some of their attitudes, but on the whole I think what they are saying about black power is more significant than the writers in the American Federationist make it out to be. I would rather see Wilkins, Rustin, and Randolph for instance discuss what black power is saying, rather than have them pass it off as mere conservatism and negativism.

Second, I was disappointed to see nowhere in the magazine a mention of the fact that the goal of our society should be the institution of a guaranteed annual income. The writers all seem to be saying our goal is full employment which seems to be an old, and I think unrealistic goal. This line of thought runs counter to what many economists seem to be saying, Galbraith and those who worked on the Triple Revolution Report. It seems to me that labor should be leading the way in starting a national debate on the issue of a guaranteed income.

Both these responses on my part to the magazine are personal. I am a history and philosophy major at the University of Nebraska (junior) this year, and thus view much of what is happening around us in this light. To me then black power is very positive (or, rather, it has a great potential for being constructive, depending on the response it illicits from the white majority), and also a guaranteed annual income is our most important societal goal of the next decade. I don't know if my reactions to the magazine are helpful or not, but you asked for them.

I would like some help from you now. I only very recently heard of the activities of the Southern Regional Council, so am ignorant of its work. Can you inform me about it and what it does. I've gotten one issue of the New South, but that's all. Also could you send me a copy of the pamphlet referred to in the magazine you sent, The Continuing Crisis: An Assessment of New Racial Tensions in the South. Any other material you could send would be greatly appreciated. Thank you.

And thanks for sending the copy of the American Federationist. I enjoyed it.

Sincerely,

Gene Pokorny

Dear Mr. Via:

Quite some time ago you sent us a letter informing us that you were enclosing, (with this letter) a copy of the American Federationist. There was no copy enclosed, and I thought that maybe you had meant under separate cover. However, as I said that was at least a month ago, and I have yet to see the November '66 issue. As it is apparently devoted to civil rights issues, I am naturally anxious to obtain one for my files. We are starting a project on the American Negro here at the Library, could you send me this mysterious magazine.

Thank you.

Dear Mr. Via:

It was weeks ago -- perhaps months? -- that I received the copy of THE AMERICAN FEDERALIST for November, 1966.

You asked for any reactions. I thought it was a most informative and interesting periodical.

I turned my copy over to the Librarian at the Indian River Junior College, a four-county school located here in Fort Pierce. I shouldn't be surprised if this library would subscribe, if there are to be more issues of this nature.

If there are still copies of that issue available, I would be glad to see that three other libraries here get them: The St. Lucie-Okeechobee Regional Library, the Dan McCarty High School and Lincoln Park Academy Libraries.

Sincerely yours,

James M. Howard.

Back in the beginning of January we got a mimeographed sheet from you in which you were pleased to send us 'the enclosed copy of the American Federationist (November,1966)'. There was no enclosed copy'. I wrote on Feb. 7th to tell you this, but I assume that my letter got lost in the 'so called' postoffice. Could you please send us that November issue? I am very curious to see it as you say that the entire magazine is devoted to civil rights issues. As I am collecting for the Library on just this subject I am most interested.

Hoping to hear from you soon, and to receive my copy, I am,

RULES GOVERNING

AFL-CIO Local Central Bodies

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR & CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

AFL CIO

Issued by the AFL-CIO Executive Council Sept. 21, 1965, to amend the rules issued Feb. 14, 1956 as amended June 7, 1956.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
815 16th STREET N.W. • WASHINGTON, D.C.

GEORGE MEANY,
President

WM. F. SCHNITZLER,
Secretary-Treasurer

Publication No. 13
Revised October 1965

1. Status of Rules.

These rules are issued by the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations pursuant to the provisions of Article XIV of the Constitution of the AFL-CIO, and supersede the rules adopted on December 5, 1955 and the rules issued Feb. 14, 1956 as amended June 7, 1956. These rules and the Constitution of the AFL-CIO shall govern the conduct, activities, affairs, finances and property of all local central bodies of the AFL-CIO and provide the procedures for the discipline, including suspension and expulsion, of such bodies or their officers by the AFL-CIO. These rules may be amended at any time by the Executive Council of the AFL-CIO, subject only to the provisions of the AFL-CIO Constitution.

2. Definitions.

When used in these rules, the term "local union" shall include local lodges, local brotherhoods or other local units of affiliated national or international unions or organizing committees which, in such unions, perform the functions of local unions.

When used in these rules, the term "president," unless otherwise specified, shall mean the president of the AFL-CIO, and the term "secretary-treasurer," unless otherwise specified, shall mean the secretary-treasurer of the AFL-CIO.

3. Composition of Local Central Bodies.

(a) Local Central Bodies shall be composed exclusively of locals of national and international unions and organizing committees affiliated with the Federation, directly affiliated local unions and local councils chartered by the trade and industrial departments of the AFL-CIO. Joint boards, district councils and similar subordinate organizations within the geographical limits of the local central body which are duly chartered by an affiliate of the AFL-CIO may affiliate where the constitution of the local central body so provides. Any question that may arise with respect to the proper local central body or bodies to which local unions or other subordinate bodies are to affiliate or the extent of such affiliation shall be determined by the President of the AFL-CIO.

(b) It shall be the duty of all national and international unions and organizing committees affiliated with the AFL-CIO to instruct their local unions to join local central bodies in their vicinity where such exist. Similar instructions will be given by the AFL-CIO to all local unions affiliated directly with it.

(c) Women's auxiliaries may be admitted to fraternal affiliation, where the constitution of the local central body so provides, but without voice or vote. No fees shall be charged such affiliated auxiliaries.

4. Purposes of Local Central Bodies.

Local central bodies, as chartered organizations of the AFL-CIO, shall conform their activities on state matters to the policies of their respective state central bodies, and on national affairs to the policies of the AFL-CIO. The functions and responsibilities of local central bodies within their respective areas shall be:

(a) To assist in furthering the appropriate objects and policies of the AFL-CIO, or of organizations affiliated with the AFL-CIO (provided such objects or policies are not inconsistent with the objects or policies of the AFL-CIO).

(b) To serve as a means of exchanging information among affiliated bodies on matters of common interest.

(c) To provide aid, cooperation and assistance to affiliated local unions and other affiliated bodies in their common and individual endeavors.

(d) To propose, support and promote legislation favorable to and to oppose legislation detrimental to the interest of workers and organized labor.

(e) To encourage workers to register and vote, to exercise their full rights and responsibilities of citizenship, and to perform their rightful part in the political life of the local, state and national communities.

(f) To engage in such other activities as are consistent with the objects and principles set forth in the Constitution of the AFL-CIO and the policies of the AFL-CIO.

5. Charters.

Charters shall be issued to local central bodies by the President on behalf of the Executive Council. Such charters may be refused, revoked or suspended pursuant to the Constitution of the AFL-CIO and these rules. The rights conferred by a charter upon any local central body in respect to the name and territory of such body are revocable and the President may, for good cause shown, after notice and hearing, change such name and territory. Any charter that has been revoked, suspended or amended shall be surrendered to the President.

6. Annual Fees to AFL-CIO.

Each local central body shall pay to the AFL-CIO an annual fee of $20.00.

7. Membership.

(a) Local central bodies shall admit into membership, upon the payment of such membership fee as may be required by the constitution or bylaws of such body, all local unions directly affiliated to the AFL-CIO or affiliated with national or international unions and organizing committees affiliated with the AFL-CIO, and such other subordinate bodies as the Executive Council may determine are eligible for affiliation.

(b) No local central body shall admit or retain in membership any organization not affiliated with the AFL-CIO or with an affiliate of the AFL-CIO, or any organization that has been suspended or expelled by a parent body affiliated with the AFL-CIO or by the AFL-CIO.

(c) Any local central body shall have the power to suspend or expel any organization affiliated with it upon conviction, after charges, notice and hearing, of having engaged in conduct or a course of activity hostile or contrary to the best interests of the central body or contrary to its constitution or bylaws.

8. Constitutions and Bylaws.

Each local central body shall adopt a constitution and/or bylaws consistent with the Constitution of the AFL-CIO and with these rules. Such constitutions and bylaws, and any amendments thereto, shall be subject to approval by the President and two copies thereof shall be submitted to the President upon their adoption.

The President may, at any time, require any local central body to formally amend its constitution or bylaws in order to bring them into conformity with the provisions of these rules and of the Constitution of the AFL-CIO.

9. Delegate Meetings.

Local central bodies shall hold delegate meetings at least once a month. The President or his designee may, for good cause shown, permit exceptions to this rule. Each local central body shall report to the President the times and places of its regular meetings.

10. Representation and Voting.

(a) The constitution or bylaws of local central bodies shall provide, among other things, for the holding of meetings, the selection of delegates to such meetings, and the basis of representation therein. They shall provide for representation and voting procedures on a basis which will be equitable and which will assure the representative character of the local central body, and shall provide for a roll-call vote on any pending question, including elections, upon demand of a reasonable fixed percentage or number of delegates, which percentage or number shall not exceed thirty (30) percent of the delegates present. The number of votes to which a local union is entitled on roll-calls shall be equal to, or directly proportional to, the average membership of the local union as determined by the per capita tax payments to the central body for the preceding two calendar quarters, or such longer reasonable period as the central body's constitution may prescribe, but not to exceed the number of months between elections. The average membership of a local union affiliated for less than the prescribed period shall be computed from the month of affiliation and shall be determined by dividing the total per capita tax paid for all months affiliated by the number of months affiliated or by the number of months in the prescribed period whichever is greater. The votes of a local union shall be divided equally among all its accredited delegates present and each delegate shall be entitled to cast only his assigned number of votes, except that one delegate may be permitted to cast all the votes of the delegates representing his local union when such procedure is properly provided for in the local central body's constitution. Organizations other than local unions affiliated with the local central body shall be allotted one delegate and one vote for each such organization.

(b) A roll-call on elections may be conducted orally, or it may be conducted by written or printed ballots where deemed desirable to expedite the holding of the election, provided each ballot clearly shows the name, organization and number of votes of the delegate casting the ballot. Such ballots shall become part of the records of the central body and shall be preserved and available for examination by any delegate or officer of an affiliated organization for a period of not less than six months.

11. Delegates.

(a) No person shall be eligible to serve as a delegate to a local central body unless he is a member of a local union affiliated with such local central body or, if the constitution or bylaws of the central body so provides, unless he is a national or international union representative regularly servicing such a local union, nor shall any person be eligible to serve as a delegate who holds a salaried position, or any other position of administrative or executive authority, in a union or any subordinate branch of a union which has been suspended or expelled from the AFL-CIO.

(b) No local central body shall reject credentials presented by a duly elected or appointed delegate who is eligible to be a delegate under the provisions of paragraph (a) of this rule.

(c) Any delegate to a local central body may, upon conviction, after charge, notice and hearing, be expelled or suspended from such body for having engaged in conduct or a course of activity hostile or contrary to the best interests of the local central body or contrary to its constitution or bylaws.

12. Officers and Agents.

(a) The constitution or bylaws of each local central body shall provide for the election of officers, the filling of vacancies of office, the duties of officers and their terms of office, and shall set forth the requirements for eligibility for office.

(b) No individual shall be eligible to serve as an officer, member of the executive board or committee or other governing body of, or any other committee of, or as a delegate from, or as a representative, agent or employee of any local central body who is a member of the Communist Party, any fascist organization, or other totalitarian movement, or who consistently pursues policies and activities directed toward the achievement of the program or the purposes of the Communist Party, any fascist organization or other totalitarian movement.

(c) No person shall be eligible to serve in any of the capacities enumerated in paragraph (b) of this rule, who holds a salaried position or any other position of administrative or executive authority in a union, or any subordinate branch of a union, which has been suspended or expelled from the AFL-CIO.

13. Removal of Officers.

Any local central body, acting through its delegate body, may suspend or remove any officer or member of its executive board, executive committee or other governing body, on written charges, notice and hearing for violation of the Constitution of the AFL-CIO or these rules, or the constitution or bylaws of the local central body, or for conduct unbecoming an officer of the local central body, misappropriation of funds, malfeasance in office or neglect of duty. Appropriate provisions for such removal of officers shall be contained in the constitution or bylaws of the local central body.

14. Records and Reports.

Local central bodies shall keep such records and file such reports in such manner and at such times as may be required by the President by regulation or otherwise, and shall produce their books and records on demand of the President.

15. Revenue of Local Central Bodies.

The constitution or bylaws of each local central body shall prescribe the per capita tax and fees payable to such local central body and the penalties including suspension or expulsion for failure to pay such tax or fees. The fees of local unions shall be on a per capita basis and shall be uniformly applied to all local unions, with no maximum or minimum, and shall be based on the actual number of dues-paying members of such local unions. The fees of subordinate bodies other than local unions shall be fixed on a uniform basis, which shall not exceed $15.00 per year.

16. Expenditures.

The funds of a local central body shall be expended only pursuant to authorization by the procedures set forth in its constitution or bylaws. The funds shall be used only for legitimate expenditures in furtherance of the objectives of such body or of the AFL-CIO.

17. Financial Practices, Reports and Audits.

Local central bodies shall follow such financial practices and keep such records as will ensure that their funds and properties will be safeguarded and will be expended only for authorized purposes. The Secretary-Treasurer may require any local central body to amend its financial practices and procedures so as to come into conformity with the provisions of this rule. The Secretary-Treasurer may at any time require any local central body to submit financial reports, and may cause a full audit to be made of the books, records, funds, property or accounts of any local central body and may require the local central body to bear the expenses thereof.

18. Bonds.

All officers and agents of any local central body having a financial responsibility shall be covered by a fidelity bond. The Secretary-Treasurer may determine the amount in which such officers and agents shall be bonded and may require that additional bonds be secured at the expense of the local central body in a sum sufficient to protect the funds of the local central body. Upon the discovery of any irregularity or deficiency in the accounts or transactions of the local central body or any officer or agent thereof, the person making such discovery shall immediately report such irregularity or deficiency to the Secretary-Treasurer.

19. Organizing.

Local central bodies should lend all possible assistance to the organizing activities of local unions and their parent national or international unions or organizing committees affiliated with the AFL-CIO.

20. Strikes.

No local central body shall have the authority or power to order any local union or other organization to strike or to take a strike vote. This prohibition, however, shall not prevent such central body from giving proper assistance to such local union or such other organization with the approval of its parent body, so long as such assistance is not inconsistent with the objects, principles and policies of the AFL-CIO.

21. Collective Bargaining.

No local central body shall take part in any collective bargaining activities or in any labor dispute involving any affiliated local union except upon the request or consent of the national or international union or organizing committee with which such local union is affiliated or, in the case of local unions directly affiliated to the AFL-CIO, except upon the request or consent of the President.

22. Boycotts and Unfair Lists.

No local central body shall have power or authority to originate a boycott or to initiate action to place an employer on an "unfair" or "do not patronize" list. All such action shall be taken only on written request of the aggrieved union or in response to an action of the AFL-CIO.

When such action is requested by an aggrieved union, the central body shall be governed by the following regulations:

(a) Disputes affecting contractual interests of other unions—If the requested action is directed against an employer which has a contract or working agreement with any union or unions affiliated with the AFL-CIO, other than the aggrieved union, then the written consent of such other union or unions shall be required. If such consent is not given, no further action shall be taken by the central body, except as authorized by the President or by the Executive Council of the AFL-CIO.

(b) Local Disputes—If the requested action is directed against an employer for a dispute arising within the area of the local central body which does not involve the contractual interests of other AFL-CIO unions, the local central body may take the requested action if, in its judgment, such action is warranted.

(c) Disputes in areas of other central bodies—If the requested action is directed against an employer for a dispute arising wholly outside the area of the central body, no action shall be taken unless the local central body, or state central body, in whose area the dispute arose has first acted favorably on the request of the aggrieved union in keeping with applicable rules.

(d) National and regional disputes—If the requested action is directed against an employer for a dispute which is national or regional in scope, no action shall be taken by the central body unless the national or international union involved has first secured approval of the AFL-CIO.

23. Publications and Advertising.

Experience has demonstrated that irresponsible publishers of so-called labor papers, yearbooks and directories and/or unscrupulous solicitors of advertising have, on occasion, exploited the name and good reputation of the AFL-CIO to further their own selfish ends, and to the detriment of the best interests of organized labor. It should be clearly understood that labor publications should exist for the sole purpose of furthering the best interests of the labor movement, not as a source of additional revenue. Therefore, advertising should be accepted in labor publications only if it is necessary to the publications' existence. No local central body shall be associated with any publication except in conformity with this rule:

(a) Any publication, including newspapers, bulletins, yearbooks, directories, programs or any other form of publication owned, in whole or in part either directly or through a corporation, by a central body, or which is issued in the name of, or which is endorsed, authorized or given official approval by a central body, shall be required by the central body to conform to the provisions of this rule and to such ethical trade union standards as may be determined by the President by regulation or otherwise. The central body shall furnish to the responsible officer or manager of any such publication a copy of this rule and a copy of the ethical trade union standards as determined by the President of the AFL-CIO.

(b) No local central body shall authorize or permit any such publication to claim or imply by use of geographical or other terms in its name or title, or in any other way, that it is the publication of any other local central body or of a state central body unless the publication is also officially endorsed by such other local central body or the state central body, as the case may be.

(c) No local central body shall authorize or permit such publication to solicit local advertising (as distinguished from national advertising) outside the regular area of circulation of the publication, which area of circulation shall not include any part of the geographic jurisdiction of any other local central body without the written consent and approval of such other local central body.

(d) Any contract made by a local central body for the production of such publication shall incorporate this rule as an integral part of the contract.

24. Lists.

All lists of affiliates or members of affiliates in possession of the local central body shall be used exclusively in carrying out the authorized programs and work of the local central body and shall not be released to any person or organization for any other purpose unless such release has been duly authorized by the central body and the appropriate officers of the affiliate or affiliates involved. Officers of organizations affiliated with the local central body shall be entitled to access at the place where the records are kept and at reasonable times to full information concerning the names of delegates and the number of votes of each affiliated organization.

25. Discipline of Local Central Bodies and Their Officers by the AFL-CIO.

(a) The President is authorized to take disciplinary action against local central bodies, including the authority to suspend or expel any officer thereof, and to suspend such organizations or revoke their charters. Such disciplinary action may be taken against any such organization or officer, when such organization or officer violates or fails to comply with any of the provisions of the Constitution of the AFL-CIO or of these rules, or engages in any activity or course of conduct which is contrary or detrimental to the welfare or the best interests of the AFL-CIO, or when any such organization fails to conform its policies to the policies of the AFL-CIO.

(b) In any case where disciplinary action is taken under this rule the organization or any officer charged shall first be given reasonable notice of the nature of the charges and shall be afforded a full hearing either by the President or by a person or persons delegated by the President to act for him as a Hearing Officer or Officers. In the latter event, such Hearing Officer or Officers shall, as soon as practicable after the close of the hearing, make a report, either oral or in writing, to the President who shall make the ultimate decision. The decision of the President shall be in full force and effect unless or until reversed or changed upon appeal as provided in paragraph (g) of this rule.

(c) In cases of emergency, where the interests of the AFL-CIO reasonably require such action, the President is empowered to suspend any officer and establish a trusteeship over the property of local central bodies prior to the hearing provided for in paragraph (b) of this rule. In such case, the hearing shall be conducted as soon as practicable after such emergency action, but in no event later than 45 days following such action, unless a postponement of such hearing is granted by the President upon proper request.

(d) In any case where a local central body has been suspended under the provisions of this rule, the President shall have the power to assume charge of the affairs and business of such suspended body, suspend any or all of the officers thereof, appoint temporary officers under the supervision of a trustee, and to appoint a trustee for the purpose of taking charge of and conducting the business of such local central body during the period of suspension. Such trustee shall have the right, in the name of the AFL-CIO, upon demand, to all of the funds, properties, books and assets of the suspended body for the period he is in charge of such body, such funds and properties to be held in trust for the benefit of the suspended body and to be expended only to the extent necessary for the proper conduct of the affairs of the suspended body. A trustee appointed under this rule may be removed with or without cause by the President at any time and a successor trustee appointed.

(e) Wherever the charter or certificate of affiliation of a local central body shall have been revoked or suspended, all funds, properties, books and assets of such local central body shall become the property of the AFL-CIO and shall, upon demand, be turned over to a duly authorized representative of the President, and the AFL-CIO shall have the right to immediate possession of all such funds, properties, books and assets in trust until such time as the organization whose charter or certificate of affiliation has been suspended or revoked may be reorganized and be able to confine its activities and actions to conform with the Constitution and the laws of the AFL-CIO.

(f) Whenever a demand has been made under this rule or the Constitution of the AFL-CIO for the funds, properties, books and assets of any local central body, and such demand is refused, then all expenses of whatever nature incurred by the AFL-CIO in recovering such funds, properties, books and assets shall be a lawful charge upon the property and funds involved and, on recovery thereof, the AFL-CIO shall reimburse itself from the funds and property recovered.

(g) Any disciplinary action taken by the President under this rule may be appealed by the individual or organization involved to the Executive Council of the AFL-CIO. Any such appeal shall be filed in writing with the Secretary-Treasurer within 30 days after notice of the disciplinary action being appealed. Appellants shall have the right to appear before the Executive Council in support of their appeal. The decision of the Executive Council on any appeal taken pursuant to this paragraph may be further appealed to the next succeeding convention of the AFL-CIO. Such further appeal shall be filed in writing with the Secretary-Treasurer at least 30 days prior to the opening of the convention. An appellant shall have the right to appear before any appeals committee of the convention and, except in the case of an individual appellant, shall have the right to appear before the convention itself. An individual appellant shall have the right to appear personally before the convention itself only with the consent of the convention.

26. Exhaustion of Remedies.

No organization or individual subject to these rules shall resort to any court until all relief within the AFL-CIO as provided for within these rules and the Constitution of the AFL-CIO is exhausted.

27. Appeals.

Any final decision of a local central body in a matter requiring a hearing within the central body under these rules may be appealed to the President within 30 days after the decision appealed from. The decision of the President may thereafter be appealed to the Executive Council. Any such appeal shall be filed in writing with the Secretary-Treasurer within 30 days after notice of the action being appealed. Appellants shall have the right to appear before the Executive Council in support of their appeal. The decision of the Executive Council may be further appealed to the next succeeding convention of the AFL-CIO. Such further appeal shall be filed in writing with the Secretary-Treasurer at least 30 days prior to the opening of the convention. The appellant shall have the right to appear before any appeals committee of the convention and, except in the case of an individual appellant, shall have the right to appear before the convention itself. An individual appellant shall have the right to appear personally before the convention itself only with the consent of the convention. During any such appeal the original decision of the local central body, or of the President, or of the Executive Council, as the case may be, shall remain in effect unless reversed, modified or temporarily stayed.

28. Dissolution.

A local central body may dissolve only with the approval of the President. Upon such dissolution, all funds, properties, books and assets of such body shall revert to the AFL-CIO and shall, upon demand, be turned over to a duly authorized representative of the President. The AFL-CIO will hold all such funds, properties, books and assets in trust until such time that the local central body involved can be reorganized or reconstituted in conformity with the Constitution and laws of the AFL-CIO.

Dear Mr. Barkan:

C.O.P.E. recently sent us twenty-five copies of a "Step-by-Step Plan" for registration and voting campaigns. Our Voter Education Project could make excellent use of 500 copies of this publication.

It would be a real help if these could be sent without charge. They will serve a variety of good purposes.

Dear Dan:

We do not have breakdowns by precincts for the Alabama vote. Al Kehrer said you would be interested in having them. I am sending you the county and the Montgomery precinct breakdowns. I am still hoping we will get further reports; if so, I'll share them with you.

Somewhere along the line I received a favorable report on a manual which you used in Memphis either for political education purposes or for registration and voting. Does this ring a bell with you? If so, could you share a copy with me?

Sincerely,

Dear Emory:

Thanks very much for the precinct returns on Montgomery and Montgomery County.

I believe the manual you referred to was one we used in the three-day COPE schools which we held in Tennessee in 1957 or 1958. While this manual is probably badly out-of-date now, if you want it, I will see if I can find a copy in the files. However, I am leaving within the hour on a one week trip to North Carolina, so the search for the manual will have to wait until I return to the office.

As always, it was very good to see and talk with you again at the ILGWU conference.

With kindest personal regards,

Sincerely and fraternally,

Dan

General Register and Vote Campaign Activities — Section V 21

INTRODUCTION

A number of AFL-CIO unions have done an excellent job in stimulating the political awareness of their members on issues and the importance of registering and voting. Due to the basic structure of unions, such efforts have in the main been conducted on the job site (plants, shops, offices, stores, etc.) and at union meetings. These efforts must be continued and strengthened.

This Manual, however, is primarily concerned with activity at another level — the community level. It has often been said that elections are won or lost in the precincts. It is also true that most people register in the precinct or at least make their decision in the precinct to register or not, and to vote or not.

If the Labor Movement is to reach the majority of Americans — even a majority of Americans who work for a living — it must do so where they live. The overwhelming majority of the 37 million adults who did not vote in the 1960 Presidential election, including the 22½ million who failed even to register, are the natural allies and friends of the Labor Movement. A good percentage are our members and their families.

This Manual offers a flexible plan whereby AFL-CIO unions operating through AFL-CIO Central Labor Bodies may reach our natural allies and friends, members and their families, in the communities in which they live in the hope of getting them to register and to vote.

Historically, the number of citizens who register and the number who vote decreases drastically in the so-called off-year (non-Presidential) elections. 1962 is such a year. Our best hope of offsetting this traditional fall-off in voter participation is solid organization at the community level.

The sections in the Manual on Organization (Section I), Recruitment (Section II), A Check List for Organizers (Section III), and General Campaign Activities (Section V) are designed for use in Get Out the Vote Campaigns as well as Voter Registration Drives. Consequently, these sections will still be useful in those areas where the Voter Registration Drive is over or about to be concluded. Only Section IV, A Guide for Precinct Registration Workers, is designed exclusively for the registration campaign.

ATTENTION:

AFL-CIO CENTRAL LABOR BODIES

Your attention is called at the very outset to four general recommendations which can most effectively be implemented by the AFL-CIO Central Labor Body and the City-Wide AFL-CIO Register and Vote Committee. They are as follows:

URGE PUBLIC OFFICIALS TO EXPAND AND IMPROVE REGISTRATION OPPORTUNITIES:

One of the first steps your Registration Committee should take is an evaluation of registration procedures in your area. Failure to register is generally not an indication of a lack of interest in voting. It is in many cities a result of inconvenience of hours and location of the place of registration. In most big cities the only place you can register is at City Hall or Board of Elections between 9:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. This makes it very difficult for most working people to register.

Since both parties are calling for the greatest possible turnout of voters, you should urge your city or county election officials to approve the following:

A. Extension of the number of days registration will be held in the precincts as well as the hours in the day precinct registration places will be open.

B. Temporary expansion of the number of neighborhood registration places to include schools, fire and police stations, and libraries.

C. Appointment of "Roving Registrars" who can register citizens in their homes, door to door.

D. Approval of a plan to move registrars from neighborhood to neighborhood in mobile trailers, where other facilities are lacking.

E. Sending deputized registrars to plant gates; offices; hospitals; fraternal, church, and union meetings; picnics; county and state fairs; shopping centers; or any other place where there will be large numbers of people.

TIME YOUR DRIVE PROPERLY:

Like any other campaign, your registration drive must be properly timed. Your committee should work out a registration campaign schedule so that the main effort is concentrated during the period when the special and expanded neighborhood registration facilities are in operation.

When the registration drive is over, the emphasis — organizationally and operationally—should be shifted immediately to the Get Out the Vote Campaign.

CONCENTRATE YOUR REGISTER AND VOTE DRIVE IN KEY WARDS:

Get precinct and ward maps showing street boundaries. Mark the wards and precincts where the highest percentage of workers and unregistered voters live. Concentrate your main register and vote efforts in these wards and precincts on a door-to-door basis.

RECOGNIZE WOMEN AND MINORITY GROUPS:

It is imperative that women and minority groups be encouraged to participate fully in the Register and Vote Campaign. They should be an integral part of this effort and represented at the various levels of the campaign's organizational structure. In the case of women, make certain existing women's committees, auxiliaries, and divisions are fully utilized.

SECTION 1

ORGANIZATION

The smooth and efficient operation of any large endeavor depends to a great degree upon how well it is organized and how sensibly it is structured. We, in the Labor Movement, have learned this truth the hard way. Yet, in the field of political education we do not always apply this lesson.

The political process of canvassing voters, registering the unregistered, and getting out the vote remains fundamentally an operation most successfully conducted at the community and neighborhood level. Therefore, Labor's Register and Vote Campaigns, to be truly effective, must be organizationally structured so as to be functional at the ward and precinct level.

Set forth below is a suggested organizational structure for a community register and vote campaign flexible enough to be adapted to local conditions:

STEP 1

The Central Labor Body Should Establish A City or County-wide AFL-CIO COPE Register and Vote Committee

Composition: This top committee should include representatives designated by AFL-CIO unions within the city or county as well as the officers of the central labor body. Where an existing city or county COPE is directly charged with the conduct of the register and vote campaign, it should be enlarged to include such representation. If desirable, a smaller and more functional steering committee could then be selected from the broader group.

Major Sub-Committees: Appropriate sub-committees headed by experienced people should be appointed to plan and handle such essential over-all features of the Register and Vote Campaign as:

Publicity and Literature
Recruitment of Volunteer Workers
A Speakers' Bureau
Organization at the Community and Precinct Level
Finances and Fund Raising
Transportation
Telephone Crew

Personnel: A full-time person should be appointed to direct and coordinate the over-all Register and Vote Campaign. Because of budgetary considerations as well as the need for selecting an experienced person, the central labor body or international unions in the area should be contacted in the hope of obtaining the release of a qualified staff member to serve as Campaign Director. Sufficient clerical help should be made available to help insure an efficient operation.

Headquarters: A central headquarters with sufficient space should be maintained from which the Register and Vote Campaign may be properly conducted and coordinated. If the central labor body has adequate space and facilities available, the Campaign headquarters should be located in its offices.

STEP 2

The Now-Established City or County COPE Register and Vote Committee Should Set Up a Cope Register and Vote Committee In Each Congressional District, Ward, or Township Within Its Jurisdiction

Selection of Congressional District, Ward, or Township Leadership: In each district, ward, or township a chairman or co-chairmen should be appointed and a steering committee selected. This should be done in consultation with leaders of international unions within the area with the view of obtaining staff members or other key personnel who might be released or assigned full or part-time to help organize the district or ward register and vote campaign.

In any event, unions with membership in the district, ward, or township should be entitled to designate an official representative to serve on the steering committee.

Where Congressional District Structure Is Used: In cities or counties where the Register and Vote Campaign is organized and structured on a congressional district basis, the district steering committee should divide the congressional district into smaller organizational units such as wards or in the case of suburban areas into townships. In such cases, the district steering committee should appoint the ward or township chairmen.

The ward or township chairmen should be selected from the district steering committee. Those not selected from the steering committee should be added to it.

The Ward or Township Organization: The chairman and steering committee of the ward or township unit should have the responsibility of organizing and conducting the Register and Vote Campaign within the unit's jurisdiction subject to the general supervision of the county, city, or congressional district steering committee.

The ward or township should be divided into smaller compact areas consisting of from six to ten precincts and a leader appointed over each such area. These area leaders should be selected from the steering committee members. Where only the ward or township chairman has been appointed and no steering committee exists, the chairman should select the area leaders who would then comprise the nucleus of the ward or township steering committee.

The Area Organization: The area leader should be responsible for the organization and conduct of register and vote activities within his assigned area. This would include the recruitment, appointment, and supervision of precinct leaders in the six to ten precincts assigned to him, subject to the approval of the ward or township chairman. The area leader together with his precinct leaders would comprise the area organization.

The Precinct Organization: The precinct leader is the key to the success of the entire register and vote campaign. It is he who will locate, contact, and get to register the unregistered voter and get him out to vote. He should attempt to enlist additional volunteers to assist him and should be responsible for the conduct of register and vote activities within his precinct. The precinct leader together with any other volunteer workers in his precinct would comprise the precinct organization.

Register and Vote Headquarters in the Community: Where the Register and Vote Campaign is organized on a congressional district basis, a centrally located headquarters should be set up and maintained within the congressional district.

Where ward or township units have been established, unions with headquarters in these areas should be urged to make office and meeting space available for the operation of ward and township units.

Special Committees — Special Assignments: Certain essential functions should be planned and coordinated at the congressional district, ward, or township level. The appropriate steering committee should appoint special committees or assign individuals to organize and handle such specific operations as:

Recruitment of Volunteers
Publicity and Literature
Relations with Community Groups
Transportation
Speakers Bureau
Telephone Crews
Baby Sitting Sound Truck

THE OPERATIONS LISTED ABOVE SHOULD BE PLANNED AND COORDINATED WITH THE CITY OR COUNTY COPE REGISTER AND VOTE COMMITTEE AND FOR THE ULTIMATE OBJECTIVE OF ASSISTING THE PRECINCT LEADER IN REGISTERING THE UNREGISTERED CITIZENS IN HIS PRECINCT AND GETTING THEM OUT TO VOTE.

SECTION 2

RECRUITMENT

The success of the Register and Vote Campaign will be determined by the number of precinct workers recruited. This is why the AFL-CIO has issued a nation-wide call for 100,000 volunteer workers to join the AFL-CIO Register and Vote Corps.

Maximum use should be made of the AFL-CIO Volunteer Worker's Card. The card, illustrated below, can be duplicated locally and distributed in quantity.

REMEMBER! The AFL-CIO Register and Vote Corps is not confined to Union Members. Wives, husbands, sisters, brothers, fathers, and mothers should be urged to volunteer. A special effort should be made to recruit retired workers and the unemployed.

STEP 1

RECRUITMENT AT THE CITY OR COUNTY LEVEL

What the Central Labor Body, City, or County COPE Register and Vote Committee should do:

- Have printed or mimeographed in sufficient quantity the Volunteer Worker's Card.

- Send a letter to all delegates to the Central Labor Body urging them to join the AFL-CIO Volunteer Register and Vote Corps. Enclose in the mailing the Volunteer Worker's Card and a business reply envelope, or fold-over card.

- Prepare a sample Volunteer Recruitment Leaflet suitable for reproduction and plant distribution which would include a copy of the Volunteer Worker's Card or to which the card could be attached.

• Send a letter to all Affiliated Locals and International Unions in the area urging them to order or reproduce the Volunteer Worker's Card and Recruitment Leaflet for recruiting volunteer workers at:

(a) local executive board meetings
(b) steward and committee meetings
(c) membership meetings and by:

(c) selected mailings to key members, retirees, and laid-off workers
(b) plant gate distribution

• Members of the City or County COPE Register and Vote Committee should follow through on recruitment within their respective unions and should always have a supply of Volunteer Cards to sign up members at union meetings and functions they attend.

• When Volunteer Worker's Cards are returned to the AFL-CIO city-wide central register and vote headquarters, the information on the cards should be recorded or the cards duplicated and the original card immediately forwarded to the appropriate congressional district, ward, or township registration committee with instructions to immediately contact and assign the volunteer worker.

RECRUITMENT AT THE CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT, WARD, AREA, AND PRECINCT LEVEL

Each congressional district or ward register and vote committee should plan and conduct a drive to recruit volunteer workers among union members living within its jurisdiction. This activity should be coordinated by the special committee on volunteer recruitment. Listed below are some suggestions which could be followed in the recruitment of volunteer workers:

• An ample supply of Volunteer Worker's Cards should always be on hand in all register and vote headquarters and available at all meetings.

• The subject of volunteer recruitment should be included on the agenda of each meeting and the drive to recruit volunteer workers conducted at all structural levels of the organization as indicated below:

(a) The Congressional District Level: Each member of the congressional district steering committee should assume the major responsibility for launching a recruitment drive among members of his own local and international union known to reside within the congressional district or ward. Membership lists previously submitted by cooperating unions should be broken down by ward (township), area and precinct and the names and addresses submitted to the appropriate ward, area and precinct unit for recruitment purposes.

(b) The Ward Level: The leadership of the ward organization should be specifically charged with the responsibility of recruiting volunteer workers among union members living within the ward. They should work from the ward membership lists concentrating on those areas of the ward where few or no members have volunteered as precinct workers.

(c) The Area Level: Each area leader has the responsibility of recruiting and assigning precinct leaders and workers for every precinct under his jurisdiction. This is his first task. As he recruits and assigns precinct leaders, the area leader should in turn enlist their aid in recruiting volunteer workers in the uncovered precincts.

(d) The Precinct Level: The precinct leader, during the course of his door-to-door canvassing, should make an all-out effort to recruit additional volunteers to assist him. Whether such new volunteers agree to handle a block, a part of a block, or only a building, this additional help would lighten the load of the precinct leader and help assure a more complete registration and "get out the vote" effort in the precinct. Where available, the precinct leader should be provided with a list of union members living within his precinct.

• A special effort should be made to enlist the aid of unions with offices and/or membership in the district or ward (township) as outlined in paragraph I on page 11.

• Those who have signed the Volunteer Worker's Card should be requested to recruit additional volunteers in their respective local unions and in their neighborhoods.

• A selected mailing based on a geographical division of the district or ward could be sent out from membership lists previously obtained from cooperating unions. Such a mailing should include the Volunteer Worker's Card and an announcement and invitation to attend the next meeting of precinct workers.

• If feasible, a sign could be displayed in the headquarters visible from the street with such wording as:

UNION MEMBERS VOLUNTEER HERE
AFL-CIO REGISTER AND VOTE CORPS

SECTION 4

A GUIDE FOR THE AFL-CIO VOLUNTEER PRECINCT REGISTRATION WORKER

So, you have volunteered to work on registration in your precinct. Congratulations!

You are now the most valuable cog in the entire AFL-CIO Voter Registration Drive — the key to a successful registration campaign. But what is even more important, you are about to help your neighbors place themselves in a position where they may exercise perhaps the most vital of all their citizenship rights — the right to vote!

In the 1960 Presidential election, over 37 million adult Americans did not vote and over 22½ million failed even to register. It should be a source of personal satisfaction to know that you are reducing this tragic number of ineffective citizens among your friends and neighbors. It should also be a comfort to know that thousands of your AFL-CIO sisters and brothers are doing the same thing in precincts across the nation.

EXACTLY WHAT DOES A PRECINCT REGISTRATION WORKER DO?

Your job as a precinct registration worker can best be explained by reducing your operation into its two essential parts:

1. You locate the persons in your precinct who are not registered voters.
2. You, then, get them to register at the place of registration.

You do this in a well-planned and organized way. Of course, this does not tell the whole story, but it does reduce to its essentials the nature of your task. We will later deal with these essential functions in detail.

INFORMATION AND MATERIAL IMPORTANT TO YOUR JOB

- Precinct Boundaries: You should know the actual physical boundaries of your precinct. Most cities issue ward precinct maps which show the street boundaries for each precinct within a given ward. Your ward or area registration leader should have such a map. If not, you can obtain one in most cases from the office of the city or county election officials.
- Legal Requirements: The offices of city and county election officials publish folders setting forth the legal requirements for voter registration such as age, citizenship, length of residence in the state, county, and precinct, etc. This is information you should know. For ready reference, you should have this folder with you while canvassing your precinct.
- When and Where to Register: In order to properly inform the unregistered voter, you must know:

  A. Where he may register during the period you talk to him — the exact address, room or office;

  B. The days in the week he may register at that location;

  C. The hours he may register during each day.

You must also know when and where registration will be held in the precinct or other place(s) in the community as well as the final day of registration, the hours, and the location.

• Precinct Register of Voters and Union Membership Lists: Many cities publish a list of registered voters in each precinct of every ward within the city. Make sure you obtain the precinct list of registered voters for your precinct where such lists are available. As will be explained later, no other item will be more valuable to you.

In a number of cities, unions have made available their membership lists for registration purposes. Make sure you are given the names and addresses of union members from these lists who live in your precinct. This is important whether the lists are broken down into registered and unregistered members or not.

NOTE: IF NO LIST OF ANY KIND IS AVAILABLE, YOU CAN STILL DO AN EFFECTIVE REGISTRATION JOB BY THE SAME PROCESS OF DOOR-TO-DOOR CANVASSING (EXPLAINED LATER).

• Change of Address Cards: Many registered voters who move to a new address within the same city or town often fail to notify election officials of their change of address. This failure prevents them from voting in subsequent elections. Election officials in most cities and counties issue "Change of Address Cards" which, when properly filled out and mailed to their offices, will continue the voter's registration at his new address. You should obtain a supply of these cards and always have some on hand when canvassing your precinct.

LOCATING UNREGISTERED VOTERS

There are tricks, or more accurately, techniques to every trade. This is true in canvassing your precinct for registration or any other purpose. Precinct canvassing is simply a systematic process of visiting each home in a precinct for a specific and predetermined purpose. Certain things are particularly important to remember such as your appearance, approach, attitude, etc. However, before dealing with these matters, let us first discuss how you will proceed when canvassing from a precinct list of registered voters and then how to proceed where no such list is available.

• Canvassing from the Precinct Register of Voters: While there may be a small percentage of omission errors in the precinct register of voters, it is safe to work from the premise that persons living in the precinct whose names do not appear on the precinct register are, in fact, not registered from that address.

There are four main advantages in canvassing from a precinct register of voters:

1. You can ask for the registered voter by name.
2. You can thus locate through a registered voter the names of other adults in the household who are not registered.
3. You can show every name listed or not listed at that address on the precinct register.
4. In apartment buildings or other multiple dwelling units, you can check the names appearing on mail boxes or name-plates against the precinct register of voters in further locating unregistered persons.

• Canvassing Without a Precinct Register of Voters: If there is no list of registered voters available for your precinct, you must canvass door-to-door without the benefit of knowing in advance who is registered. You must therefore:

1. Inquire of all persons visited whether or not they are registered voters.
2. At each address visited, first check and record the names appearing on mail boxes or door bells. You may then ask for them by name and after the visit make a notation as to whether or not they are registered voters.
3. Make certain — once having made contact in a house — you find out what other adults live in the household and whether or not they are registered. Be sure to record this information also.

By following the steps outlined above, you will have done two significant things:

A. Located by name and address those persons who are not registered in your precinct; and

B. Compiled your own precinct list of registered voters.

NOTE: At the same time you discover or locate an unregistered person, you will, of course, urge him to register. How this should be done will be discussed later.

RECRUITING OTHER VOLUNTEERS

In canvassing your precinct, you should constantly be on the lookout for persons who may agree to assist you. They may or may not be union members. Accept whatever assistance they are willing to give. Whether they agree to handle a block, a part of a block, or only their apartment building, this additional help will save you time and lighten your load.

APPEARANCE AND ATTITUDE

The first impression you create is of paramount importance. You don't have the time to erase a bad impression, and a good impression will ease your task considerably. Your appearance should be neat and clean, and your attitude friendly and cooperative. When talking to an unregistered person, don't treat him as though he were a criminal. Most people who fail to register are not hostile to the idea. They simply "intended to" or "haven't got around to it" or "didn't think it made much difference." Such excuses and attitudes are not serious obstacles. Your friendly offer of information, service, and your follow-through will usually suffice to get such persons to register.

GETTING DOWN TO BUSINESS—THAT FIRST VISIT

You force yourself up from the dinner table, look longingly at the television set, and more longingly at the easy chair. Well, there's no use putting it off any longer — less than three weeks to the final day of registration and a whole precinct to cover. You check to see that you have everything you need — precinct list of registered voters, change of address cards, registration leaflets, list of union members in the precinct, notebook and pencil. The wife says you look just fine. She flashes you a smile that should register everybody in the precinct . . . too bad you can't bottle it.

Having already decided how to work the precinct, you head for the corner apartment building on Oak Street. The precinct register of voters shows among other names a Walter Davis and Mary Davis at that address. Better check the name-plates on the door to make sure. There they are — Mr. and Mrs. Walter Davis. May as well try them first. You ring the bell — a woman answers. With a smile, you say:

"Good evening, Mrs. Mary Davis?"

"Yes."

"Mrs. Davis, my name is George Stone. I live over on Maple Street and am a volunteer working with the citizens group in our community on voter registration."

"Oh, I'm already registered."

"Yes, I know you are, Mrs. Davis. Your name is on the precinct list of registered voters as is Mr. Davis'. I was wondering if there might be any other persons in your household eligible to register?"

"Eligible?"

"I mean twenty-one years of age or older, a citizen — things like that."

"Oh! I nearly forgot — my twin sons just turned twenty-one. They can vote now, can't they?"

"They certainly can — that is, if they register. Do they know where to go?"

"Downtown, don't they?"

Here is your opportunity to give explicit information and offer other services. You might ask to speak to the twins for a moment. Since registration day in the precinct is nearly three weeks away, you suggest they go downtown to the office of the city election officials. If you or the registration campaign committee provide transportation on certain days, you would offer this service. If precinct registration day were only a few days off, you would suggest they register in the precinct on that day — giving all the details.

After making sure no other adults live in the household, you thank the Davis family for their time, leave the registration information, and proceed to your next visit. However, before ringing that next door bell, you record the names and addresses of the twins as your list of unregistered voters takes form and begins to grow.

THE FOLLOW-UP

You should regularly turn in to the Registration Campaign Headquarters the names and addresses of the unregistered voters you have located. Make sure you arrange for transportation, baby-sitting or other services you may have promised. Mail immediately any change of address cards you may have had filled out.

As the final day for registration approaches, be sure to again remind those who have not as yet registered and offer once more whatever services you are able to provide. Whenever you can get phone numbers, be sure to do so. A follow-up phone call can save you considerable time. However, on the final day of registration, you should attempt to visit every person on your list who still remains unregistered. This will be your last chance and his too!

WHEN THE NEW PRECINCT LIST OF REGISTERED VOTERS IS PUBLISHED PRIOR TO ELECTION DAY AND YOU SEE THE NAMES OF PERSONS YOU HELPED ADD TO THE VOTERS' LIST, YOU'LL KNOW IT WAS WORTH EVERY BIT OF THE EFFORT AND TIME YOU SO GENEROUSLY GAVE.

GENERAL REGISTER AND VOTE CAMPAIGN ACTIVITIES

While there is no substitute in a Register and Vote Campaign for door-to-door canvassing, there are a number of important campaign activities which can generate the kind of climate and community awareness essential to an all-out register and vote effort. The key is continuous and imaginative publicity. The more times and the more ways people are reminded to register and vote the more likely they are to do so.

Listed below are some of the activities and operations which have helped generate this favorable climate and public awareness in past Register and Vote Campaigns:

1. CONTACT RADIO AND TV STATIONS to give free time for

- special five or ten minute talks by prominent civic leaders about the importance of registration and of voting.
- short dramatic skits, live or recorded, stressing the need to register and vote.
- spot announcements urging registration and giving dates, places, and times for registration. (Also give phone number of the committee which can arrange for transportation when needed.)
- registration and voting information in regular news broadcasts and news commentaries.

2. CONTACT NEWSPAPERS (DAILY AND WEEKLY) to give free space for

- an "only X more days to register" box, preferably on the front page, every day for the duration of the registration drive. The same can be applied to "only X more days to election day" for the duration of the Get Out the Vote Drive.

- "Register and Vote" cut-off slugs at end of stories, columns, editorials, etc., instead of regular rules.
- editorials and cartoons on the "register so you can vote" theme.
- news stories about the register and vote drive. These can be varied indefinitely, for instance: stories about prominent women taking part in the registration drive on the women's page; naturalized citizens registering; 21-year olds registering to vote for the first time; oldsters reminiscing about events and issues that were important the first time they voted; feature reports on the register and vote office and its work; etc.
- ads giving registration and voting information and urging people to register and vote.

3. CONTACT BUSINESS, ADVERTISING AGENCIES to give their cooperation as follows:

- inclusion of register and vote slogans in newspaper ads or sponsoring of ads exclusively devoted to registration and voting.
- register and vote announcements in radio and TV advertising.
- donation of space in streetcars, buses, and on billboards for register and vote messages.
- window displays in stores. (Run a contest for the best window display on registration and voting.)

4. PUT UP YOUR REGISTER AND VOTE POSTERS

- in department stores, retail shops, banks, public transportation carriers, theater lobbies and elevators of office and apartment buildings, barber shops, beauty parlors and restaurants.
- on bulletin boards in libraries, recreation centers, churches, clubs, unions, factories, colleges, and meeting halls.

5. THEATERS

- contact movie theater managers about running "Register and Vote" slides between films during the campaign period.

6. CONTACT THE CLERGY

- ask the clergy about mentioning registration and voting in their announcements and bulletins.

7. CONTACT ORGANIZATIONS

- get every organization you can to feature registration and vote announcements. Also ask them to carry "Register and Vote" announcements or ads in their bulletins and special mailings.

8. PREPARE HANDBILLS

Print a simple, attractive flyer or handbill with registration and voting information in sufficient quantities for distribution:

- door-to-door
- as inserts with organization mailings
- on store counters
- as bill inserts by stores and by gas, light, and water companies
- at street corners, in front of factories and schools.

9. PRINT STAMPS

Print "Register and Vote" stamps and urge organizations and businesses to stick them on all their mailing envelopes. "Register and Vote" slugs are available for mailing on stamp meter machines which automatically stamp every envelope "Register And Vote."

10. PLAN SPECIAL EVENTS

Schedule special events and see that these get good advance publicity and newspaper and radio coverage. Such special events could include:

- an opening ceremony of your register and vote drive, kicked off at city hall or state capitol by the mayor or governor, heads of your committee, and other prominent citizens. Have the mayor or governor issue a proclamation designating the special registration period as "Registration Weeks."
- register and vote parades with banners, sound trucks, pretty girls, etc. The parade should include veterans' organizations, detachments from different schools, detachments of the various professions such as teachers, clergy, lawyers, businessmen, labor organizations, etc.

11. ISSUE BUTTONS OR RIBBONS

"I Have Registered" buttons. You will find firms making campaign buttons listed in your yellow classified telephone directory. Make up buttons with an inscription such as "I Have Registered — I Will Vote." Distribute them at registration offices and urge people to wear them. Give the first button to the governor or mayor or some other newsworthy person. See that people wear your buttons on all publicity pictures. If you cannot get buttons you might want to use a ribbon or good stock paper and make up a small streamer with some slogan printed on it which could be pinned on your lapel.

12. ORDER DOOR-KNOB HANGERS

These are similar to the card that the telegraph company uses to notify you of a telegram delivery when you are not at home. Your door-knob hanger should have printed on it the facts about registration and voting, especially when and where to register and vote. Or, you can dress up your door-knob hanger with some catchy slogan.

PUT YOUR PLANS INTO ACTION: This pamphlet includes some suggestions that have worked in many areas. You have many good plans and ideas based on your own experiences. Select the ideas you feel will be the most helpful and workable in your area — THEN PUT YOUR PLAN INTO ACTION.

In many areas of the country less than half of the eligible people are qualified to vote. This must be corrected, and to correct it all good citizens should assist in the implementation of a register and vote campaign.

The AFL-CIO asks the cooperation of all citizens in a non-partisan register and vote campaign so that all citizens in name can be citizens in fact by exercising their right of franchise and rendering their decision at the polls on election day.

Dear Hoagy:

Almost a year ago you initiated the project of sending SRC materials to CWA staff working in the South. We said then that we would take a look after a year and reconsider whether it was useful. As for me, I think there is value in such materials going to the staff and let them pick out what they want. But I am more than willing, indeed quite interested to get some evaluation from the recipients.

Enclosed is a proposed simple questionnaire. I would be happy for it to go from us or from you. And, of course, would be pleased if you decided to change it around and do your own thing.

We added South Today when it appeared as a monthly without further change. If you continue with sending the publications I think it highly advisable to include South Today, but I would need to add $2.00 to the subscription service (still subsidized by the Labor Program to a degree). The totale per head cost for another year would be $7.00.

I am delighted that you saw fit to engage in this small venture. Let me know what you think about sending out the evaluation. Would you want the respondents to identify themselves?

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via

Dear Emory:

My thought was that we ought to put the folks the second year on their own as to whether they want to renew their subscription to the Council material or not. An evaluation would be a good idea if you want.

I am not sure this answers all the questions you raised, but this is the general feelings I had.

I think the questionnaire is very good.

Give me a ring when you get a chance.

March 25, 1969

TO: CWA Staff in Southern and Border States

Hoagy Young, CWA Director of Education, has requested that your name be placed on the Southern Regional Council's publications mailing list. You will receive our quarterly, New South, and other occasional publications of the Council.

This first mailing includes two pamphlets that I think you will find of special interest: Radicalism: Southern Style and Voter Registration in the South, 1968.

Our schedule is such that you will soon get several other reports. In general, however, you will not receive so many so close together.

We are extremely pleased to have you receive our publications and trust that you will feel free to communicate with us about them.

Sincerely,

JACKSON, Miss.---Mississippi taxpayers, including Negroes are paying $5,000 a month to help finance radio and television programs sponsored by the White Citizens Council to preserve segregation.

This was admitted recently by Gov. Ross Barnett, who said the funds were allocated by the State Sovereignty Commission which he heads. Spending of the money was authorized last July at the usual closed session of the Commission.

At least four Commission members are on the 1961 executive committee of the Mississippi Association of Citizens Councils. The radio-TV programs are in charge of W. J. Simmons, administrator of the councils and editor of their newspaper.

The councils are dedicated to "preservation of segregation and constitutional government." The radio-TV programs feature speakers on states' rights, constitutional government, and segregation. Programs are provided free to broadcasting stations in 28 states throughout the nation.

The 1960 Legislature voted $350,000 to finance operations of the Commission for two years. The $5,000-a-month subsidies are in addition to the Commission's allocation of $20,000 made last June to the radio-TV program. There is no provision for the Citizens Council to account to the Commission or to the state auditor for use of the funds.

Three white and one Negro citizen have filed suit in Federal Court here to stop such payments. They contend that the expenditures are in violation of their rights under the Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

The four plantiffs are: Lonnie B. Daniel, area director for the Communication Workers of America; William L. Higgs, Attorney; C.E. Schaeffer, electrician and union official; and Robert L.T. Smith, Jr., Negro grocer.

DOMESTIC REPORT

FACTS Reports on organized anti-Semitism

MARCH 1961, VOL. 14, NO. 3 —PUBLISHED BY THE ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH

The 1960 Election Campaign

The 1960 Presidential election was one of the most unusual in American political history: both candidates were relatively young men, in their forties; they expressed general agreement on many issues (disarmament, the budget, education), seeming to disagree chiefly on the means to realize the desired ends; the winner's margin of victory was extraordinarily small; and, for the first time, a Catholic was chosen President of the United States—thirty-two years after Alfred E. Smith had been decisively defeated.

Precisely how important President John F. Kennedy's religion was in his victory is a question for future historians. The present feeling is that there were so many factors involved—economic, geographic, racial, as well as religious—that each one was important. Nor can the purely personal element, President Kennedy's effective performance on television, be overlooked.

Certainly, in such very close elections every group of voters may be said to play a role in determining the outcome. Consequently, all considerations that influence close elections assume significance, sometimes out of proportion to the number of voters affected by them.

Thus, in analyzing decisive voting patterns in the last election, political experts have been forced to list a series of groups, motivated by a variety of considerations: besides those groups that voted along religious lines, for or against Kennedy because of his Catholicism, there was the urban Negro vote, the rural Southern vote, the New York State Liberal Party vote, the vote in economically depressed areas.

Finally, there is the complex motivation behind decisions on voting. For instance, southern whites living in a depressed economic area were under both anti-Catholic pressure and the compulsion of traditional Democratic voting habits. Obviously, their vote for Kennedy could not be described simply as a rejection of religious pressure.

The most discouraging aspect of the campaign was the quantity and quality of appeals to racial and ethnic, as well as to religious, consideration. Not all such appeals are generally regarded as reprehensible in political elections. Many who consider the injection of prejudice against a minority group undesirable, do not view the attempt to secure a minority group's support for political candidates in the same light.

That is not our view. In the first place we believe as a matter of principle that any appeal founded on the assumption that each racial, religious, and ethnic group in the United States votes exclusively on the basis of a unique self-interest is both improper and questionable—improper because to broadcast such appeals to self-interest is to perpetrate a malicious stereotype, and questionable because it assumes that Americans vote en bloc along rigidly defined lines. In practice such appeals inevitably are prejudicial against other groups.

What were some of the appeals to "special interest" groups during the 1960 campaign? How did they invoke prejudice to support their pleas?

Appeals to Catholics

Catholics were urged to vote for Kennedy as an expression of group solidarity, to form a united front against what was termed "the enemy"—Protestants in general, Masons and Shriners in particular. According to the New York Times (November 5, '60) such appeals were contained in mimeographed sheets slipped under the windshield wipers of cars parked outside Roman Catholic churches in a Minneapolis, Minnesota, suburb. Captioned, "Actions Speak Louder Than Words," it said it part:

> "Now that it is evident that many Protestants and more so, Masons and Shriners, are not in favor of Senator Kennedy, is it not timely to vote out the Masons? Namely . . . Senator Humphrey who is a member of Masonic Lodge #2, Governor Freeman who is Master of Lodge #112. Don't just think about this . . . ACT . . . Time is short."

On the other hand, Catholics appealed to Catholics not to vote for the Catholic candidate because Kennedy was alleged to be "soft" on Communism. "An Open Letter to American Catholics" was carried as an advertisement in the New York Times (October 20, '60) under the heading, "There is a Catholic Issue." It was signed by the "Communism Is the Issue Committee—James L. Buckley, chairman," and identified Kennedy "with that segment of society which is either unwilling or unable to regard Communism as more than a childish bugaboo." Pointing out that the Catholic Church looked upon Communism as an irreconcilable enemy, the letter emphasized that American Catholics were therefore under a "special obligation to consider chiefly which candidate has the will to fight the most determined enemy Christian society has known."

Appeals to Jews

Jews, too, were asked to vote for one candidate or another for special "Jewish reasons." Noting that anti-Catholic literature was being disseminated, a mimeographed five-page letter mailed out by the New York State Democratic Committee on Nationalities and Intergroup Relations first played on Jewish sympathy for the victims of this literature. Then it proceeded to urge Jews, as Jews, to vote for their candidate. The argument:

> "We Jews are an unusual people and have carried the burden of persecution and oppression through many centuries. We dare not acquiece in these ominous machinations. We have witnessed the evils of prejudice and discrimination . . . It is, therefore, the continued responsibility of the Jewish people . . . to strive to conserve the strength and ideals of freedom. To attain these noble objectives, we support the party and the candidate whose conviction and past performance augur well for the future of America."

The letter concluded with a compilation of Kennedy's legislative record as Senator, carefully selected to evoke the approval of Jewish voters.

Interesting for its reflection of what some non-Jews, as well as Jews, considered to be the chief preoccupation of American Jews was the emphasis on the welfare of Israel as an overriding political consideration.

Citizens for Kennedy-Johnson distributed a two-page letter to Jewish organizations contrasting the Republican Administration's alleged record of pro-Arab and anti-Israel attitudes and actions with the "good" records of the Democratic candidates on this score.[1]

Two other items sought to persuade Jews to vote for the Democratic candidates because their positions on foreign policy with regard to Israel coincided with the presumed position of American Jews in general.

The Jewish Times of Boston (November 3, '60) printed a full-page advertisement by a private individual urging readers to vote for Kennedy. The advertisement asked:

> "Does the [Republican] Administration expect to continue their bankrupt Middle East policy? Shall Israel's jobs and economy suffer through Arab boycott and blackmail through U. S. mail while our State Department does nothing?"

Clearly, the author of the advertisement was convinced that no American Jewish voter in the Boston area would sustain a Republican Administration that acquiesced, for whatever reason, in the Arab boycott of Israel.

Some Democratic campaigners in southern California also assumed that local Jews would vote for the Democratic candidates if they were shown to be "right" on issues of particular concern to Jews. "Fair Play," was a four-page newspaper that the local Committee for Kennedy-Johnson circulated widely to Jewish voters in the Los Angeles area. It too rang the familiar change: defensive solidarity (Senator Kennedy was under attack by anti-Semites); and the "correct" line (Kennedy had pledged himself to act against the Egyptian blockade of the Suez Canal).

Such attempts to exploit sympathy for Israel's needs were not confined to Democratic vote-seekers. At one point in the campaign, Vice President Nixon's headquarters issued a statement declaring that Israeli newspapers had called for Nixon's election as a reliable friend of Israel. The press release drew the direct implication, calling on "two million Jews to cast their vote for Mr. Nixon for the sake of Israel." This bold tie-in of the "Jewish vote" with the preferences of a foreign state raised a furor throughout the country. A few days later Nixon's headquarters repudiated the release as the work of an overzealous subordinate.

Nevertheless, some overzealous Republican campaigners did not give up this general line. Immediately before the election, Jews in various parts of the United States received mailings with a New York postmark from the Committee for Human Dignity and the Committee for Human Rights—captioned "The Israeli Press Views Nixon and Lodge" and containing excerpts from several Israeli newspapers. Nixon, the Israeli citations argued, was a better friend of Israel than was Kennedy. (The same mailings also raised the spectre of anti-Semitism: an insert attacked Joseph Kennedy, Sr., implying that the Democratic candidate's father was anti-Semitic.)

On the other hand, certain Republicans, preocuppied with the "Jewish vote," were eager to deny the imputation that their candidate was in any way discriminatory against American Jews. Directly addressing Jewish voters, Republicans published parallel column advertisements in Anglo-Jewish publications throughout the country. One column informed Jewish readers that charges of bigotry against Vice President Nixon had been thoroughly investigated by B'nai B'rith and had been found to be false. In fact, the Republican Presidential candidate had been commended by various Jewish groups for championing the cause of justice, human rights, and dignity for all races and creeds in America, Israel, and throughout the world.

A parallel column, headed "So You May Know the Truth," reminded Jewish voters of the ethical injunctions of Judaism. It showed a photograph of an elderly Jew holding a religious tome, and bore the legend: "Have We Forgotten the Ninth Commandment, 'Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor'?" Obviously, the intent of this advertisement, inserted by Friends of Nixon and Lodge, was to invoke Jewish pride in their spirtual heritage and simultaneously associate it with the image of the Republican standard-bearer.

Katz, president, B'nai B'rith; Maurice Bisgyer, executive vice-president, B'nai B'rith; Bernard Nath, chairman of civil rights committee; Arnold Forster, general counsel and civil rights director.

Another device employed to attract the Jewish vote for Nixon and Lodge was the printing of testimonial advertisements in the Anglo-Jewish press signed by prominent Jews. One such advertisement stressed Nixon's deep concern after a visit to the Warsaw Ghetto; Henry Cabot Lodge's support for the State of Israel as United States Ambassador to the United Nations; and the amount of financial aid that the Republican Administration of President Eisenhower had given to Israel.

These appeals to presumed Jewish self-interest, however, did not reflect the official positions of either of the Presidential candidates—both Kennedy and Nixon carefully avoided public statements that might be interpreted as excessively favorable to any one group of voters at the expense of any other group. These appeals stereotyped Jews as a group, but did not malign any minority.

Unfortunately, however, a number of items distributed by less responsible groups, outside of regular political campaign circles, did cross the border line of defamation.

For example:

A screed entitled "Warning to All of Our Jewish Friends," mailed anonymously, declared that Hitler had been a Roman Catholic; he had approved Catholic opposition to Protestantism; in fact, all Nazi and Fascist dictators were Catholics; and, in a non sequitur, "The Roman Catholics are fighting with every means they know to put their man in the White House and to gain control of the United States."

Similarly, a four-page leaflet set forth reasons why Jews, of all voters, should not support a Roman Catholic candidate for President. Bearing the imprint of Patriot Press, and mailed from Midwestern cities a few days before election day, it was sent eastward to the centers of large Jewish population. This leaflet emphasized that: "Jewish Senator Lehman of New York had gladly accepted Dr. Daniel Poling's invitation to pay tribute to the Jewish chaplain" at the Four Chaplain's Meeting in Philadelphia (in 1947); Senator Kennedy, however, had withdrawn at the insistence of the Catholic clergy.

The authors made much of the political concordat of 1933 between Pope Pius XI and Adolf Hitler, and concluded with a plea to Jews, together with Protestants and "seventy million non-church members to stand together against this common foe who classifies us all as 'heretics' and who usurps the United States Constitution's guarantee of free speech. . . [Kennedy] is the opening wedge to converting America into another Spain."

Appeals to Negroes

Negroes were urged to vote Republican because of the presumed identification of the Democrat Party with segregation. Thus, the New York Republican County Committee published a column written by a prominent Negro as an advertisement in a Negro publication.[2]

The Negro columnist, in a "special report to Negro voters" explained why he was voting for Nixon-Lodge. He began by noting that Negro voters believed that a Democratic victory would continue ardent southern segregationists in positions of power—men like Senators Eastland of Mississippi, Byrd of Virginia, and Talmadge of Georgia. He added that the southern Negro was not interested in the Democratic platform on domestic or foreign issues [a reference to the liberal Democratic plank in favor of extending civil rights]; for the southern Negro knew that all the local officials whom he had to deal with were Democrats who favored continued segregation.

The Democrats replied in kind. Well-known Negro stage personalities endorsed Senator Kennedy for President in several issues of The Pittsburgh Courier, a Negro-owned and Negro-read weekly.

Nor did Democrats allow the charge that they favored segregation to pass without a counter thrust. New York and other cities with substantial Negro populations were showered with replicas of a deed signed by Vice President Nixon; it included a restrictive covenant barring Negroes and Jews from purchasing property in Spring Valley, Maryland. (There was no indication of the fact that Nixon had explicitly repudiated the restrictive covenant when it was brought to his attention.)

Appeals to Protestants

Of all the groups appealed to, the largest of course were the Protestant groups. Exactly how much clearly bigoted anti-Catholic literature was distributed during the 1960 Presidential campaign, how many anti-Catholic speeches were made, obviously cannot be precisely determined. However, competent political observers writing in influential newspapers—men like Robert Bird of the New York Herald Tribune and James Reston of The New York Times—estimated the size of such propaganda as massive.

Where did it appear? Bruce Felknor, executive secretary of the Fair Campaign Practices Committee, lists thirteen states where there was a particularly heavy distribution of anti-Catholic literature: Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, Virginia, Ohio, Tennessee, Kentucky, Texas, California, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Illinois, and Florida.

Arthur Lazell, assistant director of the Democratic National Committee's anti-bigotry squad, commented on the widespread attacks on Kennedy's candidacy because of his religion:

> "Although the South is generally considered to be the center of the anti-Catholic foment . . . there is not a state that has not been literally drenched with this stuff. There's a lot in Pennsylvania, a lot in the farm belt, in the Northwest."

Most of the objections to Kennedy as a Catholic Presidential candidate concentrated on the theme that Roman Catholicism was incompatible with Presidential obligations. It would be inaccurate to reduce all such objections to bigoted hostility. To many conservative Protestant ministers and laymen a real question of conscience was involved; they believed that Catholics communicants were bound by church teachings even in their non-church, political actions—a moot question. What was noteworthy in the 1960 campaign was that these objections came into the open; that Kennedy treated them seriously at their face value, and replied to them; and that his reply in a sense cleared the air. This was, perhaps, the most healthy aspect of the campaign.

It must first be stressed that most Protestant church groups and individual Protestant leaders were opposed to the singling out of Catholic candidates for special questioning, although many well-known groups and spokesmen did question whether a Catholic candidate for President could maintain his independence from church influence.

In the spring of 1960, thirteen leading Protestant officials, including the highest officials of the Protestant Episcopal, United Presbyterian, Evangelical and Reformed, Congregational Christian and Disciples of Christ churches, expressed the conviction that each of the candidates in the campaign "has presented himself before the American people with honesty and independence, and we would think it unjust to discount any one of them because of his chosen faith."

In an open letter to "fellow pastors in Christ," the ministers warned against the "serious danger that the forces of hate and unformed hostility may loose upon our people" if anti-Catholicism were injected into the Presidential campaign.[3]

Presiding Bishop Arthur Lichtenberger of the Protestant Episcopal Church emphasized that the question of whether a Presidential nominee might be a Catholic "should not be a factor in one's choice . . . I don't think that the discipline of the Church would be contrary to the best interests of the Government . . . We have Roman Catholics who are governors of states and cities. I have never heard of any difficulty because of their Catholic faith."

Dean John C. Bennett of Union Theological Seminary declared that "a Catholic president might have a better perspective on the issue of social justice than many Protestants."

Fair Campaign Practices

In March, 1960, prominent Catholic, Protestant and Jewish religious leaders met in Washington to discuss the problem of the religious issue. The meeting was sponsored by the Fair Campaign Practices Committee, headed by Charles P. Taft, former Mayor of Cincinnati, which issued a statement setting forth five principles to govern the discussion of religion in the campaign. The principles, based on a consensus of the religious leaders, were:

1. "It is proper and desirable that every public official should attempt to govern his conduct by a personal conscience that is formed by his religious faith.

2. "No candidate for public office should be opposed or supported because of his particular religious affiliation. . .

3. "A candidate should be judged by his qualifications for the office he seeks and by his position on issues relevant to that office. He may properly be questioned about such issues and about the bearing of his religious faith and conscience on them. A candidate's religion is relevant to a voter's decision, but only so far as it bears on such political issues.

4. "Stirring up, fostering or tolerating religious animosity or injecting elements of a candidate's faith not relevant to the duties of the office he seeks are unfair campaign practices.

5. "Intelligent, honest and temperate public discussion of the relation of religious faith to the public issues will, as it has already done, raise the whole level of the campaign."

The American Lutheran Church, at its convention in April, 1960, endorsed a statement that "just as membership in a particular religious group should not disqualify a candidate from public office, so his particular Church membership alone should not entitle him to support for that office."

It said that "the chief consideration, surpassing all others, is that the person best qualified for the position be chosen. Such personal qualities as integrity, courage, wisdom and understanding are pertinent to the choice. The past records of the candidates and their parties, the claims they make and their credibility, and the probable benefits their supporters expect if victory is theirs, also are relevant considerations. . ."

Howard R. Burkle, Professor of Religion, wrote in the United Church Herald (Jan. 21 '60) that "it is difficult to believe that informed Americans can really think that the election of a Roman Catholic will give over the reins of executive power to Vatican control. I conclude, therefore, that this objection to a Catholic candidate is unfounded, a result of either ignorance or of deliberate intent to arouse base dispositions. . ."

In the Unitarian Register (December 1959) Dr. Homer A. Jack, minister-at-large of the Unitarian Fellowship of Evansville, Indiana, wrote that "to vote against a candidate for the presidency merely because he is a Roman Catholic is the essence of bigotry. . . The late Justice Frank Murphy was a Catholic, yet no Pope told him how to vote. Indeed, he voted in favor of the right of Jehovah's Witnesses to set up a public address system in a municipal park in order to make anti-Catholic statements.

"It seems to me that there is little a Catholic President could do even if he secretly were determined to favor the church. Could a President prohibit birth control? Could a President establish the Roman church as the state church in America? Hardly! He probably would lean over backwards to show that he was not controlled. There are dangers of Catholic power in our American democracy, but they do not stem from having a Catholic in the White House. . ."

On the other hand, responsible Protestant denominations number among them many leaders and many groups of genuine good-will who nevertheless are apprehensive about the effect on a Catholic President of his church and its hierarchy.

Key Questions

In March, 1960, the Board of Social and Economic Relations of the Methodist Church posed these four questions, which it felt that any Catholic candidate should answer:

"1. Many nations recognize the Vatican City of the Roman Catholic Church as both church and state and send official ambassadors to the Holy See. If you become President, what would be your policy concerning the appointment of an ambassador from the United States or a personal representative to the Vatican?

"2. Pope Pius IX, in the Syllabus of Errors, condemned the concept of the separation of church and state. Do you accept this position of the Roman Catholic Church or the American principle of the separation of church and state as provided for in the Constitution?

"3. The Bishops of the Roman Catholic Church in the United States issued an official statement in 1948, which took issue with the Supreme Court's interpretation of the First Amendment, as it relates to the separation of church and state. The statement claims that the Constitution permits the 'cooperation between government and religions.' It implies among other things, the use of tax money for sectarian or parochial schools, provided this is done equally with no preference of one religion over another. What is your personal attitude toward the Bishops' interpretation of the Constitution? What is your attitude toward the plan of financing parochial schools with public funds by scholarship grants to parents of children in such schools at the elementary and secondary levels?

"4. As our chief executive, would you support the use of public funds for dissemination of birth control information and materials when requested by other nations facing overpopulation? Would you continue to support the granting of federal funds to hospitals in the United States which disseminate birth control information?"

It should be noted that these questions were answered repeatedly by Senator Kennedy despite the fact that many Catholics considered them unfair. In one form or another, they continued to be asked of him to election day. During the same period, objections to a Catholic candidate by Protestant spokesmen and bodies swelled to a crescendo. A random sampling follows:

In May, 1959 a private poll at the 102nd annual session of the Southern Baptist Convention revealed that 96 percent of the "messengers" (delegates) were opposed to a Catholic in the Presidency. (In 1960, at their national convention, the delegates adopted a resolution expressing their fears of a Catholic for President.) In June, 1959 the official organ of Alabama Methodists editorially criticized Governor John Patterson for endorsing a Catholic for President. And in July the Alabama Baptist followed suit, concluding, "It has been said that religious opposition to a Catholic President was dying out in the south. However, we believe the Governor will be surprised at the widespread repercussions caused by his public endorsement of Senator Kennedy."

In August, 1959 the Minnesota Baptist Convention resolved that a Catholic in the White House "would be a serious threat to the historic liberty and freedoms now afforded us by our Constitution. We believe that a Roman Catholic by both the policy and declaration of his own church, cannot exercise the governmental responsibility of the President of the U. S. as outlined by our Constitution, without and apart from the influence of the teaching and program of the Roman church, which are not in accord with and are contrary to our Constitution and freedoms."

The 1.6 million Southern Baptists in Texas were advised in November, 1959 by their state convention to consider carefully before voting for a candidate who is a Roman Catholic. In a resolution they questioned "whether or not a Roman Catholic office-holder would be able to resist the pressures of clericalism." An article questioning a Catholic's capacity to be independent of his church was reprinted from Christian Herald and mailed throughout Wisconsin by the state Council of Churches. Arkansas Baptists unanimously adopted a resolution opposing any Catholic for President, since, it said, Catholics owe allegiance to "a foreign person who is outside the U. S. and above the laws and governing forces of the U. S. . . ." Arizona Baptists similarly opposed a Catholic candidate; but at their state convention Georgia Baptists rejected a resolution opposing a Catholic President.

Between January and late May of 1960 came more than a dozen similar expressions from state bodies of the various Protestant denominations, religious publications and Protestant leaders in national magazine articles. These culminated on May 20 when the Southern Baptist Convention, as one of its officials had predicted the previous year, adopted a resolution expressing strong fears about electing a Catholic President.

In January, 1960 more than one-third of some 700 Presbyterian ministers answering a poll sponsored by an official Presbyterian ministers magazine said they would "not vote for a Catholic for President of the United States under any circumstances." (The number responding were only 1/10 of all ordained Presbyterian ministers.)

The lead editorial in the February 1, 1960 issue of Christianity Today, a leading nondenominational magazine, stated that opposition to the election of a Roman Catholic "is certainly not unreasoning." They contended "a Catholic President alone will not turn the United States into a Colombia or Spain, but he would, in all likelihood, knowingly or otherwise, take what steps he could in that direction. . . Informed Protestants believe, not at all irrationally, that the interests of the nation are safer in the hands of one who does not confess to a foreign earthly power."

On February 4, Roy Pearson, Dean of Andover Newton Theological School, in an article in the United Church Herald, described his reservations about voting for a Roman Catholic. He said that if religion has a proper influence on a man's life, it is "an inescapable element in the evaluation of his competence for political leadership. . . I only insist that when a man has pledged prior allegiance to an organization as tightly disciplined and as rigidly authoritarian as the Roman Catholic Church, he presents voters with a special reason for vigilance in studying his qualification for office. . ."

On April 29 The National Association of Evangelicals adopted a resolution stating ". . . that due to the political-religious nature of the Roman Catholic Church, we doubt that a Roman Catholic President could or would resist fully the pressures of the hierarchy."

Howard Short, editor of The Christian, official publication of the Disciple of Christ Church, said in an editorial (June-July 1960) that he "cannot see fit to support a Roman Catholic for President, all other qualifications being equal."

Questions were also raised by some of the nation's outstanding Protestant spokesmen. In its Christmas issue, Christian Herald printed an excerpt from the autobiography of its editor, Rev. Dr. Daniel A. Poling, recounting Senator Kennedy's withdrawal from ceremonies dedicated to an interfaith chapel in Philadelphia "on orders" from the Catholic Archibishop of Philadelphia, the late Cardinal Doherty. Dr. Poling was not satisfied with Kennedy's explanation that he was withdrawing because he believed he had been asked to represent his church, which he could not do without the approval of that church. The Baptist minister and editor saw in the episode subservience to the hierarchy which boded ill for Kennedy's independence.

Later that month, in LIFE, Episcopal Bishop Pike acknowledged that there are two interpretations of church-state relations within the Catholic Church. He considered one in the American tradition and the other alien to it. A Catholic who believes in the American interpretation should be elected if he is the better man, said the Bishop, but a member of the other school should not be "unless the other candidate is very unsuitable indeed."

In January 1960, Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam questioned whether Senator Kennedy could be "free of Roman Catholic hierarchical control."

Although not a religious society, the organization known as Protestants and Other Americans United for Separation of Church and State (POAU) must be noted in any discussion of this subject. POAU is concerned with the American tradition of separation of church and state, and its founders and officers campaign against clerical encroachments on absolute political independence of the state. In recent election campaigns, to the growing distress of the organization itself, rabid anti-Catholic material distributed in various states carried stickers urging readers to subscribe to POAU publications, and individual supporters of the organization have tried from time to time to involve it in their own bigoted attacks on Catholic candidates. POAU has been driven to editorial pleas in its own organ asking its friends to shun such tactics and has repudiated the literature of the bigots. . .

On September 7, 1960, the National Conference of Citizens for Religious Freedom, a group of 150 Protestant ministers and laymen, met in Washington, D. C., to discuss the "real and vital religious issue." The Conference issued a public statement charging that a Roman Catholic President would be under "extreme pressure from the hierarchy of the church" to "align the foreign policy of the United States with that of the Vatican." The Rev. Dr. Norman Vincent Peale of New York, the group's chairman at the time, characterized the "very impressive" gathering as one "more or less representative of the evangelical conservative Protestantism." Urging moderation, the group said it believed that "this religious issue should be handled with utmost discretion; that it should be discussed only in a spirit of truth, tolerance and fairness, and that no person should engage in hate-mongering, bigotry, prejudice or unfounded charges."

Though conceding that Kennedy had repeatedly proclaimed his own support for Church-State separation, the group insisted that some actions of the Catholic Church in respect to separation had given Protestants legitimate grounds for concern about having a Catholic in the White House.

The Conference's statement created a national furor. Liberal Protestants, such as the renowned theologian Dr. Reinhold Niebuhr, deplored the Peale group's statement. The Democratic leadership assailed it and Republicans were frankly worried that it might have a boomerang effect, inducing previously pro-Nixon Catholic voters to switch over to Kennedy as a co-religionist under attack. Major Catholic publications, which had soft-pedalled the religious issue, now loudly protested the group's insinuations. Peale himself, retreated under fire, disassociating himself from both the National Conference and its Washington meeting. "I did not call this meeting," he said "and had nothing to do with setting it up. . . I did not take part in the preparation of its statement of conclusions." He added:

> "The people have the right to elect a Catholic, a Jew, a Protestant or even someone of no religious affiliation as President, and he has the right to serve. The election should be on the basis of the man best qualified. Each of us must vote according to the dictates of his own conscience. This I believe and regret that my position has ever been presented as anything else."[4]

Americans for Democratic Action, a nonpartisan political organization generally associated with liberal positions, issued a statement attacking the Peale group and other "right-wing" Americans. Those who raised the religious issue against Kennedy, said the ADA, "object to him more because he is a liberal than because he is a Catholic."

One of the participants in the conference, Dr. George M. Docherty, pastor of a Presbyterian church in Washington, announced later that he himself would support Kennedy for the Presidency. Though criticizing the make-up of the conference ("not a representative group of Protestantism"), Dr. Docherty asserted he could agree with 90 percent of its statement, that it is his position that "this issue of the Roman Catholic Church which has arisen in the campaign is merely bringing into focus an issue which has always existed, namely the dialectical opposition between the philosophy of the hierarchy of the Roman Catholic Church and the political philosophy of the United States."

When asked whether a Catholic President would be subjected to pressures from the church, Dr. Docherty responded that he had no doubt such pressures would be present. It was, he asserted, undemocratic to label any criticism raised against the Roman Catholic Church as bigotry, though no doubt some of it was. "Only Mr. Kennedy can answer the question as to how far he can resist such pressures," he said.

Facing Up to the Issue

Kennedy took up the gauntlet, in an address to the Greater Ministerial Association, which was broadcast throughout Texas (where his candidacy as a Catholic had been under strong attack, particularly by Baptist ministers). He told the Protestant ministers that he would resign as President if he could not make every decision in the national interest "without regard to outside religious pressure or dictates. . . I do not speak for my church on public matters, and the church does not speak for me.

Whatever issue may come before me as President—on birth control, divorce, censorship, gambling, or any other subject—I will make my decision in accordance with what my conscience tells me to be the national interest, and without regard to outside religious pressures or dictates."

Taking the offensive, Kennedy charged the group formerly led by Peale with working to "subvert the declaration, in Article VI of the Constitution, that there shall be no religious test of office."

That group, the Citizens for Religious Freedom, responded by praising Kennedy's speech, which it called "the most complete unequivocal and reassuring statement which could be expected of any person in his position." However, it questioned whether his statement would be "acceptable to his church."

How did this remarkable public exchange over a significant forum on a highly sensitive interfaith issue, one that only two and a half decades before had been shrouded in innuendo on the one side and silence on the other—affect either the conduct of the Presidential campaign or its result?

Immediately afterward, on September 26, 1960, Newsweek magazine reported the findings of its Listening Post department in respect to the prevalence of the religious issue, and its probable effect on the election, as seen at that point:

> "Collectively, the Listening Post in the fifty states found that the issue of Kennedy's Catholicism is being talked about in practically all states, and in some almost to the exclusion of every other political topic. . . Yet in many states . . . though the religious issue is unquestionably important, nobody so far knows how it will be translated into votes in November. Clearly, not all Catholics are for Kennedy; and not all Protestants are against Kennedy."

Why did Kennedy himself publicly face the religious issue, which had proved so fatal for Al Smith in 1928? Kennedy's aggressive personality is not to be discounted as a factor in his vigorous reaction; another possible factor was revealed after the election, in an article that appeared in Harper's magazine. The Simulmatics Corporation had prepared an opinion appraisal in August 1960, shortly before the Peale group statement and Kennedy's subsequent reply. Simulmatics had used the findings of 66 previous national polls to predict the election results, as it would be affected by the injection of the religious issue. Simulmatics advised the Democratic candidate's brother and campaign manager, Robert Kennedy, who had requested its survey, that Catholicism had already been injected into the campaign as an issue; that if the attack worsened, it was best to face the threat directly.

Simulmatics said that if the campaign became embittered, he [Kennedy] would lose a few more reluctant Protestant votes to Nixon, but gain Catholic and minority group votes. Bitter anti-Catholicism in the campaign would bring about a reaction and support for Kennedy both from Catholics and others who would resent overt prejudices, it added. On balance, it said, Kennedy might gain more than he could lose from forthright and persistent attention to the religious issue.

Literature

Anti-Catholic literature that originated from relatively responsible sources was the product of no single denomination or sect. It was varied, including press releases, church publications, feature stories, editorials, reprints of sermons and speeches, letters to parishioners—and a 109-page book.

The most widely distributed was, it is believed, a sermon by Rev. W. A. Criswell, Pastor of the First Baptist Church of Dallas, Texas, delivered in July 1960. It warned that the election of Senator Kennedy would lead to the destruction of religious liberty in America.

Another tract that gained wide currency was written by Rev. C. Stanley Lowell, associate director of the Protestants and Other Americans United for Separation of Church and State, who charged ("Protestant, Catholic and Politics") that the "Catholic genius for politics" was "turning from king-maker to king."

Several Masonic lodges were also involved in spreading anti-Catholic propaganda. The Scottish Rite of the Masonic Lodge mailed (Oct. 24, '60) an anti-Kennedy letter to 6,500 members in Oregon. The letter went out over the signature of the Grand Inspector General and the Grand Chancellor of the Supreme Council in Washington, D.C. The Roman Catholic priesthood, it alleged, was seeking political power in the United States; that "whenever in the past the priests had gained such power, they had persecuted their opponents." Senator Kennedy, the letter alleged, was a loyal member of the Vatican.

Many residents of Utica, N. Y., reported receiving anti-Catholic matter in envelopes bearing the return address of "Luther Smith, Sovereign Grand Commander of the 33rd Degree, Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Free Masonry."

Both the September and October 1960 issues of the Memphis, Tenn., Scottish Rite publication contained editorials opposing the election of a Roman Catholic as President of the United States.

Still another example:

Visitors to the George Washington Masonic Memorial in Alexandria, Va., were handed a tract declaring that "Roman Catholic allegiance is a real political issue, since the Vatican demands, under threat of excommunication, first allegiance to the Roman hierachy."

Publishers of Bigotry

The 1960 election campaign presented a perfect opportunity for those publishing houses which had specialized for years in anti-Catholic propaganda. The largest of them, the Osterhus Publishing House of Minneapolis, Minn., claimed to have distributed upwards of twenty million pieces. Another was the anti-Catholic publication, Christian Heritage, published in Sea Cliff, by Christ's Mission, Inc., and edited by Walter M. Montano. Christ's Mission was incorporated in 1887 by "Father" James A. O'Connor, Irish-born ex-priest who for many years issued the publication called The Converted Catholic, predecessor of Christian Heritage.

Despite the fact there are some reputable men among its leardership who reject religious bigotry, Christ's Mission has been involved in bitter controversy with Roman Catholics and its literature has been used by groups making malicious attacks on Catholics.

The position of Christian Heritage is reflected in the following editorial:

> ". . . many of the key positions in Washington are already held by Roman Catholics, and the number of Catholics in the Senate and House of Representatives is growing with each election. Add to this, a Roman Catholic President and the country's fate is sealed. . ."

An article (April 1960, p. 10) asserts that the Roman Catholic Church is—

> "nursing the idea that American intolerance of her political activities has about abated, and that a majority of Americans have forgotten the year 1928, when every nun that she could possibly muster sallied forth to the polling places to elect Al Smith President of the U.S.A. The writer has never seen a nun at a polling place since that time. . ."

A group that did a thriving business in anti-Catholic tracts was Freedom Press, which operated out of Nashville, Tenn. It published Voice of Freedom, whose attitude toward Catholics is mirrored in this typical excerpt:

> ". . . We are dealing with a scheming, intriguing, dictatorial power, which has been badly spoiled by pampering and coddling in this country in recent years. The longer we wait to use a firm hand in dealing with this growing menace to our freedom the more difficult it will be to handle it."

(The list of publishers of anti-Catholic tracts is a long one. Beside those already cited, see note 5 for some of the more noteworthy.)

Typical Propaganda

Some typical specimens of anti-Catholic literature in the campaign, were:

An 8-page pamphlet alleged that Senator Kennedy had been subjected to Catholic church pressure in the past—and had invariably yielded. For the Church by its very dogma "binds every good Catholic to Rome, to Rome's purposes, to Rome's pressures and to Rome's infallible Pope." This pamphlet was published by Defenders, Inc., the organization established by the late Gerald Winrod, an active anti-Semite for almost two decades.

A widely-distributed 3-page leaflet, with a cartoon captioned, "Your Candidate?" pictured Senator Kennedy kissing the Papal ring. "Keep Chuch and State Separate," the leaflet admonished.

"Why Not a Catholic for President?" was the title of an 11-page tract published by the Voltaire Society, replete with purported quotations from Catholic sources.

> "The faithful wherever found are subject to the church and not to the will of the state . . . . The civil laws are binding on the conscience only so long as they are conformable to the right of the Catholic Church . . . Individual liberty in reality is only a deadly anarchy."

The tract concluded with a statement attributed to the Marquis de Lafayette: "If liberties of the American people are ever destroyed, they will fall by the hands of the Romish clergy."

Other pieces of propaganda were ingenious in coining new defamatory phrases, appealing to a variety of prejudices in strange juxtapositions: e.g., "the Vatican black international."[7]

Still other propaganda pieces warned that a Catholic President would see to it that non-Catholic (i.e., Protestant churches and Jewish synagogues) would be closed.[8]

Three hardy anti-Catholic staples were reproduced and distributed in large quantities: the "Knights of Columbus Oath," "Abraham Lincoln's Warning," and "Maria Monk." All three works have long been discredited as forgeries.

"Knights of Columbus Oath"

The "Knights of Columbus Oath" emerged during the Know-Nothing era of the 1850's. It is an anti-Catholic equivalent of the equally spurious "Protocols of the Elders of Zion," an ancient canard against Jews. Its widest circulation was attained during the heyday of the post-World War I Ku Klux Klan. According to this bogus document, members of the Knights of Columbus, a fraternal and patriotic order for Catholic laymen, are pledged when ordered by Rome to commit almost every heinous deed imaginable, including arson, torture and murder of heretics.

The Knights of Columbus has successfully sued circulators of the "oath" for libel, and has won case after case over a period of years—wherever the circulators could be found. In recent years the "oath" has been distributed anonymously for the most part. This ancient fraud has shown great durability. Late in April, 1960 a West Virginia clergyman accosted Senator John Kennedy during his primary campaign in that state and asked whether he had sworn to the "oath." The candidate told him the "oath" was a fraud, but the minister nonetheless circulated it among his flock.

"Abraham Lincoln's Warning"

Another old and discredited fabrication, described by historians as "nonsense," is the so-called "Abraham Lincoln's Warning," which was given currency in a small leaflet issued by the Osterhus Publishing House of Minneapolis, Minn., and various other publishers of anti-Catholic tracts. The leaflet quoted Lincoln as saying:

> "The very moment that popery assumed the right of life and death on a citizen of France, Spain, Germany, England or the United States; those states then committed a suicidal act by allowing popery to put a foot on their territory with the privilege of citizenship. . .
> " I am for liberty of conscience in its noblest, broadest sense. But I cannot give liberty of conscience to the Pope or his followers, the papists, so long as they tell me, that their conscience orders them to burn my wife, strangle my children and cut my throat, when they find the opportunity. . ."

The leaflet also holds that a Papist plot lay behind the assassination of Lincoln. The piece appeared during the primaries in West Virginia and Wisconsin.

"Maria Monk"

Oldest of the anti-Catholic propaganda pieces in circulation today is an obscene work, "Maria Monk," which was written by a demented Canadian girl in 1832 and purports to be a history of her experience as a nun. Within four years of its original publication it was investigated and thoroughly discredited by a Protestant layman, William L. Stone. He investigated Maria Monk's stories and found they were faked. It was discovered that the autor Maria Monk, had a police record. At one time she had been confined to an institution for the rehabilitation of prostitutes. She died in prison in 1845.

Promotional pieces on the book subtly stressed its prurient qualities as well as its anti-Catholic character: . . . see how Roman priests perpetrate every crime from seduction to murder . . ." Campaign editions were abridged to comply with Post Office regulations on obscenity, but its flagrant and shocking anti-Catholic bigotry remained unimpaired.

The book was offered as a 100-page paperback selling for one dollar by Gospel Books, Rowan, Iowa, according to advertisements in several anti-Catholic publications, which billed it as "the most extensively read book ever printed on the papal curse . . . Rome fought bitterly, but in vain, to suppress this book . . . Read this frightful, heart-breaking story and see how Roman priests perpetrate every crime from seduction to murder. . . "

During the six months before the election, some regularly published periodicals carried on a constant barrage of propaganda against the election of a Catholic to the Americn Presidency. These included: The Georgia Tribune; The Truth Seekers; Sunshine News; The Defender; The Sword of the Lord; The Jacksonville Chronicle; The Rebel; The Fiery Cross.

(The Rebel is the official publication of the United States Klans, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan; The Fiery Cross, a Texan Klan publication.)

Principal Extremists

Four major anti-Catholic extremists who operated in the campaign were Rev. Harrison Parker of Washington, D.C., Rev. Harvey Springer of Englewood, Colorado; Rev. Carl McIntire of Collingswood, New Jersey; and Brig. General (ret.) Herbert C. Holdridge of California.

PARKER. In Washington, D.C., Reverend Parker operates with tax exemption as "The Puritan Church." He has been for some years one of the most active professional anti-Catholic agitators in the United States. He holds the title of "chancellor" of "The Puritan Church—The Church of America," which has no congregation, meetings or church edifice.

Parker told the Providence (R.I.) Journal Bulletin (April 24, 1960):

> "We were doing almost nothing until the week before Easter when the demand for our material went up terrifically. It went from almost nothing to—well, I won't tell how much. But we're sending it out by the thousands. We can't handle all the demands. . ."

Parker's material appeared in many parts of the country, particularly in California, Texas, Minnesota, and the state of Washington. His literature carried headings such as these:

> —"Indignation Is Expressed From Maine to California At the Roman Catholic Hoodlums Armed with Acid, Knives, and Gun Who Unmolested Roam Our Streets."
> —"Civil War Is Possible In U.S.A. Because of the Un-American 'Catholic Party' Being Formed With Joe Kennedy, the Roman Catholic Millionaire Whiskey Merchant as Boss."

One of his pieces, headed "Rum, Romanism and Riot Hooligans," listed the names of several gangsters alleged to be Catholics. He also sent out a small "ballot" asking the recipient to check whether he was: (1) a loyal American, (2) a Catholic, or (3) a Communist.

SPRINGER. A vehement anti-Catholic rabble-rouser of note is the Reverend Harvey Springer of Englewood, Colo., the self-styled "cowboy evangelist" who barnstormed the country against Senator Kennedy. In one of his latest pamphlets, he declared:

> "If you put a Catholic in the White House, it will be flooded with Catholic priests and nuns going in and out. Their pictures will be flaunted on every page of the newspapers. . . The moment a Roman Catholic is elected as President, freedom of religion is going to be gone . . . Let us keep what religious freedom we have by keeping a Roman Catholic out of the White House. . ."

Springer is an ordained minister and pastor of the First Baptist Church and Tabernacle of Englewood, Colo. As editor of The Western Voice, he has been for years an outstanding promoter of religious hatred. Until recently, he had limited his activities, but the Presidential primaries and the bid for the Democratic nomination by Senator Kennedy inspired him with new anti-Catholic fervor.

A message appearing in a recent issue of Western Voice (March 31, '60), says:

> . . . "Lincoln, Garfield and McKinley were assassinated by Roman Catholics educated in parochial schools. Theodore Roosevelt was shot and wounded by a Roman Catholic in Milwaukee while giving a speech. In Florida, a Roman Catholic with a faulty aim missed Franklin D. Roosevelt and killed the mayor of Chicago instead. A Roman Catholic tried to kill Harry Truman at Blair House while he was President, and instead killed his guard. Catholics in the House of Representatives shot and wounded five Congressmen. Mr. Alvin H. Bentley was wounded very seriously. A Catholic policeman tried to kill John W. Bricker on July 2, 1947."

In collaboration with his lesser known associate, the Reverend Fred Garland, Springer circulated petitions to get a million signatures asking both major party conventions not to nominate a Catholic for President or Vice-President.

The April 7, 1960 issue of Western Voice carried advertisements by such extremist anti-Catholic pamphleteers as Gospel Books ("Maria Monk"), and Harry Hampel of Dallas, Texas ("My Deliverance From the Heresies of Rome").

The issue of April 21, 1960 was devoted almost entirely to violent anti-Catholic preachments. One item states:

> "The tide of response from preachers of all parts of the U.S. is rising higher and higher against the nomination of a Catholic for President or Vice-President. . . Dr. Fred Garland, a prominent evangelist . . . and your editor are working night and day to get out packets of information about preserving our freedom against Catholicism to all preachers who are demanding this knowledge. Some ten thousand preachers are planning to speak on the subject. . ."

On May 5, Western Voice announced cash prizes for the four best original sermons on "Why We Must Stop Rome's March on Washington," with several suggested subjects. The lead article in the same issue called the United States Constitution a "Protestant Constitution."

On May 17, Springer addressed a crowd in Pensacola, Fla. He said: "I believe the Bible teaches in Revelations, Chapters 17 and 18, that Romanism is a greater threat to the U.S. than Communism," and that the U.S. Constitution would be "set aside" if a Catholic were elected President.

A mailing by Springer sent out in May stated, " I am engaged in one-night rallies across the nation—in Michigan, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, Indiana, Nebraska, Texas and Colorado. In some of these places, I am renting auditoriums. We are preparing handbills and other advertising for these rallies." He said a 16mm film, "Catholicism in Action," would be shown on his tours. Springer claimed that he is sending out 300,000 pieces of anti-Catholic literature a week.

McIntire. A prominent anti-Catholic of long standing is the Reverend Carl McIntire, a minister unfrocked by the United Presbyterian Church, who serves as pastor of the Bible Presbyterian Church of Collingswood, N. J. He is president of the International Council of Christian Churches, and a leader in the American Council of Christian Churches, both fundamentalist bodies sharply at odds with the National Council of Churches.

His views on Catholicism are embodied in a statement made on November 2, 1951:

"The strengthening of the Roman Catholic Church through the world only involves the fostering of a false religion which enslaves human souls in darkness and superstition, and from which the Protestant Reformation of the 16th Century delivered us. . . It is argued that the Roman Catholic Church has its representatives behind the Iron Curtain . . . that the information which the priests obtain through the Confessional may be given through the Vatican to the West for some advantage in fighting Communism. Rome will sell her secret confessional system for political world power. But actually the Roman Catholic Church becomes a 'spy system' through the priests, with the priests' loyalty first to the Vatican. If that obtains in other countries, it obtains, too, in our country. . . Are not the Roman Catholics in the United States committed to a foreign power and do they not owe 'obedience and submission' to its head, the Pope?. . . If the priest inside the Iron Curtain countries is a 'spy' for the Vatican state, why is not a priest in the U.S.A. the same?"

McIntire edits a weekly publication called The Christian Beacon. His group, the American Council of Christian Churches, was very active and vociferous in its opposition to a Catholic candidate for President.

Holdridge. A fourth anti-Catholic extremist of some note is Brigadier-General (ret.) Herbert C. Holdridge of Sherman Oaks, Calif., who maintains a large mailing list for his own newsletters and for the distribution of the literature of many publishers of anti-Catholic material. He serves as president of the Minutemen for the Constitution, whose avowed aim is surveillance over the "agents of the Vatican," described by Holdridge as "subversive." Holdridge's position may be summed up in this heading from one of his news bulletins: "Too many Catholics."

In July, 1954, Holdridge addessed a letter to the President, the Congress and the Supreme Court accusing the "hierarchy of the Vatican and its agents in the U.S." of being subversive. He said:

". . . unless and until they publicly reject all teachings of the Vatican threatening our Institutions, the Hierarchy of the Vatican, including members in the U.S. and including the Knights of Columbus, the Society of Jesus, Dominicans, Franciscans, Benedictines, and other confraternities of the Roman Catholic Church, be placed, forthwith, on the subversive list of the Attorney General, and subjected to the same restrictions as are applicable to other subversives."

Holdridge announced on February 12, 1960 his own candidacy for President. He alleged that a world crisis had arisen "because two international dictatorships have usurped the sovereignty of the people over government. He said:

". . . International 'Big Money' and International (secular, political) Clericalism of the Jesuit-Vatican Axis. . . Both forces are motivated by greed for usury as a means to power. 'Big Money' provides the greed incentive. The Jesuit-Vatican 'politicos' give stamp of morality to the greed incentive, and to the wars and threats of war required to maintain armament spending. During the present campaign the forces of Catholic Action are being mobilized to establish in government, openly, an operation which has gone forward secretly by infiltration for long years. These are the two forces which commit us to disaster. . ."

Some of the Presidential aspirants are described by Holdridge in the February 12th announcement of his candidacy as follows:

"Nixon: 'Favorite Son' and 'hatchet-man' of the munitions makers and the Jesuits, a man as politically immoral as a saber-toothed tiger, who has risen to his present position by slander and deceit, and who now aspires to become President on the same program.

"Kennedy: 'Favorite son' of the Jesuits and 'fellow-traveler' of the munitions makers. (We thank him for his forthrightness in presenting the issue of Catholic Action before the public.)

"Brown: (Of whom I shall have more to say anon!: 'Favorite son' of Catholic Action in California, holding the line for Kennedy, and 'fellow-traveler' of the munitions makers.

"Johnson: 'Favorite son' of the Texas oil billionaires and the munitions makers, and 'fellow-traveler' of the Jesuits.

"Humphrey, Symington, Morse: 'Favorite sons' of the munitions makers, and acceptable (as a timid last chance), to the Jesuits. Outside the environment of 'dirty politics' in which these candidates orbit, they were to be regarded as criminals, puppets of political bosses, committing the felony of overthrowing the franchise of the people. . ."

Holdridge's anti-Catholic materials were reprinted in Springer's Western Voice; he for his part distributed the literature of such anti- Catholic publishers as Heritage Manor of Los Angeles, Cal. and the Osterhus Publishing House of Minneapolis, Minn.

Conclusion

How effective were these various appeals to bigotry and group interest during the campaign. Was the Catholic candidate, John F. Kennedy, elected President despite these appeals—or, paradoxically, because of them?

Elmo Roper, in his pre-election polls taken in September 1960, discovered that Catholics were planning to vote about 4 to 1 for Kennedy, Protestants about 2 to 1 for Nixon. How did voters feel about a Catholic in the White House? Thirty-eight percent made either a pro- or an anti-Catholic statement, indicating that religion was a factor in their religious choice (23 per cent were anti-, 15 per cent pro-Catholic). Among Protestants, 27 per cent expressed anti-Catholic feeling; of the Catholics, one-third gave Catholic loyalty as the primary reason for their choice of Kennedy.

Similarly, the Simulmatics Corporation—more conveniently called the People Machine—in August 1960 used the findings of 66 previous national polls to predict election results based on the injection of the religious issue. Dr. Ithiel de Sola Poole, director of Simulmatics, concluded that religion and party allegiance were the two major concerns for voters in choosing between the two Presidential candidates; the relationship between the two varied in different parts of the country. His forecasts were:

> "If the campaign becomes embittered, (Kennedy) will lose a few more reluctant Protestant votes to Nixon, but will gain Catholic and minority group votes. Bitter anti-Catholicism in the campaign would bring about a reaction against prejudice and for Kennedy from Catholics and others who would resent overt prejudice. . . On balance, Kennedy would not lose further from forthright and persist attention to the religious issue and could gain." (Harpers, January, 1961)

Both the Anti-Defamation League and Gallup compared the results of the 1956 and 1960 elections in an attempt to assess the positions of various groups. Both studies indicate the relative ineffectiveness of the appeals to bigotry in swinging the balance of votes away from the Catholic candidate.

The ADL made spot checks in twenty-one cities: Boston, New Haven, New York, Newark, Richmond, Atlanta, Miami, Baltimore, Indianapolis, Detroit, Minneapolis, Columbus, Ohio, Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Louis, Houston, Omaha, Denver, San Francisco, Los Angeles, and Seattle. The checks were confined to a select group of election districts, precincts, or wards inhabited predominantly by Jews, Catholics or Negroes. These were the findings:

Group	1956		1960
	% Democratic	% Republican	% Democratic	% Republican
Negroes	53	46.9	67.6	32.4
Catholics	59.9	40.1	71.5	28.5
Jews	74.2	25.8	77.5	22.5

Gallup summarized 1960 election returns nationally, in relation to the minority and religious issues. He confirmed the increase in Negro, Catholic, and Jewish votes for Kennedy in 1960 over the votes for Stevenson in 1956. Gallup noted, as the most striking indication of religion as a factor in the election, that Kennedy had carried seven out of eleven states where Catholics make up 30 per cent or more of the population—Stevenson had carried none of these important electoral states. Gallup estimated that Kennedy got 10 per cent more of the popular votes in states with a Catholic Church membership than he would have gotten had the religious factor not been present.

David Lawrence, in his syndicated column, agreed that Kennedy's Catholic faith was an important factor in the Presidential election. According to Lawrence, Kennedy had the solid backing of Catholics in his own party, supplemented by an impressive bloc of former Catholic Eisenhower supporters. There was no large rejection of a Catholic—as had been anticipated—among Democratic Portestants in the South. Why? Lawrence suggested that the party pressure exerted in the South to hold regular Democrats in line proved stronger than anti-Catholic bigotry designed to frighen them away.

Can it be that the Catholic faith is an asset to a Presidential candidate, rather than a liability? One leading poll analyst, Louis Bean, felt free to take this controversial position. He argued that Alfred E. Smith might have won the 1928, had not the country as a whole been Republican in political allegiance:

> "The election of Senator Kennedy is the result of Catholic pride winning over Protestant prejudice. There is ample evidence that the number of Catholics voting for a Catholic would outweigh the number of Catholics voting against him . . . The two parties were more evenly divided than in 1956. The Democrats rated 42% in the 1956 popular vote for Stevenson, but at least two major factors which contributed to Stevenson's defeat would play no role in 1960. . . . Political sentiment was divided evenly in all major regions. . . . There was ample and continuing evidence that the issue was dividing the voters in much the same way as it had done in 1928, and that many more voters than usual were undecided chiefly because of it. . . . Religion gave Al Smith a net advantage, but not enough to offset the fact that in 1928 the country as a whole was only about 45% Democrat. Had the two parties rated about 50-50 in 1928, as now, Al Smith would have won." (The Nation, November 26, 1960.)

Obviously, the reader will have to draw his own conclusions as to the precise effect religious bias had in the 1960 election result. The Presidential campaign and the massive involvement of bigotry are now history. But their long-range impact on the American people and upon the democratic election process remains uncertain —to be determined in the future.

One thing is certain: Bigotry failed to prevent the election of a Catholic to the Presidency of the United States in 1960.

Chronological Appendix

(Editor's Note: The following compilation, though not a complete listing, presents almost day-by-day developments stemming from the religious issue in the 1960 Presidential campaign. The items listed were selected as a representative sampling of the scope and variety of those developments and complete a similar sampling published in the June-July, 1960, issue of "Facts".)

May 26, 1960—Minneapolis, Minnesota. An editorial by Paul Rader in Sunshine News, weekly publication of the River Lake Tabernacle, was entitled A Roman Catholic as President? and equated the "Roman Papacy" with Communism, stating both were "totalitarian ideas" menacing the American form of government.

June 2, 1960—Rochester, New York. Paul Blanshard, legal adviser to Protestants and Other Americans United for Separation of Church and State (P.O.A.U.), told a news conference that the Roman Catholic position on the separation of church and state is "un-American."

June 15, 1960—Washington, D. C. Evangelist Billy Graham said he felt that religion "will be a major force in the election" and that in his opinion, there would "be problems with a Catholic President" which Protestants would have to consider before voting for someone of that faith, such as Sen. Kennedy. Graham said it was up to other Protestant leaders to say what the "problems" might be and added that he was "not prepared" to say whether he personally would have reservations about voting for a Catholic for President.

June 16, 1960—Marshalltown, Iowa. The North Iowa Methodist Conference adopted a resolution stating: "In view of the unchanged, official, and historical position of the Holy Roman Apostolic Catholic Church with regard to its control over its individual members, either as private citizens or holders of political office, we recommend that our ministers call to the attention of our congregations the need for informed and wise decisions in casting their ballots for public office."

June 16, 1960—Waukesha, Wisconsin. Delegates to the Wisconsin Presbyterian Synod rejected a resolution which called for non-religious consideration in the selection of political candidates. During the meeting, there was considerable discussion on the influence of the Roman Catholic Church in political affairs.

June 21, 1960—Kansas City, Kansas. Some 2,000 delegates attending the convention of the American Baptist Association, with a claimed membership of 600,000 in more than 3,000 churches, unanimously adopted a resolution opposing the election of a Roman Catholic as President. The action was taken after the Association President, Dr. Hoyt Chastain of Malvern, Arkansas, told the group: "No man can be loyal to the United States and the Vatican at the same time. Baptists have never opposed a man for President because of his religion, but Catholicism is more than a religion. The Vatican is a political state."

June 28, 1960—Boston, Massachusetts. The annual fellowship of the Conservative Baptists, representing more than 275,000 Baptists in the United States, adopted a resolution opposing the nomination of a Roman Catholic for President or Vice-President. The resolution said that complete separation of church and state as called for by the United States Constitution "is repudiated and rejected" by the teachings of the Roman Catholic Church.

July 1, 1960—The current issue of The Churchman reprinted a report from Capital, leading Baptist publication, which stated that "if a person is a true Catholic and if he practices his religion all the way, he must be subject to the final authority of the Pope. This, of course, puts the American Catholic in a dilemma. Likewise, it puts the American voter in a dilemma."

July 3, 1960—Dallas, Texas. Dr. W. A. Criswell, of the First Baptist Church, charged in a sermon that if Sen. John F. Kennedy were elected President, it would "spell the death of a free church in a free state and our hopes of continuance of full religious liberty in America." Dr. Criswell declared that "if Kennedy is nominated and elected, it will inevitably open the door for a United States Ambassador to the Roman Catholic Church, tax support for Catholic schools and, finally, the recognition of the Roman church above all others."

July 4, 1960—Indianapolis, Indiana. A rally sponsored by Christian Patriots of America, a national organization headed by Dr. Hendon Harris of Blomington, heard speakers denounce the Catholic Church. One speaker, former Federal Judge Albert Levitt, of New Hampshire, declared that the "three great enemies of American freedom were Communism, Fascism and the Roman Catholic Church." The theme of the rally was "The Vatican, Political Threat to American Freedom." Rev. Gregory Dickson of the Indiana Baptist Temple, said Christian Patriots of America was formed to combat "Communism, Fascism and Vaticanism."

July 14, 1960—Dallas, Texas. A United Press International survey, following the nomination of Senator Kennedy, disclosed that the strongest voice against Kennedy was that of the Rev. Dr. W. A. Criswell, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Dallas, the nation's largest all-white Baptist congregation, with 12,000 members. UPI said Dr. Criswell stood on his July 3 charge that the election of a Catholic to the Presidency would "spell the death of a free church in a free state and our hopes of continuance of full religious liberty in America."

July 17, 1960—Stanley, North Carolina. Rev. James C. Honeycutt, pastor of the Bruington Baptist Church, published an article in his church newspaper denouncing Sen. Kennedy as a Knight of Columbus and a member of a "hellish, world-wide plot to enslave men and women." He said he based his denunciation on the so-called Knights of Columbus Oath, but two days later said he he had learned that the purported "oath" had been exposed in the Congressional Record in 1913 as bogus. "I am sorry that the article was published in our church bulletin," he said adding that he was still opposed to the idea of a Catholic President.

July 23, 1960—Atlanta, Georgia. A New York Times political survey in the South indicated that Sen. Kennedy's nomination had brought a wave of criticism from those opposing him because he is a Roman Catholic. The survey quoted Dr. Louie D. Newton, former president of the Southern Baptist Convention, the South's largest Protestant denomination, and an officer of P.O.A.U. as saying that Sen. Kennedy's promises to defend separation of church and state would have to be compared with the declarations of his church on that question.

July 31, 1960—Waco, Texas. Dr. Harold E. Lindsey, pastor of the 3,000 member Waco First Baptist Church, said in a sermon that if Sen. Kennedy were elected, the Roman Catholic "hierarchy will have a tool at the highest level, through which they will work." Rev. Lindsey said Sen. Kennedy had "every right to be President, yet millions of American citizens are afraid of what might happen if he is elected. . . . One wonders if he is ignorant of the historical position of his Church. . ."

August 1, 1960—New York City, New York. A survey by Newsweek magazine disclosed that Sen. Kennedy's religion had been attacked in newspaper ads and church bulletins published in North Carolina, and that in strongly Lutheran South Dakota, ads for Protestant services included such topics as "Separation of Church and State in Jeopardy" and "Protestants Challenged." A rumor circulating in South Dakota was that six Catholic Cardinals had turned up at the Democratic National Convention in plain clothes to boost Sen. Kennedy.

August 4, 1960—Lake Odessa, Michigan. The International Pentecostal Association, with a claimed 10,000 members, adopted a resolution opposing the election of a Catholic for President.

August 4, 1960—Gastonia, North Carolina. Some 40 Baptist ministers from Gaston and Mecklenburg counties met to plan tactics aimed at defeating Sen. Kennedy for the Presidency.

August 6, 1960—Dallas, Texas. Rev. Tom Landers, pastor of the Miller Road Baptist Church in Garland, announced that a group of more than 20 Dallas and Fort Worth area ministers would meet to plan a drive opposing the election of a Catholic to the Presidency of the United States. He said the group would "present intelligently and effectively to the people the dangers of having a Roman Catholic President."

August 11, 1960—Dallas, Texas. Columnist Lynn Landrum of the Dallas News reported that he was being bombarded with copies of the bogus Knights of Columbus Oath.

August 12, 1960—Indianapolis, Indiana. The Indiana Catholic reported a tremendous upsurge in the volume of anti-Catholic propaganda throughout the state, both in key cities and rural areas, with much of the material taken from anti-Catholic publications of the 1920s such as The Menace. Factories, beauty parlors, business offices, buses and bars were reported being flooded with such anti-Catholic tracts as the spurious Knights of Columbus Oath. Other anti-Catholic propaganda in circulation included material from "The Voice of the Nazarene, Inc.", Elizabeth, Pa. The Catholic Challenger, also from Elizabeth, Pa., Mr. Kennedy, We Challenge You by Dr. Hendon Harris of Christian Patriots for America (a 109-page book), and the June, 1960, issue of Christian Heritage. The Vol. 1 No. 1 1960, issue of Church-State News, published by P.O.A.U., was reported mailed to every rural boxholder in the state.

August 15, 1960—Nashville, Tennessee. Dr. Ramsey Pollard, President of the 9,000,000-member Southern Baptist Convention, predicted that the "overwhelming majority" of Baptist preachers in the South would ask their congregants to oppose Sen. Kennedy for President. Dr. Pollard said: "Since the Catholic Church is not only a church but a political entity, we feel we are justified in making an attack upon Mr. Kennedy on that basis." B. C. Goodpasture, an evangelist and editor of the Gospel Advocate, said the Church of Christ was against Mr. Kennedy because he "owes his allegiance to the Pope."

August 19, 1960—Nashville, Tennessee. The 48th biennial assembly of the Church of God passed a resolution questioning the fitness of a Roman Catholic to be President of the United States. The resolution said; "We honestly doubt that a Catholic President could or would fully resist the pressures of ecclesiastical hierarchy." The resolution passed without a dissenting vote. Some 2,000 ministers took part.

August 19, 1960—Memphis, Tennesse. The 200,000 member Eastern Baptist Association, a Negro group, adopted a resolution stating it would not support a "candidate who failed to adhere to the doctrine of separation of church and state." Rev. Joseph May, a spokesman, said the resolution meant the group was not endorsing the candidacy of Sen. Kennedy because of his religion.

August 19, 1960—Cleveland, Ohio. The Cleveland News reported that "hate literature" attacking Sen. Kennedy had begun to flood Cleveland through the mails. The literature included the anti-Semitic publication Common Sense and publications of Gerald L. K. Smith's Christian Nationalist Crusade.

August 20, 1960—Geneva, Switzerland. Billy Graham said that religion was a legitimate issue in the U.S. Presidential election campaign and that it would be decisive in the outcome. He said: "A man's religion cannot be separated from his person," and added that Sen. Kennedy "had faced up to this." Mr. Graham said that "the religious issue is deeper than in 1928," and that "people are better informed today." He said that the current election causes some difficulties for Protestants because the Roman Catholic Church is "not only a religious but also a secular institution with its own ministers and ambassadors."

August 20, 1960—Greenville, South Carolina. Sixty ministers and delegates at the South Carolina Conference of the Southern Methodist Church unanimously adopted a resolution declaring that the Catholic Church "has no line of separation of Church and State" and recommending that the Southern Methodists "actively oppose the election of a Roman Catholic" for President.

August 22, 1960—New York City, New York. Time reported that the spurious Knights of Columbus Oath was turning up in scattered town and cities around the country, mostly in the South, and that a scattering of clergymen had recently quoted it in their sermons. In addition, Time said, the Oath had been printed in newsletters of Southern Baptist churches in such places as Rainelle, West Virginia; Phoenix, Arizona; Greensboro, North Carolina; and Knoxville, Tennessee. On August 10, 1960, it was reported elsewhere, Rev. W. L. King, pastor of the Nazarene Bible Church, Finleyville, Pa., was ordered to appear before the grand jury in Pittsburgh after the supreme office of the Knights of Columbus filed action for criminal libel against him on the charge that he was responsible for printing and circulating copies of the Knights of Columbus Oath. The August 16, 1960 Congressional Record contained a statement by Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough of Texas in which he stated he had received a number of inquiries about the Oath.

August 23, 1960—Wichita, Kansas. A mailing sent out by the Defenders of the Christian Faith, Inc., (founded by the late Gerald B. Winrod), consisted of advance proofs of an article to be published in the September, 1960, issue of The Defender magazine. The article entitled Would a Catholic President Put America First? was written by Hugh Malcolm of Tulsa, Okla., who quoted heavily from Rev. W. A. Criswell of Dallas and George Ford of the National Association of Evangelicals on the dangers posed by a Catholic candidate and the Roman Catholic Church. A covering letter from the Defenders was headlined "Our Lives Are At Stake!" and offered readers another tract entitled The Master Plan Behind John Kennedy.

August 23, 1960—Washington, D. C. James Reston of The New York Times reported that Carr Collins, president of the Fidelity Union Life Insurance Co. of Dallas, Texas, who was active in the 1928 anti-Catholic campaing against Al Smith, "has shown up again in a similar assault on President Kennedy." Reston added that scarcely a day passed that did not bring some new anti-Catholic pamphlet into his newspaper office.

August 25, 1960—Danville, Virginia. A group of 25 local ministers, calling themselves the Citizens Association for the Religious Liberty of the Danville Area, adopted a resolution which said:

"We do not believe a man can be a loyal Catholic and fill the office of President of the United States." The ministers pledged to "oppose with all the powers at our command the election of a Catholic to the Presidency." Chairman of the group was Rev. Carey Moser, a Baptist, and its spokesman was the secretary-treasurer, Rev. R. J. Barber. The group included Baptists, Methodists, Disciples of Christ, Pentecostal Holiness and others.

August 27, 1960—Minneapolis, Minnesota. The Minnesota Baptist Convention (Conservative) passed a resolution at its annual session stating that Roman Catholicism poses "as serious a threat to American as atheistic communism."

August 28, 1960—Detroit, Michigan. The religious editor of the Detroit Sunday Times reported that "propaganda with biased religious overtones" had begun to "flood the mails," coming into Detroit from New Jersey, San Francisco, Chicago, Minneapolis, Florida, and other points. He added that religion in politics had become the prime topic of conversation and reading in Detroit and in Michigan generally.

August 29, 1960—Washington, D.C. In his New York Herald Tribune column, Joseph Alsop reported that the campaign was "visibly beginning to produce an outburst of anti-Catholicism on the scale of 1928." Alsop said that according to the staff of Rev. W. A. Criswell, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Dallas, "hundreds of thousands of copies" of a Criswell sermon strongly opposing the Catholic Church and the Kennedy candidacy had been sent out at the request of "preachers, business groups and other people" for circulation in the South. Alsop added that groups of Protestant ministers, jointly pledged to make the anti-Catholic fight together, had been formed in a number of localities.

August 30, 1960—Washington, D. C. James Reston of The New York Times reported on the continuing anti-Catholic campaign against Sen. Kennedy and noted that a United States Senator from Alabama had received a copy of a Baptist paper which reprinted an article by Rev. Jess Moody of the First Baptist Church, Owensboro, Ky., entitled Thomas Jefferson, The Bigot. The article was based on a letter allegedly written by Jefferson in 1800 in which he supposedly declared his opposition to efforts of the Boston Catholic clergy to gain political power and influence. Reston pointed out that in the actual letter, Jefferson never mentioned the Catholic clergy and, in fact, singled out other denominations for criticism. Reston also reported that he was still receiving copies of the spurious Knights of Columbus Oath.

September 1, 1960—Washington, D. C. The Washington Post and Times Herald reported that Rev. Jess Moody of the First Baptist Church, Owensboro, Ky. had apologized for circulating an anti-Catholic statement he falsely attributed to Thomas Jefferson. After receiving evidence of his mistake, Mr. Moody was quoted as saying he was in an "embarrassing and untenable position" and that he would circulate a retraction to all publications which carried his article. He said: "I made the journalistic mistake of quoting the quote without checking it."

September 1, 1960—Covington, Kentucky. The North End Baptist Association went on record in opposition to the election of a Roman Catholic as President and adopted a resolution following the policy expressed by the Southern Baptist Convention at Miami in May, 1960.

September 2, 1960—Springfield, Missouri. The General Presbytery of the Assemblies of God unanimously adopted a resolution opposing the election of a Roman Catholic as President.

September 4, 1960—New York City, New York. A survey of the Southern political situation by The New York Times disclosed widespread anti-Catholic feeling in many parts of the South. The report said in part: "In Texas and throughout the South, the issue between the Southern Baptists and Sen. Kennedy has been joined. Members of fundamentalist groups and Masonic organizations have also been speaking out, but the Southern Baptist Convention, with 9,600,000 members and 31,000 preachers is the most potent religious force in the campaign. Anti-Catholic activity is much more widespread than Southern politicians and the more liberal churchmen foresaw. . ." The report noted that the spurious Knights of Columbus Oath was turning up all over the South and that the Southern Baptist press had warned Baptist editors and pastors against using it.

September 5, 1960—New York City, New York. Time reported that Sen. Kennedy was being openly attacked from many Protestant pulpits, and quoted Rev. Ward V. Barr of the First Baptist Church, Gastonia, N. C., as stating flatly: "I fear Catholicism more than I fear Communism." In Nashville, Time reported, headquarters of the Southern Baptist Convention found Baptists, Roman Catholics and Religious Freedom, an old Sunday School pamphlet, published several years ago—and moderately circulated since—suddenly in great demand. During the summer of 1960, requests were received for some 300,000 copies.

September 6, 1960—Little Rock, Arkansas. The Arkansas Baptist State Convention disclosed plans for a state-wide campaign against the election of Sen. Kennedy as President. In letters addressed to Arkansas' eight Democratic Presidential electors, Rev. W. O. Vaught, pastor of Little Rock's Immanuel Baptist Church, former President of the Arkansas Baptist Convention and currently a vice-president of the Southern Baptist Convention, declared: "We cannot turn our Government over to a Catholic President who would be influenced by the Pope and by the power of the Roman Catholic hierarchy." Rev. Vaught said "religious freedom rallies" would be held in Arkansas cities to fight against Kennedy's election, starting October 3 in Little Rock.

September 7, 1960—Washington, D. C. The National Conference of Citizens for Religious Freedom, a group of 150 Protestant ministers and laymen under the leadership of the Rev. Dr. Norman Vincent Peale of New York, charged that a Roman Catholic President would be under "extreme pressure from the hierarchy of his church" to align the foreign policy of the United States with that of the Vatican.

September 9, 1960—Washington, D. C. A Protestant group called Citizens for Religious Freedom, set up headquarters to promote discussion of the religious issue in the Presidential campaign. The group is an outgrowth of a recent meeting by 150 Protestant ministers and laymen headed by Rev. Dr. Norman Vincent Peale.

September 9, 1960—Oklahoma City, Okla. Some 1,000 "messengers" at the 10th annual meeting of the Baptist Bible Fellowship unanimously adopted a resolution to oppose Sen. Kennedy who had, they said, "made the Roman Catholic Church a basic issue in the current presidential campaign." They called the Catholic Church a "totalitarian religio-politico institution."

September 12, 1960—Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Rev. Amedee Fredette, of Norah Springs, Iowa, a former Catholic priest, told the National Lutheran Council ministerium that if Sen. Kennedy were elected President, he would become either a "traitor" to Rome or a "traitor" to the United States. He said he didn't think Kennedy as an individual wanted to run for President and added: "I thing the Catholic Church wants him to."

September 12, 1960—New York City, New York. A nation-wide survey by The Wall Street Journal on the religious issue in the campaign reached the conclusion that "Anti-Catholicism Runs Deeper than Expected" and was "going to exert a powerful influence on millions of votes in November. . ." The survey said the mid-West was a greater religious trouble spot than the South" according to some political observers, but noted than in a two-week period, some 165 anti-Kennedy sermons in only six Southern states had been reported. The survey noted widespread circulation of inflammatory anti-Catholic tracts in major Mid-Western cities like Chicago and Columbus, in rural Pennsylvania, and major anti-Kennedy activity by religious groups in Florida, Georgia, the Carolinas, Virginia, Texas, and Tennessee.

September 12, 1960—Houston, Texas. Sen. Kennedy addressed the Greater Houston Ministerial Association and declared that he would resign as President if he could not make every decision in the national interest "without regard to outside religious pressures or dictates."

September 13, 1960—Merced, California. A New York Times report from California said that a trail of comment about the religious issue had followed Sen. Kennedy's whistle-stop swing through the Northern and central sections of the state. Democratic leaders in California were said to be concerned over the extent of the interest in Sen. Kennedy's religion.

September 13, 1960—Dallas, Texas. James Reston of The New York Times, reporting from Texas, said that the propaganda campaign against Sen. Kennedy was just beginning and that not only were most Protestant churches against him, but equally important, influential economic interests were "supporting the anti-Catholic preachers." Distribution of anti-Catholic literature, Reston wrote, had reached proportions well beyond the limited finances of even the richest churches, with "the flood of this material . . . now running into the millions, and clearly this kind of money is not normally available to individual churches or their central organizations."

September 13, 1960—Midland, Texas. The 30,000 member Permian Basin Baptist Association, in West Texas, adopted a resolution declaring that Sen. Kennedy was "either denying the teaching of his church or is seeking to delude the American people." The resolution was adopted 24 hours after Sen. Kennedy's appearance before the Greater Houston Ministerial Association.

September 14, 1960—Great Neck, New York. A publishing executive said an out-of-state client had paid his firm to mail out a four-page tract opposing Sen. Kennedy's candidacy for President on religious grounds and said he was now sorry his firm had distributed the material. He said the tract purported to contain excerpts from a recent sermon delivered by a prominent Protestant clergyman. The mailing reportedly was under investigation by the U.S. Department of Justice.

September 16, 1960—Ocean City, New Jersey. Delegates to the 124th annual New Jersey Methodist Conference meeting adopted a report disavowing "religious bigotry as such in the coming Presidential election." The group's 106,000 members throughout the Southern part of the state were, however, asked to consider two questions on the fitness of a Roman Catholic to be President: 1) In the event that a Roman Catholic should be elected President, to what extent would the politically-minded Roman Catholic hierarchy seek to take advantage of their new leverage? 2) Would "a Roman Catholic President . . . be free in making the thousands of appointments it is his to make?"

September 17, 1960—Denver, Colorado. Rev. James M. Tolle, minister of the Park Hill Church of Christ, while denying religious bigotry or anti-Catholic feelings, said he had distributed some 175,000 copies of a pamphlet he had written which took the position that the religious obligations of a Roman Catholic would impair his duties to the United States if he were President.

September 19, 1960—New York City, New York. A ten-day New York Times survey on the impact of the religious issue in the Mid-Western "corn belt" disclosed a widespread undercurrent of anti-Catholic, anti-Kennedy feeling in states from Ohio across the corn-hog belt to Nebraska and north into the Dakotas. The anti-Catholic feeling appeared to be strongest in Indiana where the Klan once flourished. Propaganda volume was so great that political observers believed the cost was far more than church groups could pay for. They believed the mailings were being financed mainly by interests which wanted to defeat Sen. Kennedy for economic reasons.

September 20, 1960—Dallas, Texas. Reporter Robert Bird of The New York Herald Tribune, in a survey of anti-Catholic propaganda in the Southwest, reported that two main types of propaganda were flooding the area: the anonymous, illegally circulated "poison" and the openly distributed arguments centering around the topics of Catholic clericalism and the separation of church and state. The "poison" pamphlets were circulating "at an accelerated rate." Most of the openly circulated material came from Southern Baptist ministers and their publications. The other major source was the Church of Christ.

September 20, 1960—St. Paul, Minnesota. Rev. Harvey Springer, the "cowboy evangelist" who has been traveling throughout the country addressing anti-Kennedy rallies, addressed an estimated 800 persons in Temple Baptist Church and shouted that the United States was "a Protestant nation founded on a Protestant Constitution written by and for Protestants." Springer, who claimed to have collected 1,500,000 names on a petition opposing the election of Sen. Kennedy, took subscriptions for his anti-Catholic weekly The Western Voice and prayed: "Oh God, give that I might defeat a Romanist for the White House."

September 23, 1960—New Orleans, Louisiana. In a special election campaign report, New York Herald Tribune reporter Robert Bird wrote that "professional hate-mongers" were "zeroing into Louisiana an unusually heavy barrage of both anti-Catholic and anti-Semitic propaganda," including the anti-Semitic publication Common Sense which charged Sen. Kennedy with using his religion as a "cloak to mask his real beliefs" which, Common Sense charged, included giving the Jews a free hand "in their plan to Judaize America and debauch the youth of our nation." Anti-Catholic propaganda reaching Louisiana came from Mrs. F. M. Standish of San Francisco and "a great slew of small yellow leaflets" attacking Sen. Kennedy and the Catholic church was coming in from Minneapolis, such as Lincoln's Warning, The Wealthiest Body in the World, By a Converted Roman Catholic Priest, The Enemy Within Our Borders and Do You know How F. D. Roosevelt Fitted Into Roman Catholic Plans?

September 26, 1960—Nashville, Tennessee. New York Herald Tribune reporter Robert Bird, in another special election campaign report, said leaders of the Southern Baptist Convention had told him their attacks on Sen. Kennedy because of his religion would continue throughout the campaign. Bird reported the religious issue had become a "hotly burning brush fire all through Tennessee."

September 30, 1960—Wheaton, Illinois. Widespread distribution was reported of a 12-page pamphlet entitled A Roman Catholic President: How Free From Church Control? written by George L. Ford, executive director, National Association of Evangelicals.

October 1, 1960—Limerick, Pennsylvania. The Citizens Committee, P.O. Box 137, Limerick, Pa., which has been active in distributing anti-Catholic literature, mailed out a new leaflet titled Is a Roman Catholic Qualified for Public Office?

October 1, 1960—Columbia, South Carolina. A mailing from the Association of South Carolina Klans included a sheet entitled Wake Up—Protestants which said that voters could not "afford to support and vote for anyone or group that represents the Roman Catholic Church" and added: "Heaven Help Your Soul If You Vote Away Your Religious Liberty." Readers were urged to read the Knights of Columbus Oath before voting.

October 1, 1960—Austin, Texas. In an interview, the Rev. W. A. Criswell of Dallas said he believed that all Catholics should be barred from public office and that Sen. Kennedy was "lying" when he said that no threat of punishment from his church would make him change his mind on the issue of separation of church and state.

October 4, 1960—Dallas, Texas. One thousand delegates at a United Pentecostal Church conference roared approval of a resolution opposing the election of a Catholic as President. A small number voted against the resolution.

October 6, 1960—Richmond, Virginia. Reuben Alley, editor of the Religious Herald, organ of the Baptist General Association of Virginia, stated editorially that it was absurd to assume that a Roman Catholic could believe in the "American conception of separation of Church and State." He also wrote that the Catholic Church had set up numerous agencies to exert political pressure on all departments of the Government.

October 7, 1960—Dallas, Texas. Messengers to the Dallas Baptist Association, representing some 156,000 Baptists in 237 churches and missions, approved a resolution expressing grave doubts about a Roman Catholic as President.

October 8, 1960—Carbondale, Illinois. The Illinois Baptist declared editorially that the "greatest indictment against Catholicism" was that it refused "to abandon its medieval ideology and practices unless it is forced to do so." The editorial chided Baptists who "think it wrong in their fellow Baptists to be anti-Catholic" and "to question the intolerance of the official Catholic position."

October 9, 1960—Nashville, Tennessee. Dr. Batsell Barrett Baxter of the Church of Christ preached against the Roman Catholic Church in a sermon entitled A Dangerous Doctrine and said: "If the Roman Catholic Church should ever become large enough and strong enough to dominate the United States, the rest of us would lose our religious freedoms."

October 11, 1960—Danville, Virginia. Rev. R. J. Barber, spokesman for the Citizens Association for Religious Liberty of Danville, said the group's campaign to keep a Catholic out of the White House was being stepped up, and that a missionary, converted from Catholicism, would be the main speaker at a rally on November 3. Rev. Barber said some 20,000 copies of a tract entitled Here Are the Facts—Let the Roman Catholic Church Speak for Heself were being distributed among 24 Protestant congregations.

October 12, 1960—Springfield, Illinois. A sharp increase was reported in the distribution of anti-Catholic propaganda in various cities of downstate Illinois. Propaganda being circulated included the spurious Abraham Lincoln's Warning and Do You Want the Pope for President?—If So, Vote A Catholic into the White House.

October 13, 1960—Clearwater, Florida. Rev. Franklin Dennis, a Fort Lauderdale minister, addressed the eleventh annual convention of Christian Churches in Florida, and predicted the end of religious freedom in the United States if Sen. Kennedy were elected.

October 15, 1960—New York City, New York. A mammoth nationwide offensive against Sen. Kennedy was scheduled to be launched "in the name of religious freedom" on Reformation Sunday, October 30th. The National Association of Evangelicals, representing thirty-eight Fundamentalist sects with 28,000 churches nationwide, was reported to be taking leadership in this campaign and an official of the organization disclosed that it had mailed anti-Catholic material to 160,000 pastors around the country.

October 15, 1960—Washington, D. C. The U. S. Department of Justice disclosed that some 144 producers of anti-Catholic literature had turned out millions of pieces of literature, costing hundreds of thousands of dollars, and Charles P. Taft, Chairman of the Fair Campaign Practices Committee, noted that "religious garbage" widely circulated during the campaign was often paid for by tax deductible gifts.

October 17, 1960—New York City, New York. The New York Times, in a special survey of the religious issue in the election campaign, reported that many conservative Protestant churchmen were planning mass distributions of anti-Catholic literature in the last ten days of the campaign and that these activities would be spurred by sermons and rallies on Reformation Sunday. The survey indicated that the anti-Catholic campaign by conservative church groups was being centrally coordinated, and that the single most widely distributed piece of anti-Catholic literature was the reprint of a sermon delivered July 3 by Rev. W. A. Criswell of Dallas, Texas.

October 19, 1960—Washington, D. C. Bishop John Wesley Lord of the Methodist Church declared that Protestants wanted to hear responsible Catholic Church sources in the United States affirm that a Catholic President would not be subjected to pressures from the Catholic Church. Bishop Lord said Sen. Kennedy had made a "completely satisfactory" statement of his own views on separation of church and state, but there was still apprehension among Protestants as to possible pressure from Senator Kennedy's church.

October 20, 1960—Fernandina Beach, Fla. A bulletin signed and sent out by the Florida Grand Dragon of the U. S. Klans, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, stated that it was the duty of "Klansmen to support the Nixon-Lodge ticket. . . We cannot vote for Kennedy because he is a Catholic."

October 20, 1960—Washington, D. C. The U. S. Department of Justice and a Senate committee were reportedly investigating the charge that John W. Curington, an employee of Texas oil millionaire H. L. Hunt, ordered and paid for distribution of reprints of a sermon by Rev. W. A. Criswell, which had been widely distributed, anonymously, throughout the country. The mailing reportedly was handled during September by a Long Island, N. Y. publishing firm and Curington reportedly paid $10,008 for reprints to be mailed to 102,000 Protestant ministers around the country.

October 21, 1960—New York City, New York. The New York World Telegram and Sun reported that a number of Protestant ministers had started a nation-wide letter writing campaign to "sympathetic ministers" implying that election of a Catholic President would jeopardize religious freedom in America. One such letter was signed by Rev. J. E. Hewlett, Pastor of the Southwest Baptist Church of St. Louis, Mo.

October 22, 1960—Brooklyn, New York. Members of the Jehovah's Witnesses sect distributed anti-Catholic literature door to door. Awake, organ of their Watchtower and Bible Tract Society, published a special issue on The Catholic Church in the 20th Century.

October 24, 1960—Minneapolis, Minnesota. Cyrus Osterhus, a leading publisher of religious tracts, said that the demand for anti-Catholic literature had increased some 400% in recent months. He said he was shipping about 3,500,000 tracts a week and that while only 2% of his leaflets could be described as anti-Catholic, they now made up the bulk of his business.

October 25, 1960—Plattsburgh, New York. City officials reported widespread mailings of anti-Catholic literature throughout Clinton County. The mailings bore Plattsburgh postmarks. One pamphlet said extra copies could be obtained from Pentecostal Evangelical Publications, Springfield, Mo. Another pamphlet entitled The Priest Who Found Christ, bore the imprint of the Scripture Truth Society, Los Angeles, California.

October 26, 1960—Charlotte, North Carolina. The Charlotte News reported that many areas of the city had been the target for an increasing flood of anti-Catholic literature in recent days. Materials were received through the mails, were placed in parked cars, and were distributed at supermarkets, shopping centers and other locations by unknown individuals. Included were such pamphlets as The White House—American or Roman?, the spurious Knights of Columbus Oath and leaflets of the Osterhus Publishing House, Minneapolis.

October 26, 1960—Springfield, Missouri. A spokesman at the headquarters of the Assemblies of God said that the organization had mailed 90,000 copies of an anti-Catholic pamphlet to its 16,000 ministers throughout the country.

October 26, 1960—Peoria, Illinois. Dr. Bruce Dunne, pastor of Grace Presbyterian Church and head of an action committee of the Evangelical Ministers Fellowship, defended distribution of 55,000 pamphlets opposing the election of Sen. Kennedy. He said distribution of the leaflets came "under the right to dissent and publicly discuss the political action issue."

October 27, 1960—Dallas, Texas. H. L. Hunt, wealthy Texas oil man, denied that he was anti-Catholic and said he had mailed out reprints of a sermon by Rev. W. A. Criswell before the Democratic National Convention in an effort to help Senator Lyndon Johnson win the nomination, and as a warning of "the bitter controversy" that would result if the religious issue were injected into the Presidential campaign. An investigator for a Senate committee said the mailings were anonymous and that Federal law required political mailings to show the sponsorship of publications being mailed. Mr. Hunt said he learned that reprints of the sermon for which he had paid had inadvertently omitted the named of Dr. Criswell.

October 30, 1960—New York City, New York. A survey of sermons delivered on Reformation Sunday indicated that Protestant pulpits had been used both for anti-Catholic and anti-prejudice declarations before millions of Protestants congregants, but that declarations from the pulpit opposing the election of a Catholic President were widespread.

November 1, 1960—Providence, Rhode Island. The Providence Evening Bulletin reported that hate literature linked to the election campaign was "seeping into Rhode Island" and that up to October 31, some 53 different publications had been received in the State, most of which attacked Sen. Kennedy, the Jews and the Negroes—in that order.

November 2, 1960—Saddle Brook, New Jersey. Some 1,000 residents received anti-Catholics leaflets, published by the Citizens Committee, Limerick, Pa., and mailed from Hackensack, N. J.

November 2, 1960—Lubbock, Texas. Dr. Ramsey Pollard, President of the Southern Baptist Convention, told the annual Texas State Baptist Convention that Sen. Kennedy was a potential agent of the Catholic Church. He delivered the keynote address before 5,000 delegates representing more than 1,500,000 members in 3,800 churches. Dr. Pollard said he spoke as an "individual" rather than for the Southern Baptist Convention officially.

November 3, 1960—Limerick, Pennsylvania. Richard C. Dean, a 25-year old recording engineer, said that he had mailed out 300,000 leaflets, questioning the fitness of a Roman Catholic to hold public office.

November 4, 1960—Los Angeles, California. The New York Times reported that dissemination of anti-Catholic literature aimed at defeating Sen. Kennedy increased in Southern California during the final week of the Presidential campaign. Richard R. Rogan, Chief Deputy Attorney General of California, said postal workers reported mail from anti-Catholic sources had been arriving in the area "by the hundreds" each day. He added that while there was no way of determining the total distribution, it probably was "several hundred thousand." Indicated points of origin included Texas, Minnesota, Colorado, Oregon, Washington, D. C. and several cities in California, including Los Angeles.

THE JOHN BIRCH SOCIETY

Fundamentalism on the Right

LAST APRIL, the Gallup Poll asked a nationwide sample of Americans whether they had heard of the John Birch Society and found that thirty-nine million persons—an extraordinary number, according to Gallup—had read or heard of the Birchers. Of these, 47 per cent had an unfavorable estimate of the Society, 8 per cent were favorable, and 45 per cent had not yet reached a judgment. In one sense, these figures suggest a firm rejection of the Birchers by majority sentiment. But the figures also indicate that at the moment when the Society was receiving its most damaging publicity —when the mass media were featuring the charge by Birch founder Robert Welch that President Eisenhower was "a dedicated, conscious agent of the Communist conspiracy"—three million persons still concluded that the Society was a commendable, patriotic, anti-Communist organization. If the undecided 45 per cent were to be divided in the same proportion as those who had reached a judgment (and this would probably underweight pro-Birch sentiment), another two and a half million persons would be added to the ranks of the approving. By this estimate it can be argued, then, that at least five and a half million Americans from among the most public-affairs conscious forty million of our adult population were favorably impressed with the John Birch Society.

One reason for this extraordinarily high degree of support is that the Birch Society has become the most appealing, activist, and efficient movement to appear on the extreme right since the fertile decade of the 1930's. Birch membership at present is probably close to sixty thousand and is distributed widely throughout the nation, with particular strength in traditional centers of fundamentalism like Houston, Los Angeles, Nashville, Wichita, and Boston. This membership provides an annual dues income of $1,300,000. Life memberships at $1,000, special donations by wealthy supporters, and sales of Society literature add perhaps $300,000 more, giving the group a present working fund of $1,600,000 a year. By its own count, the Society has twenty-eight staff workers in its home office in Belmont, Massachusetts, thirty fully salaried and expense-paid traveling coordinators, and one hundred partially paid or volunteer coordinators. Its jabbing forefinger has already been felt in the mid-section of dozens of communities, and some commentators not prone to overestimating fringe movements warn that the Society may become an effective united front for the hundreds of right-wing groups currently operating on the American scene.

All this being the case, it is worth asking

ALAN F. WESTIN, who has been contributing articles to COMMENTARY on questions of civil liberties for almost a decade, is associate professor of Public Law and Government at Columbia University. The present article is based in part on a paper Mr. Westin read last June before the plenary session of the National Community Relations Advisory Council in Washington, D.C.

what kind of group the John Birch Society is and how it compares with traditional right-wing organizations. Why has it suddenly come into prominence at this particular moment, and what are its prospects in the decade ahead?

I

HOWEVER MUCH factors like urbanization, the cold war, and status insecurities may have provided a new setting for native fundamentalists, a large and irreducible corps of such people has always existed in the United States. Unlike American liberals and conservatives—who accept the political system, acknowledge the loyalty of their opponents, and employ the ordinary political techniques—the fundamentalists can be distinguished by five identifying characteristics:

(1) They assume that there are always solutions capable of producing international victories and of resolving our social problems; when such solutions are not found, they attribute the failure to conspiracies led by evil men and their dupes.

(2) They refuse to believe in the integrity and patriotism of those who lead the dominant social groups—the churches, the unions, the business community, etc. —and declare that the American "Establishment" has become part of the conspiracy.

(3) They reject the political system; they lash out at "politicians," the major parties, and the give-and-take of political compromise as a betrayal of the fundamental Truth and as a circus to divert the people.

(4) They reject those programs for dealing with social, economic, and international problems which liberals and conservatives agree upon as minimal foundations. In their place, the fundamentalists propose drastic panaceas requiring major social change.

(5) To break the net of conspiracy they advocate "direct action," sometimes in the form of a new political party, but more often through secret organization, push-button pressure campaigns, and front groups. Occasionally "direct action" will develop into hate-propaganda and calculated violence.

At various periods, the United States has experienced both left-fundamentalism (the Knights of Labor, the Wobblies, the Populists, the Communists, the Trotskyites, and the Wallace Progressives) and right-fundamentalism (the Know-Nothings, the Coughlinites, the Silver-Shirts, and America First). Today, right-fundamentalism spans a broad spectrum. At one pole, with its passionate thousands, is the "hate" right, led by the Conde McGinleys, Gerald L. K. Smiths, Admiral Crommelins, Father Terminellos, John Kaspers, and George Rockwells, who offer various combinations of anti-Semitic, anti-Catholic, and anti-Negro sentiment. These groups are thoroughly discredited in contemporary America, and the major problem they present is a matter of defining the line which our law should draw between deviant expression and hate-mongering or advocacy of violence. At the opposite pole is the semi-respectable right. Here we encounter a variety of different political and educational organizations including the Foundation for Economic Education, the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Committee for Constitutional Government, and the White Citizens' Councils of the South. Socially prominent figures belong to such groups, which are well-financed, often have connections with local and national major party factions, and exercise substantial lobbying influence. Their supporters and leaders may long to break with the two-party system and start a rightist party, but they are restrained by the knowledge that this would isolate them and thus diminish their present effectiveness.

The John Birch Society stands between these two poles. In the words of one of its chapter leaders in Louisville, Kentucky, it is a "middle-of-the-road right-wing organization." In order to get a precise picture of its ideology and tactics, I have examined every published word issued by the Society since its formation in 1958: the 1961 annotated edition of the Blue Book of the John Birch Society, its operating manual and theological fount; the monthly Bulletins which are sent to members and contain the agenda of activities (the 1960 issues of the Bulletin are available in a bound edition titled The White Book of the John Birch Society); those writings of Robert Welch which have been officially incorporated and reprinted by the Society (e.g., The Life of John Birch, May God Forgive Us, A Letter to the South on Segregation); and every issue of American Opinion, the monthly publication edited by Robert Welch for the Society.*

MEASURED BY its official materials, the authenticated accounts of Welch's speeches, and public comments by members of the Society's Council, the Society emerges as a pure-bred specimen of American right-fundamentalism.

(1) Its image of world events and American politics is wholly conspiratorial. In the July 1960 Bulletin, Welch explains that the "key" to the advance of world Communism "is treason right within our government and the place to find it is right in Washington." The danger, Welch says in the Blue Book, "is almost entirely internal." And it is "a certainty," he writes in May God Forgive Us, that there are "more Communists and Communist sympathizers in our government today than ever before." As recently as January 1961, Welch was informing his supporters that "Communist influences are now in almost complete control of our Federal Government."

Each year since 1958, Welch and his "board of experts" have published a "scoreboard" rating all the nations of the world according to the "present degree of Communist influence and control over the economic and political affairs" of the country. In 1958, the United States was rated as 20–40 per cent under Communist control; in 1959, the United States went up to 30–50 per cent; and in 1960, the figure climbed to 40–60 per cent. (At that pace, we will reach the 80–100 per cent mark in 1964.) England's rating went from 20–40 per cent in 1958 to 50–70 per cent in 1960. Israel is presently rated as 40–60 per cent controlled; Egypt 80–100 per cent.

Everywhere, the Birchers advise, Communists are at the heart of events, even some events that might seem to less skilled observers remote from Kremlin direction. In an open letter to Khrushchev in 1958, Welch said "your hands played the decisive unseen part" in the run on American banks and their closing in 1933. It was the Communist-contrived recognition of the Soviets in 1933 that "saved them from financial collapse." The "very idea of American foreign aid was dreamed up by Stalin, or by his agents for him." The "trouble in the South over integration is Communist-contrived"; the Communists have invented a "phony 'civil rights' slogan to stir up bitterness and civil disorder, leading gradually to police-state rule by federal troops and armed resistance to that rule." The United States Supreme Court "is one of the most important agencies of Communism." The Federal Reserve system is a "realization" of "point 5" of the Communist Manifesto, calling for centralization of credit in the hands of the state. The purpose of proposed legislation requiring registration of privately-owned firearms is to aid the Communists in making "ultimate seizure of such by the government easier and more complete." Everywhere, Welch concludes, the Communists are winning: in "the press, the pulpit, the radio and television media, the labor unions, the schools, the courts, and the legislative halls of America."

* This was published by Welch before February 1958 under the slightly more modest title of One Man's Opinion.

ALL THE ABOVE descriptions of conspiratorial trends have been cited from official Birch Society literature, what Welch calls the Society's "steps to the Truth." But the picture grows darker when one turns to the Black Book, or, as it is more commonly known, The Politician—the book-length "letter" which Welch circulated "privately" to hundreds of persons but which the Society has carefully rejected as an official document. The Politician is to the Society what Leninist dogma is to the Communist front groups in Western or neutralist nations—it is the ultimate truth held by the founder and his hard-core, but it is too advanced and too powerful to present, as yet, to the "masses" being led. In The Politician, Welch names names. Presidents Roosevelt, Truman, and Eisenhower; Secretary of State John Foster Dulles; CIA Director Allen Dulles; Chief Justice Warren—all of these men are called knowing instruments of the Communist conspiracy.

It is worth noting that Eisenhower and his administration draw the strongest venom in The Politician, just as Social Democracts do in full-dose Communist literature. For Welch (a Taft supporter and McCarthy stalwart), the Eisenhower administration was a betrayal which could only have had Communists at its source. "For many reasons and after a lot of study," Welch writes, "I personally believe [John Foster] Dulles to be a Communist agent." "Allen Dulles is the most protected and untouchable supporter of Communism, next to Eisenhower himself, in Washington." Arthur H. Burns's job as head of the Council of Economic Advisers "has been merely a cover-up for Burns's liaison work between Eisenhower and some of his Communist bosses." "The chances are very strong that Milton Eisenhower is actually Dwight Eisenhower's superior and boss within the Communist Party." As for Dwight Eisenhower himself, Welch states unequivocally: "There is only one possible word to describe [Eisenhower's] purpose and actions. That word is treason." "My firm belief that Dwight Eisenhower is a dedicated, conscious agent of the Communist conspiracy," he continues, "is based on an accumulation of detailed evidence so extensive and so palpable that it seems to put this conviction beyond any reasonable doubt." Discussing what he terms Eisenhower's "mentality of fanaticism," Welch refuses to accept the idea that Ike may just be an "opportunistic politician" aiding the Communists. "I personally think he has been sympathetic to ultimate Communist aims, realistically willing to use Communist means to help them achieve their goals, knowingly accepting and abiding by Communist orders, and consciously serving the Communist conspiracy for all of his adult life."

(2) The Birchers impugn the integrity and patriotism of those at the head of the major social and economic groups of the nation. In a supplement to the February 1961 Bulletin, Welch announced that "Communist influences" are "very powerful in the top echelons of our educational system, our labor-union organizations, many of our religious organizations, and of almost every important segment of our national life. Insidiously but rapidly the Communists are now reaching the tentacles of their conspiracy downward throughout the whole social, economic, and political pyramid." Thus, the National Council of Churches of Christ is Communist-minded, and from 3 to 5 per cent of the Protestant clergy have been called actual Communists. "Treason," Welch further declares, "is widespread and rampant in our high army circles." The American Medical Association has been "took" and can no longer be depended upon for support in the fight against socialism. So too with the United States Chamber of Commerce, which has been preaching dangerously liberal and internationalist doctrines in its courses on practical politics. (When Chamber leaders protested this slur, Welch replied that their outraged reaction was exactly like that of the State Department in the 1940's when charges of Communist infiltration were first raised.) The leadership of our universities, corporations, foundations, communications media—all are riddled with Communists, or "Comsymps" (a word Welch coined to avoid having to say whether a given person was a real party member or only a sympathizer).

Naturally, Welch and his colleagues are certain that these "Comsymp" elites are out to destroy him and his movement. References to persecution and images of martyrdom abound in Birch literature, ranging from incessant mention of how the patron saint (Senator McCarthy) was driven to his death, to suggestions that Welch may be murdered one day by the Communists.

(3) The Birchers are convinced that the Communists have gone so far in penetrating American politics that there is little hope in the existing political system. In his letter to Khrushchev, Welch wrote that the Communists obviously intended to "maintain and increase [their] working control over both our major political parties." We cannot count on "politicians, political leadership or even political action." Though he advocates the nomination, on an American Party ticket, of Senator Barry Goldwater for President and J. Strom Thurmond for Vice President in 1964, Welch has warned his followers that even Goldwater—the most "Americanist" figure around in politics at the moment—is "still a politician" and therefore not to be relied upon. Welch has also had some things to say about "Jumping Jack". Kennedy. According to Welch, the nation received "the exact Communist line . . . from Jack Kennedy's speeches, as quickly and faithfully as from the Worker or the National Guardian. . . . " And in 1959, Welch denounced the "Kennedy brat" for "finding the courage to join the jackals picking at the corpse of McCarthy."

A PARTICULARLY revealing sample of Welch's sense of American political realities is found in his description of the Eisenhower "steal" of the Republican nomination in 1952, one of the "dirtiest deals in American political history, participated in if not actually engineered by Richard Nixon." If Taft had not been cheated of the nomination, Welch predicted:

> It is almost certain that Taft would then have been elected President by a far greater plurality than was Eisenhower, that a grand rout of the Communists in our government and in our midst would have been started, that McCarthy would be alive today, and that we wouldn't even be in this mess. . . .

(4) Most of the Birch Society's positive program consists of advocating the repeal of things or the removal of the nation from something or somewhere. A partial list of the things that the Society describes as wicked, Communist, and dangerous includes: U.S. membership in the United Nations, the International Labor Organization, the World Health Organization, the International Trade Organization, and UNICEF; membership in GATT (the General Agreement on Trades and Tariffs); reciprocal trade agreements; the "useless and costly" NATO; "so-called defense spending"; all foreign aid; diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union and all other Communist nations; the National Labor Relations Act; social security; the graduated income tax; the Rural Electrification Administration, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and TVA; government wage and price controls; "forced integration"; "deliberately fraudulent" U.S. government bonds; the Federal Reserve system; urban renewal; fluoridation; metro government; the corporate dividend tax; the "mental health racket"; federal aid to housing; and all programs "regimenting" farmers.

Some items on this list may be opposed by conservatives or by liberals. But taken together, it adds up to a nihilist's plea for the repeal of industrialism and the abolition of international politics. Such a program can be called rational or even political only by people who do not know what those words mean.

(5) Finally, the Birch Society advocates both "direct action" and "dirty tactics" to "break the grip of the Communist conspiracy." Unlike those right-fundamentalist groups which have energetic leaders but passive memberships, the Birchers are decidedly activist. "Get to work or learn to talk Russian," is a slogan Welch recommends to his followers, and they are certainly hard at work. From national headquarters in Belmont, Massachusetts, Welch formulates a set of complementary national and local action programs, then issues them to members through directives in the Bulletin and contacts with chapter leaders. A mixture of traditional and fundamentalist techniques is prescribed. The local programs include infiltration of community organizations such as PTA ("to take them away from the Communists"); harassment of "pro-Communist" speakers at church meetings, political gatherings, and public forums; creation of local front groups (e.g., the Committee Against Summit Entanglements, College Graduates Against Educating Traitors at Government Expense, the Committee to Impeach Earl Warren, and the Committee to Investigate Communist Influences at Vassar College); campaigns to secure endorsement of Birch positions and signatures for Birch petitions in all groups that Birch members belong to (e.g., veterans and business organizations); letters and telephone calls to local public officials, leading citizens, and newspapers who support what the Society opposes or oppose the Society directly; monthly telephone calls to the local public library to make sure it has copies of the five right-wing books recommended by Welch every month.

The national campaigns are carefully pinpointed efforts. They range from letter- and postcard-writing to national advertising campaigns. In the past two years, Birchers have been told to: write the National Boy Scouts director and demand to know why the president of the National Council of Churches addressed their National Jamboree; insist personally and in writing each time a member flies American, United, or Eastern Airlines that they stock Human Events and National Review on their planes; write to Newsweek to protest a "pro-FLN Communist" story (the Society has a crush on Jacques Soustelle), to Life protesting the "glorification" of Charles Van Doren, and to the NBC network and the Purex Corporation for sponsoring a TV drama favorable to Sacco and Vanzetti; circulate petitions and write letters on the number one project of the moment, to impeach Chief Justice Warren and thereby "give the Communists a setback." Welch also sends out the copy for punchy postcards to be addressed to national political leaders. To cite instances in 1960 alone: to Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. at the UN, "Two questions, Mr. Lodge—Who Murdered Bang-Jensen? And Which Side are You On?"; to Secretary of State Christian Herter, "Castro is a Communist. Trujillo is an anti-Communist. Whose Side are You On?"; and to President Eisenhower, on the eve of the scheduled summit conference, "Dear President Eisenhower—If you go, don't come back."

The last postcard stirred some protests from Society members, who felt that Welch's savage little message to the President was a bit too strong. Welch set them straight in the Bulletin: "It is one of our many sorrows that, in fighting the evil forces which now threaten our civilization, for us to be too civilized is unquestionably to be defeated." The Communists, he continued, want us to be "too gentle, too respectable . . . [but] this is not a cream-puff war . . . and we do mean business every step of the way." Welch admitted that the technique of planted and loaded questions and the disruption of meetings was a "dirty trick," but he still defended it as another vital tactic.

To stimulate compliance by members with the local and national efforts prescribed each month in the Bulletin, Welch has devised the MMM system, or "Member's Monthly Memos." These forms are filled out by the member detailing what he or she has done and including sundry observations on the "Americanist fight." They are then collected by the chapter leader and transmitted to Belmont. Welch and his staff, according to the Bulletin, spend much time going over the MMM's.

SO FAR, the Birch Society has been successful in attracting to it some highly substantial figures in local communities—physicians, stockbrokers, retired military officers, lawyers, businessmen (particularly small and middle-sized manufacturers in the Midwest and South), and professionals, many of whom have become local chapter leaders and state coordinators. The Council of the Society is a veritable board of directors of right-fundamentalism: men like Colonel Lawrence Bunker, Cola G. Parker, T. Coleman Andrews, Clarence Manion, and Spruille Braden. Among the contributing editors and editorial advisory committee for American Opinion are J. B. Matthews, William S. Schlamm, Kenneth Colegrove, J. Bracken Lee, Ludwig von Mises, Adolph Menjou, J. Howard Pew, and Albert C. Wedemeyer. In several communities, observers of the Society have noted a significant number of thirty-to-forty-year-olds joining the organization. Welch has stated that half of the Society's membership is Catholic, that there are some Jewish members, and that there are Negroes also—two segregated locals in the South and integrated chapters in the North.

Press reports suggest that most of the Society's members already had strong affiliations with other right-wing groups before the Birch Society was formed. What Welch hopes to do is build a one-million member organization by welding together the masses of right-fundamentalist joiners into the fighting educational and pressure arm of the John Birch Society. In the Bulletin and American Opinion, Welch continually offers flattering salutes to various right-wing groups, publications, and personalities, stressing that "Americanists" can work in several forums at once for the cause. In May 1961, for example, Welch listed two pages of "other anti-Communist groups" which he endorsed and urged Birchers to support. These included the American Coalition of Patriotic Societies, the American Council of Christian Laymen, the Cardinal Mindszenty Foundation, the Catholic Freedom Foundation, the Christian Crusade, the Freedom Club (of Los Angeles), Freedom in Action (Houston), the Intercollegiate Society of Individualists, the Network of Patriotic Letter Writers (Pasadena), and We, The People! (Chicago). In turn, Welch's appearances are often sponsored by such groups: the Freedom Club of Reverend James Fifield arranged his Los Angeles rally, and the Sons of the American Revolution sponsored his Houston appearance.

To a large extent, Welch's personal selflessness and his salesmanship have already made him a rallying point for the fundamentalist right, and no recent right-wing group comes to mind which has achieved so large and solid a dues-paying and working membership. In a world of Communist advances in Asia and Africa, pressures on Berlin, vast changes in the relation of white to colored populations throughout the world, the Birch Society has developed a thoroughly satisfying way for the thin-lipped little lady from Wichita or the self-made manufacturer of plumbing fixtures in North Carolina to work in manageable little daily doses against "the Communists." The cancer of the unquestioned international Communist menace and the surgery of local pressure on the PTA and public library—here is a perfect appeal for right fundamentalism. This highlights the fact that the Society's most successful efforts to date have not been on the national scene but on the "soft underbelly" of American democracy—those places where a minimum of pressure can often produce maximum terror and restrictive responses. Welch has stressed that school boards, city colleges, local businesses, local clergy, and similar targets are the ones to concentrate on. Above all, Welch has brought coordination to the fundamentalist right—coordinated targets, coordinated meetings and rallies, and coordinated pressure tactics. "All of a sudden," the director of a Jewish Community Council in one city reflected, "the right wingers began to function like a disciplined platoon. We have had to contend with precision and saturation ever since."

II

IF THIS IS WHAT the Society advocates and how it functions, what are its immediate and long-range prospects? In the short run, the Society has lost one of its most potent weapons—the element of secrecy. Those in local communities who felt the sting of Birch campaigns during 1959–61 report that it was the factor of surprise at these sudden fundamentalist pressures and the unawareness of their organizational source which threw them off balance. Now, however, the Society has been brought into public view. Its authoritarian character and extremist statements have been attacked in both liberal and conservative newspapers; by important Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish leaders; and by political figures as diverse as Richard Nixon, President John Kennedy, Attorney General Robert Kennedy, Representative Sam Rayburn, Senator Thomas E. Dodd, and even Senator Barry Goldwater himself. The fact that a prominent leader of the Society who had been chosen as Washington lobbyist for the American Retail Federation was hastily discarded in June by the Federation because of his Birch affiliation indicates that recent publicity has damaged the Society's claim to respectability. One Midwestern Congressman known for his open advocacy of right-wing movements felt it wise recently to seek out liberal leaders from his community and explain privately that he did not support the Birch movement. Increasingly, those "solid" figures who joined the group when it was operating privately will have to face public disapproval of the Society, and this will probably cause some falling away among border-line conservatives.

In the longer perspective, however, there are three specific factors which deserve mention in assessing the Society's potential growth. The first is the authoritarian character of the group and the centralized control exercised by Robert Welch (a situation which has led Senator Goldwater to criticize Welch directly). According to the charter of the Society, Welch is the absolute leader; there is no accounting of dues or contributions; there is no representative process or democratic system for selecting programs or defining positions; and Welch has the power (which he has used) to expel any member or chapter for reasons sufficient to him, without right of hearing or appeal on the expulsion. This has produced widespread criticism of Welch as a "little Hitler" and the Society as a group run on fascist lines. However, Welch has stressed again and again that members can disagree with him; that he doesn't expect any member to carry out a project which violates his conscience; and that the Society definitely opposes an "enforced conformity" within its ranks. The controls, Welch explains, are needed to prevent Communist infiltration of the Society (which he believes has already begun or will certainly begin as the Society becomes more effective) and infiltration by hate-mongers. This blend of leader-principle and group self-protection has great appeal to right-fundamentalists and even to some right-wing conservatives. The authoritarian set-up makes fine ammunition for liberal and mainstream-conservative fire, but this is not likely to harm Welch a bit in his recruiting among fundamentalists.

A second factor is Welch himself. The fantastic allegations he has made in The Politician—even though the book has not been endorsed by the Council and is, indeed, repudiated by some members—have branded him as an unbalanced figure and convinced many staunch conservatives that Welch is a truly dangerous leader. The conservative Los Angeles Times recently did a thorough exposé of the Society and wrote a stinging editorial which read Welch out of the conservative camp. Out of self-defense, Republicans in California joined in with the Times (especially in condemning Welch's attacks on Eisenhower), for the Birchers were proving so effective in pulling the Republican party to the far right that some counterattack was felt to be essential. Welch himself has been highly equivocal about The Politician. He insists that it was a "private" letter and never published, though he does not deny its authenticity. In the May 1961 issue of the Bulletin, he alludes to "questions or criticism from some of our most loyal members" relating to The Politician. To these, he replies that "the considerations involved in connection with many such matters are varied, overlapping, involved, and with too many ramifications to be explained in short compass. There are even times when, for reasons of strategy, we take an oblique approach to a specific objective, and fully to explain every step of our course would seriously handicap our effectiveness." Having decided not to say anything at all, Welch assured members that if he "could give . . . the whole background of events" then objections might turn into approval, and with this, he dropped the subject of his magnum opus.

Those members and leaders of the Society who find anything to criticize in The Politician (and many have fully endorsed the charges it featured) have stressed that Welch is entitled to his personal views and that their disagreement with him on Ike or the two Dulles brothers indicates how free and diverse the Society is.

In all probability Welch's talents as an organizer, salesman, proselytizer, and unifier of right-wing ranks overweigh (for the right-wing aristocracy) his tactical blunder in The Politician. Since he controls the Society fully, he is not likely to be replaced, and, indeed, there is no indication that an acceptable replacement is available either in the Society or outside it. As long as he heads the Society, however, The Politician will severely limit his credibility outside fundamentalist strongholds.

A THIRD FACTOR relating to the Birch Society's immediate prospects is the question of anti-Semitism. Repeated charges have been made that the Society is a genteel endorser of anti-Semitic persons and literature. Welch has recommended to his members such anti-Semitic publications as Russell Maguire's American Mercury and Merwin K. Hart's Economic Council Newsletter. Hart—who often talks about a conspiracy of "Zionists and their confederates" controlling America and whose organization was described by a Congressional committee investigating lobbying as one which relies on "an ill-concealed anti-Semitism"—is presently leader of the Birch Society's Manhattan Chapter No. 26. In addition, such openly anti-Semitic spokesmen as Conde McGinley have rushed to endorse the Birch Society. In the March 15, 1961 issue of Common Sense, McGinley wrote: "Inasmuch as we have received many inquiries from all over the United States regarding the John Birch Society, we want to go on record. We believe this to be an effective, patriotic group, in good hands."

On the other hand, Welch has always appealed to all religions, has urged Jews to join the Society, and has warned that it is a "Communist tactic to stir up distrust and hatred between Jews and Gentiles, Catholics and Protestants, Negroes and Whites." Much of the April 1961 issue of his Bulletin is devoted to a discussion of the allegation that the Society is anti-Semitic, and what Welch has to say there is well worth close examination.

He opens by noting that "the most vicious" charges leveled against him have come from "such notorious anti-Semites as Lyrl Clark Van Hyning (Women's Voice) and Elizabeth Dilling (the Dilling Bulletin) on the grounds that my various committees and supporters are nothing but a 'bunch of Jews and Jew-kissers.'..." He then cites the names of Jewish members of the Society such as Willi Schlamm, Julius Epstein, Morrie Ryskind, the late Alfred Kohlberg, and Rabbi Max Merritt, and indicates that it has been endorsed by the American Jewish League Against Communism (a Jewish right-fundamentalist group). Next, Welch explains that he probably has "more good friends of the Jewish faith than any other Gentile in America." When he was in the candy manufacturing business in Massachusetts, he recalls, he had many Jewish customers; he drank coffee in their kitchens at midnight, borrowed money from them and lent them money in return, and engaged in every kind of business and social activity with Jews.

Turning to some specific accusations, Welch admits that he used a pamphlet by Joseph Kamp as a source for his book, May God Forgive Us, and also paid Kamp a hundred dollars to go through The Life of John Birch to find errors. This was in 1954. But later, he says, he became "aware of both the fact and the weapon of anti-Semitism in America, and I wanted no part of the whole argument." He had nothing further to do with Kamp after the 1954 contact, but he adds that he still simply doesn't know enough to say whether Kamp is really anti-Semitic.

Welch goes on to relate that a person who had been trying to convert one local chapter into "a hotbed of anti-Semitism" was dropped from the Society, and he pledges that the Society will never become a haven for anti-Semitic feeling "so long as I am directing its policies." After several additional paragraphs explaining why no member of the Jewish faith can also be a Communist (and pointing out that Karl Marx was "probably the most vicious anti-Semite of all times"), Welch concludes with the following warning:

> There is only one real danger in the charge of anti-Semitism today, to the man who actually is not anti-Semitic. It is that the utter (and in some cases malicious) unfairness of the charge may cause him to react with anger against Jews in general, and then begin to let some of his feeling creep into his writings or his speeches. That brings on even more vitriolic attacks, with a few more straws to support them. And so the development continues until the man in question winds up actually becoming violently anti-Semitic. And he seldom realizes that this was the Communist game and purpose all along, of which the majority of Jews who innocently helped the Reds to implement it were as unaware and innocent as the ordinary Methodist who supports the National Council of Churches. And many an anti-Communist fighter of great promise in America has had his career ruined and his effectiveness destroyed by letting himself fall into that carefully prepared trap.

This will never happen to him, Welch declares; to his "thousands of Jewish friends" he pledges, "I shall remain your friend, no matter what happens. . . ."*

All the evidence available at the moment suggests the presence of a certain ambivalence in the Birch Society on the matter of anti-Semitism. Welch himself seems to be personally without bias toward Jews, and he wants the Society to reflect this position. Yet there is no doubt that some local leaders and members are well-known anti-Semites. With one after another of the rabbinical associations and major Jewish civic groups speaking out in complete condemnation of Welch and his movement, there will be rising pressures to respond to the "Jewish attacks." Probably, Welch will continue to allow some light flirtation with the more sophisticated anti-Semitic spokesmen. But it is a testimony to American maturity and the activities of Jewish defense agencies that open anti-Semitism is seen as a dead end today for any "middle-of-the-road right-wing organization."

* One other bit of information bearing on Welch's attitude is that he has been consistently anti-Nasser, viewing the Arab nationalists as aiding the Communists in gaining control of the Middle East.

One final aspect of the Society should be noted. Welch's writings have a remarkable combination of fantastic allegation and sweet reasonableness. Along with his proposals advocating drastic action against the Communist agents all over America will go reminders to be polite while making menacing telephone calls to local officials, to exercise self-restraint when attacked unfairly, and to take no action which violates "moral principles." "It is a major purpose of the John Birch Society," he often explains, one "never to be overlooked by its members, to help in every way we can—by example as well as precept—to restore an abiding sense of moral values to greater use as a guide of conduct for individuals, for groups, and ultimately for nations." If there are some right-fundamentalists to whom this sort of passage sounds a bit like the National Council of Churches, the total blend of warm-hearted, main-street vigilantism is still appealing to the majority of Welch's followers.

III

WHATEVER THE specific prospects for the Birch Society —and I consider them unhappily bright —the 1960's will surely be years of expansion for the fundamentalist right in this country. Several things point toward that conclusion.

First, this will be a decade of immense frustration for American foreign policy. We will witness increased neutralism among the new nations; increased militancy among the non-white peoples over questions of color; constant military and scientific pressures from the Russians and, soon, the Chinese Communists; diminished American influence in the United Nations; greater conflict in Latin America; and continued outlays of foreign assistance which do not "buy loyalties" or "deliver votes" on critical issues. If the United States can simply prevent these situations from exploding, most informed students of diplomacy would think we had done well. But cutting losses inflicted by the stagnant 1950's and preparing hopeful future positions is not going to appeal to the right-fundamentalist masses (or the frantic pacifist variety on the left either). The right is unshakable in its faith in unilateral solutions and its belief that each loss for America can be traced to a Communist agent or "Comsymp" in the CIA, at the New York Times, in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, or at the Yale Law School. And the inescapable strategic retreats of the early 1960's (Laos is a good example) will lend fuel to the fires on the right.

Second, the domestic racial issue also poses a serious threat of a rise in right-fundamentalism. In the 1960's, the struggle for Negro equality will move increasingly into areas outside the South. Lower-middle-class and middle-class resentments against Negro neighbors and Negro competitors are bound to increase. The crescendo of Negro militancy and the spreading use of government power to enforce civil rights will peel away the already thinned layers of toleration in many sectors of the Northern and Western population. In this area of public policy, groups like the Birch Society—which are not explicitly anti-Negro but oppose compulsory integration—have a promising position, and the reservoirs of white hostility, unless carefully and wisely channeled by both white and Negro liberal leaders, could fill the well of the fundamentalist right to overflowing.

Third, there exists the distinct possibility of an unprecedented coalition of Catholic and Protestant right-fundamentalists in the 1960's. Only those who know little about the history of American Catholicism would assume that this is a monolithic community. Yet many factors suggest that the 1960's may see an even deeper division of American Catholics into warring ideological factions than has obtained at any time in the past. Already some influential Catholics are complaining bitterly that President Kennedy has joined the "Liberalist Establishment," that he has been "selling out" Catholic Church interests, and that the administration of the first Catholic President may go down in history as the "softest on Communism." This is far from the dominant view among American Catholics. Indeed, it may represent the last thrashing of the old, super-loyalist element in the American Catholic community—a group which will be goaded to extremism by the sight of an a-clerical, literate, sophisticated Catholic liberal in the White House. Under these conditions, and with the magic memory of Joseph McCarthy to help bridge the chasm of the Reformation, the fundamentalist Protestants and the fundamentalist Catholics may enter into an alliance (possibly inside the Birch Society).

BUT PERHAPS the central question mark for right-fundamentalism in the 1960's is not issues or groups but a man—Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona. At the moment, he is the beloved crusader of the right and he has given his fundamentalist supporters every possible encouragement. Before very much longer, however, as the jockeying for position in 1964 begins, Goldwater will have to decide whether he wants to be a Republican presidential hopeful and Senate leader or the head of an ideological crusade. If he chooses two-party politics, Goldwater will have to undercut the Birch Society, for it could embarrass him by its extremism, and it is not under his control. (Already, Goldwater has called on Welch to resign because of his authoritarian controls and his charges against Eisenhower.) Many experienced observers of Washington politics doubt whether Goldwater has the personality and the paranoia to become a fundamentalist ideologue and wander in a political wilderness. However, if Goldwater should lose the Republican nomination to someone like Nelson Rockefeller and if he were to decide that there was no hope for his ambitions within the GOP, he could mold the fundamentalist right into a cohesive movement which would assume immediate political influence.

These, then, are the factors which point to a resurgence of the far right wing in the 1960's. But, it should be said on the other side, a rejuvenated and expanded liberal movement is also likely to develop in the United States during the next few years. The signs are already present on American college campuses, where a decade of student apathy and fatalism is giving way to a revival of both liberal and (respectable) conservative political commitment. Whether the Kennedy administration will move from its first year of dreary if realistic compromise to give direction and enthusiasm to the liberal cause remains to be seen. At any rate, the resources are there to be marshaled, and they are potentially our greatest protection against the mounting right-fundamentalist threat.

STATEMENT BY ARNOLD FORSTER

at Ford Hall Forum in Boston, Massachusetts on Sunday, October 29, 1961

You are a very nice looking group, and a comparatively large one, as meetings of this kind go these days.

But I am not overly impressed because I am becoming sort of used to large audiences. Earlier this month I attended another meeting. There were 1,600 people there and they were as well dressed as you appear to be -- certainly, as a group, they were on a high economic level, and they had come together in a gracious suburban community.

It was in no sense an assemblage of unemployed malcontents or crackpots. Indeed, I estimated that at least ¼ of the room was filled with college-age men and women, and with upper middle-class couples in their early 30's. Most of the rest were people who, from their fine dress, their social presence, had arrived, so-to-speak, economically.

I should tell you that I waited to buy a ticket of admission -- in a line 4 deep, almost a block long -- for more than an hour before the meeting began.

There are, to be sure, two real differences in the character of that gathering in Garden City and this one tonight. There we listened to the speaker for one continuous hour and forty minutes. I promise you far less time from me. Second, was the Alice-In-Wonderland quality about that meeting compared to the very real down-to-earth nature that this one seems already to have.

By now, of course, you must be aware that I attended the Long Island meeting of the John Birch Society where I heard Robert Welch, its leader, talk.

He turned the world inside out and upside down -- not only in his formal presentation but in his answers to questions in the discussion period. At long length I heard him prove -- at least to the satisfaction of many in the hall -- that Communism is an evil imposed upon the masses across the world by the millionaire class; a method of enslaving the poor people who inhabit the earth. It was difficult to believe that his listeners, dressed expensively, sporting jewelry, using '61 and '62 automobiles, could swallow the story.

I listened to his explanation of his so-called "principle of reversal" -- and was overcome again with that never-never-land feeling: If a man admits he is a Communist, then you know he is. After that things are never what they seem. If a man denies he is a Communist, then he must be one because he denies it.

That may be an oversimplification, but it is not an inaccurate analysis of how the principle works. He applied it the evening of the Garden City meeting. The legal decision, he said, handed down that very day by the U. S. Supreme Court, requiring the Communist Party to register against its will -- that decision is no evidence the Court understands the evil of Communism; on the contrary, it is proof that the Supreme Court secretly approves Communism.

His villains that night were the Republicans, the Democrats, Earl Warren, Urban Renewal, the United Nations, and Franklin D. Roosevelt. His hero was the late Senator Joe McCarthy.

Not a word of anti-Semitism passed Mr. Welch's lips; certainly none that I could detect -- and in this narrow field, at least, I consider myself as somewhat expert. He even avoided that kind of innuendo which the audience could interpret as a covert expression of anti-Jewish hostility. I came to the conclusion that Robert Welch knows full well anti-Semitism can be a kiss of death.

The same, however, cannot be said for a large number of people in his audience. There was a question-and-answer period during which Mr. Welch had no control either over a question posed out loud or the reaction of the listeners to the question. Thus, when one person stood to his feet demanding to know "Who promoted Peress?" -- this was the signal for the knowing oohs and aahs across the room, and the sudden burst of approving applause.

During the course of his presentation, the Birch leader had talked about the infiltration of Communist agents into the Protestant clergy, mentioning, in passing, that there was some of it, too, in the Roman Catholic Priesthood. This provoked, during the question-and-answer period, a query from a lady who wanted to know what the situation was among Rabbis. Again, even before he could answer, the room reacted to the question with a quick, enthusiastic round of applause -- applause which could only be interpreted as the audience's inarticulate way of saying, "Ah, now we are putting our finger on the real problem."

I think even Welch detected it, and after saying vaguely that he supposed there was some infiltration in the rabbinate, added that there probably was also infiltration in the Moslem priesthood. This last comment was deliberately misinterpreted by his listeners. They reacted as if he was being humorously sly. They pretended that his answer was meant to convey to them: "Yes, the Jews are the core of the problem, but if we say it that bluntly, we will be charged with anti-Semitism. So let's blame all religions and with equal absurdity include the Moslems."

Now any one of you is free to reject my analysis of the Garden City audience; purely personal and perhaps visceral. In that case, let's approach the matter on a somewhat more intellectual level:

I begin by stating my opposition to the Birch Society because that organization regards democracy as an evil and as a sure road to Communism. I respect democracy, its political and ethical concepts, and the integrity of its institutions. As a lawyer, I specifically include the institution of the American Judiciary.

In this connection, the Society is guilty of attempts to pressure our courts of law by threats and other forms of browbeating. Whether the target be the Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court or the lowliest police magistrate, this is a fundamental violation of our constitutional concepts and subversive of the American form of government.

Mr. Welch has declared -- and I quote -- "Democracy...in government or organization...is merely a deceptive phrase, a weapon of demogoguery and a perennial fraud." -- Nor am I reassured, even though Mr. Welch has also declared that the United States is not a democracy but a republic, and we ought to keep it that way.

The Birch movement is a matter of grave concern to all Americans. Why? Because in our country voluntary agencies traditionally play an important role -- for good or evil -- and the John Birch Society is the latest voluntary know-nothing organization in America. We have seen what damage know-nothing movements can do. In your lifetime and mine, we have had Coughlinism, America First and the McCarthy Movement -- and now their successor, Birch. This one has two features the others lacked: a leader with a great capacity to organize and a technique of secrecy -- secrecy of action through "front organizations."

Why should we be concerned about a radical right-wing organization composed of a small band of extremists on the fringe of American political life who see all problems in conspiratorial terms? Because the John Birch Society is part of a larger movement. While clearly the most notorious and best publicized of the radical right-wing groups on the American scene -- it is only one of many new ones on the far right.

Some 95 groups -- from conservative to extremist right-wing -- have sprung up in the United States, most of them within the last two years. Of the 95, I count 18 new ones in 1960, and 44 in 1961; in short, more in the first six months of this year than in any similar period in the last twenty.

In less than three years the Birch Society has developed a gross annual income of about a million and a half dollars from dues, honorary life memberships, special contributions, and the sale of literature. Although it will release no membership figures, experts in the field say that those who pay dues number about 60,000. Its paid staff consists of approximately 63 men and women.

While substantial, the movement is obviously not quite as big as its press notices would indicate. The fact is that the Society earns extravagant amounts of publicity by Welch's outrageous charges of Communism against such Americans as former President Eisenhower, the late John Foster Dulles, or an unidentified group of several hundred Roman Catholic priests.

No one is safe. Monseignor Francis J. Lally, editor of "The Pilot" here in Boston, is one of those who might well be tagged by Mr. Welch. The Monseignor was among the American editors who spoke up in an excellent editorial, published on October 14th, in defense of the Catholic clergy after Mr. Welch at Garden City in effect charged 273 Catholic Priests with being Communists.

Thank the good sense of the American press that -- like Monseignor Lally and "The Pilot" -- the major amount of newspaper comment has been adverse; examination shows that in the period from June 1st to October 15, 1961, the press has been overwhelmingly critical.

Mr. Welch contends that the Communists are responsible for precipitating the press attack upon his organization -- part of the conspiracy, of course. It was, he claims, triggered by a "signal" given in an article published on February 25, 1961 in the Communist "People's World" which circulates on the West Coast. He referred to that article as the "mother piece" for all that followed, adding that "Time Magazine" was the first in line. But his charge does not square with the facts. The plain truth is that the "People's World" was a "Johnny-Come-Lately."

Back in July 1960, newspapers in the Mid-West uncovered and published the details of Welch's accusations in his then-secret manuscript "The Politician."

One of your own newspapers here in Boston ran a series a few weeks later; the "Boston Herald." The reporter was Stanley Eames. The articles -- which cited Welch's fantasies from "The Politician" -- appeared in the last week of August 1960. Wasn't Mr. Welch aware of these articles in his own backyard, when he charged that the Reds had given the "signal" in February 1961 -- six months after the "Boston Herald" expose?

The John Birch Society would never have received its nationwide notoriety if its Founder had not written "The Politician" -- the book he called a confidential letter -- with its outlandish allegations of treason. However, under any circumstances, some of its leadership stands sufficiently high in the community power-structure to win the group a hearing from newspaper editors. Local leaders and members of the Society are, in many cases, people of financial responsibility and social status in their communities. They are often able to exert considerable influence and impact at the local level when they decide to put the pressure on a school teacher, or a school superintendent, or a school board.

In affirmation of his hatred of democracy, Mr. Welch has structured his Society in an un-democratic fashion: The organization is centrally-controlled and tightly run by the Founder himself. Everything operates from the top down; Mr. Welch picks his national organizers for the Society; they report directly to him; chapter leaders report to national, regional or local organizers picked by Mr. Welch or his agents. Founder Welch himself has a good business head, considerable business experience, a great capacity for attention to details, and an enormous will for hard work and sole leadership.

Mr. Welch makes no bones about who is the boss. I quote -- "The John Birch Society will operate under completely authoritative control at all levels" --

The "Blue Book" -- as you probably know -- is a verbatim transcript of Welch's incredible two-day monologue, delivered at the founding meeting of the Society in December 1958, in Indianapolis. There, eleven of his close associates -- obviously men of tremendous endurance -- listened patiently before agreeing to launch the organization.

At another point in the "Blue Book" Mr. Welch says that members who no longer feel the necessary degree of loyalty can either resign or they will be put out; and he also declares that -- I quote -- "We shall have short cuts for eliminating differences without going through any Congress of so-called democratic processes." --

If the authoritarian structure of the Birch organization is elementary, its basic premises are primitive: First, it believes in the conspiratorial theory of history and politics. Conspiracy is always the answer. Second, it believes that the Communist conspiracy has already captured control of most of the world -- including the United States -- and because it is already victorious here on our shores, battle must now be done to recapture the country from the enemy.

That both premises are false is patent and demonstrable.

It's almost incredible that we should be here tonight seriously discussing a group whose leader believes his own obviously false assumptions -- if I may, his own political fantasies -- fantasies that a former President was a Communist agent... as was a member of the family...as was a former Secretary of State -- and a member of his family also. True, a world of fantasy. But a world which unfortunately seems also to be the ideological dwelling place of at least 60,000 other Americans.

Perhaps not all his followers agree with everyting he says. Some Birchites have gone to great lengths to disassociate themselves from his views about General George C. Marshall and other great American leaders he has smeared. They say these views are personal, nor organizational.

The contention is untenable -- because, by his own statements, Welch has made it clear that he is the Society -- that the Society is a monolithic organization in which he is the central moving spirit. Any attempt to separate the two fails.

But even if they were separable -- how do you explain so many Americans who are willing to join a leader holding such incredible viewpoints?

I think there is an explanation: If the Society's members are uneasy or embarrassed by his more sensational views, they nevertheless live in the same fantasy-land with Mr. Welch.

What kind of place is it which these men and women populate? It is a world whose inhabitants assume that there must be solutions that will produce victories on the international scene and will resolve all our domestic problems. If no easy solutions are forthcoming, there must somewhere be a conspiracy preventing it. The see the world around them -- the churches, the press, radio and television, the unions -- almost all the established institutions in our free society -- in the grip of Communist conspirators, or their sympathizers.

Those who disagree with this view are naturally a part of the conspiracy, for there can be no honest basic differences of opinion: you are a Bircher -- or you are a Red, or a tool -- and this applies to anyone from Republican to left-wing Socialists. Most ridiculous of all, the Birchers view the government itself -- and its political leaders -- as just another part of the same pack of Communist agents or dupes -- no one of them to be trusted.

One other dimension to the Birch philosophy. It is this: There is no hope of salvation through the ballot box. "Direct action" is necessary -- through secret or semi-secret cells; through high pressure campaigns such as "Impeach Earl Warren"; through "front" groups, and by means of a whole flood of crash programs and emergency actions that reflect only their neurotic fears and distorted views.

Now we know who is the Society's enemy -- practically anybody. Made possible by the "principle of reversal" -- which can turn any loyal citizen into a traitor with the wave of a Birch wand. Keep the principle in mind and the Communists are really in favor of many things they profess to oppose; they say they are against something only in order to make us be for it.

For example, Mr. Welch has characterized the late U. N. Secretary General -- Dag Hammarskjold -- as a Kremlin agent. When the Soviet attacked Mr. Hammarskjold and fought for his ouster, the Communists, Mr. Welch tells us, were only doing so to provoke us into insisting that Hammarskjold be kept in his U. N. post -- which is what Khrushchev really wanted.

Again: Founder Welch believes that the Soviets really sent the first Sputnik into orbit because they wanted us to increase our defense spending, and thus weaken ourselves economically.

If we increase our military spending, we play into the Kremlin's hands. If we reduce American military might, we are also playing into the Kremlin's hands. Heads they win, tails we lose.

If all this were merely ridiculous, I think we could live with it -- even if many thousands of our fellow citizens on the fringe of our political life believe it. But there is cause for genuine concern. For this inside-out reasoning -- the unsound major premise -- carries with it a tremendous potential for harm to our country and to a genuine effort to stem the tide of world Communism. The simple truth is that the Birchers do not sow understanding, they sow confusion. They do not contribute to a calm, firm national effort to combat Communism; they sow fear, semi-hysteria, panic.

Why haven't I told you what they are for? Why have I withheld from you the content of their constructive program? I haven't withheld anything; they have no positive, no constructive program. They are not for anything; they are only against. Being against is the only program Welch offers his followers.

To impeach the Presiding Justice of the United States Supreme Court, is a typical campaign— and such destructive activities deeply involve Birch members in the work of the organization; it keeps them busy on a continuing basis carrying out assigned tasks; it requires chapter meetings, special projects, local Birch reading rooms. You see the Society member does not merely join the organization, pay his initiation fee plus dues and then sit back to receive his monthly newsletter. He becomes a functioning part of a negative movement.

Because it is an against movement, the Society always run the risk of committing a libel in attacking people. But Mr. Welch created a loophole. Rather than pay the price of libel, he seeks to hide behind a semantic camouflage. That is why he coined the word "Comsymp" -- to describe an enemy whom he cannot quite prove to be an outright Communist but whom he believes to be more than a mere sympathizer. The new word, he hopes, will avoid the built-in libel trap of the word "Communist".

But anyone can use this device; anyone, that is, who will not be concerned about your level of intelligence. Let me, with appropriate apology to you, use it just this once: Members of the Birch Society may not be outright bigots but they may be more than mere sympathizers. The proper word, then, would be: Bigsymps.

Seriously, the real threat today of Communism in America -- and it is real enough -- is from the outside. It is an absurd notion that our most dangerous Communist enemy is internal, that it is already virtually victorious, and that it must be fought within our borders to the almost total exclusion of every other political problem.

Outside or within, Communism is an evil and it must be handled. If we are all agreed on that premise, then, you might ask, why all the shouting? Why don't we all just get along with the task of handling it?

Because the only thing on which most of us agree with the Birch Society is that Communism is a menace. After that, we separate -- and separate fast -- because we are convinced that Birch not only shoots political buckshot at everybody and his uncle, failing effectively to attack Communism, but unwittingly (to give it the benefit of the doubt) aids and abets Communism, falling into its traps -- indeed, into its very lap. If Communism ever does take over in the United States -- and I doubt that -- we will have two groups to thank; the Communists and the Birchists.

Let us see whether my last statement is cheap demagoguery or thoughtful reasoning: A most striking and significant feature of the Society is that many of its campaigns parallel those of the Soviet Communists. The Society would seek to destroy, among other things, NATO, the United Nations and the vital American system of economic and military aid to underdeveloped countries. These are also precisely the aims of the Soviet Union in its efforts to weaken the United States throughout the world. Let's look at the twin character:

Number One -- NATO: The Soviet would smash NATO so that it could not protect against Communist intrusion upon Western Europe... Birch would take U.S. troops out of NATO, making it incapable of protecting against Communist intrusion upon Western Europe.

Number Two -- The United Nations: To capture control of it, the Soviet insists upon the right of veto, even in the administration of U.N. work... Birch would take the United States out of the U.N., leaving the Soviet in control of it, including administration.

Number Three -- Foreign Aid: The Soviet tries to persuade underdeveloped countries to reject American economic and military assistance... Birch would withdraw such American assistance from underdeveloped countries.

Number Four -- The Communist Menace: The Soviet argues that Communism is no external threat to the United States... Birch argues that Communism is a more internal threat than an external one.

Number Five -- The Race Problem: The Soviet would convince Asian and African nations to turn their backs on the United States because of its alleged pro-racist policies... Birch would impeach Earl Warren for his anti-racist decisions.

Number Six -- Social Justice: The Soviet does not believe in it... Birch is opposed to civil rights and the religious gospel of social rights.

Number Seven -- The Front Organization: The Soviet attempts to use "fronts" as an essential tool in the dissemination of its propaganda in the United States... Birch advocates the use of "fronts" as a technique for propaganda purposes.

Number Eight -- The Communist Party: In the Soviet it is a monolithic, totalitarian movement with no dissent permitted to its followers from the principles laid down by its leader... Ditto for the Birch Society.

And yet no one of us is foolish enough to suggest that the Birch Society is Communist. But I guess if there were no John Birch Society, the Communists would invent one.

What's the real reason for the recent appearance of so many right-wing organizations on the American scene -- and for the success (such as it is) of the Welch movement? The reason -- in a nutshell: the frustrations of the American people; the troubles we are having with Russia; the problems in Berlin, Laos and Cuba; the American lag in rocketry, thermo-nuclear weapons, the space race -- in short, the cold war. And on the domestic front: high taxes, rising living costs, the integration struggle, and so on.

For all these difficulties, the Birch movement offers a single solution -- tear down everything that's up.

Does Welch's organization really have a future in America? I think not. Eventually, it will go the way of all know-nothing movements. Once its character is completely known to the American people, the organization is doomed to failure. Understanding the nature of the movement, they will inevitably reject and repudiate it as an unwholesome political growth in American soil. In the nature of things the United States will eventually evolve adequate and proper solutions for its international and domestic migraine headaches -- at that point Americans will turn their backs on Robert Welch and his John Birch Society.

In short, there are far better answers, better alternatives than those offered by Mr. Welch. But what they are is not my assignment nor our subject this evening. To Birch Society members, if any be present here tonight, I would ask: What kind of fools do you take the American people to be? Do you think we are stupid enough to believe that an Eisenhower or a Dulles or a Warren ever deliberately played the Kremlin game?

Yes, we are against Communism, but not the kind you attack. We look out across the sea and we note the menacing Soviet armies, their thermo-nuclear weapons, their missiles, their atomic tests, and their Red Chinese partners, now also struggling to gain atomic weapons -- and we know we are faced with danger -- possibly the ultimate danger in mankind's long history.

We know we must look to our own weapons. We know, too, that we must watch the internal activities of the small band of Communists still in our midst.

But, to point out the enemy for us, we don't need Mr. Welch, or his John Birch Society, or its followers -- who don't know their left from their right. We don't need the mushrooming bands of radical right-wingers -- who can't tell a Republican from a Communist -- and who view Social Security as a dangerous step along the road to Communism.

J. Edgar Hoover who has not as yet -- I think -- been charged with being a Communist agent, a "Comsymp" or a dupe, prepared a statement on the subject of fighting Communism. Here is what he said: -- and I quote --

"The danger of indiscriminately alleging that someone is a Communist merely because his views on a particular issue happen to parallel the official party position is obvious. The confusion which is thereby created helps the Communists by diffusing the forces of their opponents.

"Unfortunately there are those who make the very mistake the Communists are so careful to avoid. These individuals concentrate on the negative rather than on the positive. They are merely against Communism without being for any positive measures to eliminate the social, political and economic frictions which the Communists are so adroit at exploiting.

"These persons", Mr. Hoover concludes, "would do well to recall a lesson from history. Both Hitler and Mussolini were against Communism. However, it was by what they stood for, not against, that history has judged them."

The John Birch Society stands for nothing.

FACTS

DOMESTIC REPORT

NOV.-DEC. 1961, VOL. 14, No. 5—PUBLISHED BY THE ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH

The John Birch Society

On Monday night, October 9th, approximately 1600 people gathered in the main ballroom of the gracious Garden City Hotel on Long Island, New York, to hear Robert H. W. Welch, the Founder of the John Birch Society, deliver a prepared one hour and 40 minute speech.

At least 25% of the room was filled with college-age men and women, and with upper middle-class couples in their early 30's. Most of the others were people who, from their meticulous dress, their social presence, had "arrived," economically speaking. Those who came without advance reservations had to wait to buy a ticket of admission—in a line four deep, almost a block long—for more than an hour before the meeting began. The audience was in no sense an assemblage of unemployed malcontents or crackpots.

During the course of his address, Welch turned the world inside out and upside down. He "proved" (at least to the satisfaction of many in the hall) that Communism is an evil imposed upon the masses across the world by the millionaire class; a method of enslaving the poor people who inhabit the earth. (It was difficult to believe that his listeners, dressed expensively, sporting jewelry, using '61 and '62 automobiles, could swallow the story.)

He explained his so-called "principle of reversal," by example. The legal decision, he said, handed down that very day by the U.S. Supreme Court, requiring the Communist Party to register against its will—that decision is no evidence the Court understands the evil of Communism; on the contrary, it is proof that the Supreme Court secretly approves Communism. (The Principal of Reversal: if a man admits he is a Communist—of course he is. If he denies it, he is only hiding the fact.)

The Birch leader's villains that night were the Republicans, the Democrats, Earl Warren, urban renewal, the United Nations, and Franklin D. Roosevelt. His hero was the late Senator Joe McCarthy.

Not a word of anti-Semitism passed Welch's lips; certainly none that observers could detect. He even avoided the kind of innuendo which the audience could interpret as a covert expression of anti-Jewish hostility. It is a fair conclusion that Robert Welch, himself not an anti-Semite, knows full well anti-Semitism can be a kiss of death.

The same, however, cannot be said for a large number of people in his Garden City audience that night. There was a question-and-answer period during which Welch had no control either over questions posed out loud or the reaction of the listeners to the questions. When one person rose to his feet demanding to know "Who promoted Peress?"—this was a signal for knowing oohs and aahs across the room, and a sudden burst of approving applause.

During the course of his presentation, the Birch Founder had talked about the infiltration of Communist agents into the Protestant clergy, mentioning, in passing, that there was some of it too, in the Roman Catholic priesthood. This provoked, during the question-and-answer period, a query from a lady who wanted to know what the situation was among rabbis. Again, even before he could answer, the room reacted to the question with a quick, enthusiastic round of applause—applause which could only be interpreted as the audience's inarticulate way of saying, "Ah, now we are putting our finger on the real problem."

Apparently, even Welch detected it, and after saying vaguely that he supposed there was some infiltration in the rabbinate, he added that there probably was also infiltration in the Moslem priesthood. This last comment was deliberately misinterpreted by his listeners. They reacted as if he were being humorously sly. They pretended that his answer was meant to convey to them: "Yes, the Jews are the core of the problem, but if we say it that bluntly, we will be charged with anti-Semitism. So let's blame all religions and with equal absurdity include the Moslems."

What is the John Birch Society, who is its leader, Robert Welch, and where do they fit into the American political scheme in this winter of 1961?

Structure and Organization

Founded by Robert Welch in December 1958, the John Birch Society is a monolithic, centrally-directed organization with Founder Welch as its moving force.

At the start of 1961, it claimed to have chapters in 34 states and the District of Columbia. Independent research indicates this claim is probably substantially accurate, and that in any event, the John Birch Society has chapters in at least 27 states and the District of Columbia.

By far the greatest number of chapters are operating in the State of Texas. A rough count shows approximately 150 chapters there. California, Michigan, and Massachusetts appear to have 20-35 chapters each. Arkansas, Florida, Illinois, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon and Wisconsin have roughly 10-20 chapters each. Georgia, Mississippi and Tennessee have about eight or nine chapters each. Kansas has a reported six chapters, Virginia has about five, and the rest of the states where chapters exist probably have less than five. Two major centers of strength are Greater Houston and Greater Los Angeles.

So far as can be ascertained, neither Welch nor his aides in the John Birch Society have ever made public the number of chapters they claim to have nationwide. Independent research indicates that the number of chapters may well be in the neighborhood of 500.

According to Welch and official John Birch Society publications, chapters are composed of 20 members, and when a chapter grows beyond that point, any additional members are incorporated into a new chapter which spins off from the old.

Calculating on the basis of 500 chapters and 20 members per chapter, it would appear that the John Birch Society may have a bedrock minimum of some 10,000 members. In addition, many members in states where there are no chapters belong directly to the so-called Home Chapter at Society headquarters in Belmont, Mass. It is of course impossible to estimate the number of members in the Home Chapter.

In newspaper reports, the membership goal of the John Birch Society was placed at some 100,000 by the end of 1961. The eventual goal sought by Welch, according to these stories, is 1,000,000 members.

The only figure on the total membership of the John Birch Society which has appeared in print and which has any semblance of authenticity was contained in an Associated Press dispatch from Washington, dated May 22, 1961. This item was based on remarks reportedly made by Representative Edgar W. Hiestand (Rep., Calif.) before the Rules Committee of the House of Representatives. According to the AP dispatch, Rep. Hiestand—an admitted member of the John Birch Society—estimated the Society membership at about 40,000 men and 20,000 women, or a total of 60,000.

On the basis of these figures, the annual dues received by the John Birch Society headquarters in Belmont, Mass. would appear to be a minimum of $1,200,000 a year, and in all probability more, since many of the members are life members who pay dues of $1,000 a year.

Staff and Leadership

Besides Welch, who draws no salary, there are 28 full-time employees at Society headquarters in Belmont, Mass. In the field, around the country, there are some 35 full-time salaried employees serving as "area coordinators." They are responsible directly to Founder Welch. Area coordinators, generally, cover at least one state, and in some cases, a group of states.

(Welch has stated that eventually, he hoped to have so-called "major coordinators" supervising the work of the coordinators—as the society grew and "as made necessary by sufficient membership, in order to keep strict and careful control on what every chapter is doing, and even every member of every chapter so far as the effective work of the John Birch Society is concerned.")

In addition, there are approximately 100 full or part-time volunteer coordinators or workers. These appear to be responsible for organization in parts of a state—or in large cities and their environs.

Finally, there are chapter leaders, who are leaders among the Society's membership in their home towns, and who play a key role in the day-to-day operations of the Society, its chapter meetings and program activities.

Besides Founder Welch and the original incorporators, the leadership of the John Birch Society is composed of a National Council of 26. From the National Council, four individuals serve—with Welch—as an Executive Committee. In addition, a Committee of Endorsers, composed of individuals who are members of the John Birch Society in the several states, can be considered to be part of the leadership group in the John Birch Society. It should be borne in mind, however, that the John Birch Society is organized from the top down, and that the only real leader is Founder Welch.

Welch stands at the center of a group of concentric circles. The National Council of the Society is the "inner circle"—closest to Founder Welch and presumably enjoying a large measure of his confidence. The paid area and major coordinators and headquarters staff might also be included in the inner circle. It is probable that some individuals among the Committee of Endorsers from the various states would be considered by Welch to be part of the "inner circle," while others would be included in the "second circle," possible along with the full and part-time volunteer coordinators (or section leaders) in parts of states and in certain big city areas.

Chapter leaders and ordinary members of the Society in the local chapters or the Home Chapter might compose the third, or "outer circle."

It should be emphasized that, while the foregoing concept of the John Birch Society as comprising a series of concentric circles is a useful one, it has never been spelled out by Welch himself and the gradations suggested above may not be precise. However, a careful reading of the publications of the John Birch Society, such as "The Blue Book" and "The White Book", strongly suggests that the Society in fact operates according to the concept of concentric circles.

Area coordinators and major coordinators are appointed by Founder Welch. He—or they—appoint local chapter leaders, and local coordinators or section leaders.

Welch himself selected the members of the National Council and the Committee of Endorsers, as well as the small Executive Committee of the Society.

There are no elections whatsoever in the entire structure of the Society. The picture that emerges is one of a tight, centrally-controlled, dedicated and efficient organization—whatever the actual membership and chapter strength of the Society may be. The rate of growth is obscured by the successful effort of Welch to hide the actual numerical strength of the Society.

Finances

Dues for membership in the John Birch Society are $24 a year for men and $12 a year for women. A so-called "life membership" in the Home Chapter—which automatically covers membership in any local chapter—costs $1,000. In addition, Founder Welch appeals for voluntary contributions from all members who can afford it—over and above their regular monthly dues. He has set up a system of "members' monthly messages"—envelopes in which members can enclose their voluntary contributions, along with any suggestions or messages they may wish to send him directly.

There are, of course, no detailed financial reports available on the operations of the John Birch Society. No one knows how much of Welch's personal resources went into the Society. Nobody knows how much the eleven wealthy men who attended the founding meeting of the Society at Indianapolis in December 1958, contributed then—or have contributed since. Presumably they—and most of the members of the National Council who number 26—are life members of the Society, and pay the $1,000 annual dues for a life member. A few persons on the Committee of Endorsers from the several states appear to have sufficient financial status to warrant life memberships. All in all, it would appear that Welch can count on at least $30,000 to $50,000 a year from life members, not including any supplementary contributions they may make.

The payroll and expenses for the nation-wide staff of approximately 63 men and women—plus his extensive printing and mailing operations—tend to support the impression that the John Birch Society today is probably a $1,000,000 a year operation, or more.

National Reaction

Hundreds of thousands of words of exposé material and editorial criticism have been lavished by the nation's press on the Birch Society and Founder Welch, and a tremendous amount of air time and film footage have been devoted by radio and television to coverage of developments involving the leader and his organization. Columnists—of all shades of political opinion—have criticized Welch and the Society. Prominent individuals, from President Kennedy down, have expressed or implied criticism of the Founder and his movement.

In general, the major points that have been made against Welch and the Society in this tremendous outpouring center around:

- Welch's view of former President Eisenhower, his brother Milton, the Dulles brothers, and some other leading Americans as Communist agents or dupes.
- Welch's call for the impeachment of Chief Justice Earl Warren.
- The secret, or semi-secret nature of the John Birch Society.
- Welch's scorn for democracy.
- The degree of Communist infiltration which Welch and his followers claim to see in American domestic life.
- The tactics which Welch advocates—such as infiltration, penetration and take-over of local civic groups like the PTAs, and the harassment of local school and library officials.

Welch, in writing his own members about the outburst of criticism directed against him and the Society, views it as a Communist-inspired smear campaign which is being aided and abetted by Communist dupes and sympathizers. The fact is that newspapers ranging from the conservative Los Angeles Times to the liberal New York Post have joined in criticizing Welch, his views and his Society. The same is true of columnists, ranging from conservatives such as George Sokolsky, Arthur Krock and Raymond Moley—to liberals such as Marquis Childs, Max Lerner, Eric Sevareid and Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt.

Among prominent national leaders, besides the President, critics have included Attorney General Kennedy, former Vice-President Richard M. Nixon, Senators Thomas Dodd of Connecticut and Milton Young of North Dakota, the National Council of Churches, the United Presbyterian Church, the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church, and such leading Episcopalian clerics as Bishop James A. Pike of Los Angeles and Bishop Horace Donegan of New York.

Among Roman Catholics, critics have included Msgr. George B. Higgins, Director, Social Action Department, National Catholic Welfare Conference, Rev. John B. Sheerin, editor, Catholic World, and such official archdiocesan papers as The Boston Pilot, New World (Chicago) and Visitor (Providence, R. I.). Commonweal has also published a critical editorial and other material, as has Ave Maria.

The Birch Society and Anti-Semitism

There is nothing in the Society's program or in its published material that espouses anti-Semitism. There is nothing in Welch's own record to suggest any personal anti-Semitism on his part. In short, anti-Semitism is not a stock in trade of Welch or of the John Birch Society.

Nevertheless, there are indications that Welch and the Society have a blind spot—which makes it possible for some anti-Semites and a certain degree of anti-Semitism to creep into the Society's activities and membership.

The best that can be said is that Welch and the Society are "non-anti-Semitic." Welch claims to be "anti-anti-Semitic" but the facts indicate that despite his protestations, he has not been alert to the presence in his organization of individuals with known records of anti-Semitism, and individuals with known records of support for—or associations with—anti-Semites or anti-Semitic organizations. Furthermore, he has himself indicated in his own actions a lack of awareness with respect to anti-semites and anti-Semitism.

What are the facts in the record of Welch and the John Birch Society so far?

- In 1952, Welch wrote a booklet called "May God Forgive Us" in which he cited a pamphlet by Joseph P. Kamp as a source.

- In 1954, Welch wrote "The Life of John Birch" and admits he paid Kamp $100.00 to check the manuscript for inaccuracies.
  (Welch contends that he did not know of the widespread allegations of anti-Semitism against Kamp as of 1952 and 1954 and that since he has learned of those allegations, he has had no further dealings with Kamp.)

- Some sections of Welch's "The Politician"—the "letter" Welch wrote for private circulation in which he claims that Dwight Eisenhower was a "dedicated, conscious agent of the Communist conspiracy"—are borrowed directly from Kamp's "Headlines," issue of March 15, 1952. (This was a pre-Republican convention smear blast, replete with anti-Semitic innuendo, issued by Kamp against General Eisenhower.) Some sections of "The Politician" appear to have been taken from Kamp almost verbatim, including some tainted portions.

- "The Politician" cites Merwin K. Hart, a long-time anti-Semite, as an authority, and praises the vehement and blatant anti-Semite, Lucille Miller, of Bethel, Vt. It is clear that Welch's reference to her was written after 1955, when her record of anti-Semitism was quite public and had been clearly referred to in the public prints. Welch, however, simply refers to Mrs. Miller as "a patriotic but not too cautious Vermont woman."

- "The Politician" contains some gratuitous and snide innuendoes regarding men in public life of which the following are examples:

  a) Referring to Arthur F. Burns, President Eisenhower's economic adviser, Welch states that Burns was "born and raised in Russia." Even if true, this would be gratuitous, except that Welch was trying to make the point—as he states—that Burns' job as economic adviser was probably "a cover-up for Burns' liaison work between Eisenhower and some of his Communist bosses." (Fact: Arthur F. Burns was born in Stanislau, Austria, April 27, 1904, according to "Who's Who in America," Vol. 31, 1960-61.)
  b) Referring to Simon E. Sobeloff, former Solicitor General of the U.S., appointed by President Eisenhower to the Court of Appeals, Fourth Judicial Circuit, Welch refers to Sobeloff as having been born and raised in Russia. (According to "Current Biography," 1955, page 565, Sobeloff was born in Baltimore, Maryland).
  c) Welch refers to C. Douglas Dillon, now Secretary of the Treasury, and a former ambassador to France, as "Clarence Lapowski, alias Clarence Dillon." (Dillon's paternal grandfather, Samuel Lapowski, emigrated from Poland to Texas and changed his name to Dillon—two generations before C. Douglas was born. Mr. Dillon is an Episcopalian.)
  d) Welch writes of Edward S. Greenbaum, (an Eisenhower Alternate Delegate to the U.N.) this way: "Greenbaum is a close friend of Sam Rosenman, and a law partner of Morris Ernst. It hardly seems that anything more needs to be said."
  e) Welch describes C. D. Jackson, publisher of Life Magazine, as "C. D. Jacobson, alias C. D. Jackson." (There is no indication in "Who's Who In America," Vol. 31, 1960-61, or in "Current Biography," 1951, or in any other authoritative source that C. D. Jackson's original name was anything other than Jackson. In any case, the reference seems to be a snide irrelevancy.)

- Welch has recommended two anti-Semitic publications to his membership—Merwin K. Hart's Economic Council Letter and the "American Mercury" magazine, after it had been converted from a once great name in magazine circles to a frequent vehicle for the dissemination of anti-Semitic innuendo and worse. The recommendation of Hart's publication in the November 1960 Bulletin took place after Welch had been advised of the anti-Semitic history of Merwin K. Hart and his Economic Council Letter.

- The New York Post (issue of May 22, 1961) identified Hart as leader of John Birch Society Chapter 26 in New York. That chapter was identified, in a letter from Vice Admiral C. S. Freeman, a long-time Hart associate and a member of the Society's Committee of Endorsers for New York State, as "the oldest Chapter in the New York area." The Post article said that copies of Hart's Economic Council Letter were available at the May 9, 1961 meeting of Chapter 26, held at headquarters of Hart's National Economic Council, 156 Fifth Avenue.

- Some members of the National Council of the John Birch Society have the following records:

  a) Spruille Braden of New York, former U.S. Ambassador to Argentina, was listed in 1958 as a director of Hart's National Economic Council.
  b) Ralph E. Davis of Los Angeles. Listed as a director of Hart's National Economic Council in 1955.
  c) Prof. Revilo P. Oliver of the University of Illinois. Shared the speakers platform in February 1961 with Kenneth Goff, a notorious anti-Semite, at the so-called Midwest Christian Patriots Convention in St. Louis. In April 1961, Oliver addressed the convention of Kenneth Goff's "Soldiers of the Cross" at the Raleigh Hotel in Washington.
  d) Paul Talbert of Beverly Hills, California. Paid $120 to Gerald L. K. Smith's Christian Nationalist Crusade during the calendar year 1959.

- For several months during 1959, Welch used the services of Willis Carto in an executive or organizing capacity. Carto apparently worked out of Society headquarters in Belmont, Mass. For about five years, he was executive secretary of an extreme rightist group called "Liberty and Property" which published a newsletter called "RIGHT." This periodical was an outlet for anti-Semitic propaganda and a clearing house for information about the activities of anti-Semites and anti-Semitic organizations.

- Anti-Semites and anti-Semitism are beginning to show in the John Birch Society at the local level.

  a) David Harmon, who said he was a full-time paid Society organizer covering Iowa, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, was quoted by the Minneapolis Star of May 20, 1961, as saying at a Society meeting in Bloomington—a suburb of Minneapolis—that "even if most Jews are Communists, there are still a lot of good ones."
  b) Theodore W. Miller of Chicago, an attorney with a long record of identification with anti-Semites and anti-Semitic causes, is listed as a member of the Society's Committee of Endorsers for the State of Illinois. Among the notorious anti-Semites with whom Miller hob-nobbed in the 1940s were Joe McWilliams, Elizabeth Dilling and Gerald L. K. Smith.
  c) Miss Olive Simes is listed as a member of the Society's Committee of Endorsers for Massachusetts. For a number of years, one O. Simes of Boston and/or Petersham, Mass., has been listed by Gerald L. K. Smith as a contributor to his Christian Nationalist Crusade. According to Smith's reports, O. Simes contributed $140 in 1955, $285 in 1956, $200 in 1957, $160 in 1958, $205 in 1959 and $160 in 1960.

Welch on Anti-Semitism

Welch has gone out of his way to deny—and with some vehemence—any anti-Semitism on his own part or that of the Society. The April 1961 issue of the Society "Bulletin" contains a long denial by Welch of any such anti-Semitic taint. He asserts that "the most vicious and most extensive charges ever levelled against me have been made by such notorious anti-Semites as Lyrl Clark Van Hyning (Women's Voice) and Elizabeth Dilling (The Dilling Bulletin) on the grounds that my various committees and supporters are nothing but a 'bunch of Jews and Jew-kissers'."

He then goes on to point out that some of his closest associates and advisers are Jewish: William Schlamm, a writer; Julius Epstein, an author; Morrie Ryskind, writer; the late Alfred Kohlberg, a leading figure for many years in anti-Communist causes; and Rabbi Max Merritt of Los Angeles, an active leader of the American Jewish League Against Communism.

Another point in Welch's denial of anti-Semitism refers to the fact that in his long years in the candy industry, a large percentage of his customers were Jews. He says he sold them goods, travelled with them, drank coffee with them in their kitchens at midnight, went to formal dinners with them, borrowed money from them when he needed it in the early days, and loaned them money later when he had it. He says he never stopped to think where they worshipped. And one day, he continues, when the thought occurred to him, he says he "took pride in the belief that I probably had more good friends of the Jewish faith than any other Gentile in America."

Welch then turns to the allegation of anti-Semitism against him, which—at the outset of his statement—he terms "the third stage of the attack . . . against your Founder." Let's look, he says to his readers, "at what the propagandists can bring forth to support their accusation." The accusation, he adds quickly, "has to be cut almost completely out of the whole cloth of fabrication" but he concedes that "there are three extremely tenuous threads" he has seen being used to hold the accusation together.

He then turns to the charge—as he states it—"that I quote, and use materials from Joseph Kamp, whom everybody is supposed to recognize as a notorious anti-Semite." On this point Welch avoids the direct issue, simply stating that whether or not Kamp is an anti-Semite is none of Welch's "present business." (Exactly why the question of Kamp's anti-Semitism is none of Welch's business is difficult to understand, especially in view of Welch's presumed eagerness to deny his own anti-Semitism and his concern that the John Birch Society never "become an agency or even a haven of anti-Semitic feeling so long as I am directing its policies.")

Welch then goes on to offer a series of rebuttals to the report of anti-Semitism. Typical is this: One feature of the Society is that he has the right to drop anyone from membership at any time without giving a reason. This has been used twice, he explains. One of the two instances involved a man who had taken over a certain local Society chapter and was gradually converting it into "a hotbed of anti-Semitsm"—or was at least trying to.

The final main point in Welch's "rebuttal" is "simply that I am not anti-Semitic, never could be, and could never allow the John Birch Society to become an agency or even a haven of anti-Semitic feeling as long as I am directing its policies." Welch adds that he is "often told that too large a percentage of Jews are Communists and too large a percentage of Communists are Jews. Welch answers those who complain to him about the identification of Jews with Communism by replying that too large a percentage of Methodists and Frenchmen are Communists but he doesn't blame all Methodists or Frenchmen for that. He adds: "I feel it is equally absurd and unfair to blame all Jews because some Jews are Communists."

The concluding section of Welch's statement denying anti-Semitism is, in effect, a warning. "There is only one real danger in the charge of anti-Semitism today, to the man who actually is not anti-Semitic. It is that the utter (and in some cases malicious) unfairness of the charge may cause him to react with anger against Jews in general, and then begin to let some of his feeling creep into his writings or his speeches."

Some Evaluations

There have been many extremist groups on the American scene over the last 25 years. Almost without exception, they have been active for a period of time and then have dwindled or disappeared. The activities of some of these groups have been confined to the publishing and circulating of radical right-wing literature with no special attempt at membership recruitment and organization at the grass-roots level.

Other ultra-reactionary groups have tried to organize a membership following nationally, but their efforts have generally been unsuccessful and they have become —almost without exception—organizations composed of a relatively small number of "leaders" scattered around the country.

Many of these groups have attracted individuals with records of anti-Semitism. The pattern has been clear enough over the years to make it likely that any new extremist right-wing organization is a potential gathering-place for anti-Semites and a potential vehicle for the dissemination of anti-Semitism—whether by word of mouth at meetings, or via printed literature which such organizations may publish and distribute, or which may be published and distributed by their members.

While the John Birch Society conforms to the pattern insofar as it has become tainted with anti-Semites, it is unique in several all-important respects:

- It is the first right-wing extremist group in many years that is well-organized and that has had any degree of success in recruiting members at the grass-roots level and on almost a nation-wide scale.
- It is adequately financed by dues on a continuing basis, unlike other extreme right-wing groups which have frequently languished, not only for lack of organization at the grass-roots, but for lack of adequate financing. In some instances, these organizations were entirely dependent for financial support on one, or a few, well-to-do individuals.
- The Birch Society has an on-going program of action and activity for its membership, with monthly instructions and assignments sent to all members, and with regular local chapter meetings.

- Welch, who is the supreme boss and who obviously has a talent for organization, has a sound business head, and a capacity for attention to detail and for hard work that distinguishes him from other ultra-reactionary leaders of the past.
- Leaders of the John Birch Society at the grass-roots level are, by and large, people of some status and financial solidity in their communities. Regardless of their extremist viewpoints, they tend to be persons who are sufficiently respectable and influential at the local level to be able to exert considerable pressure when they choose to do so in their communities.
- The Society may be benefitting from the reported wave of interest in "conservatism" that allegedly has emerged in the United States since the election of President Kennedy and may—in a sense—be riding the crest of that wave.

Anti-Democratic Structure

Because of these six factors, unique for an extremist movement, the concerns about the organization cannot lightly be brushed aside. Let's examine why:—

Mr. Welch has declared: "Democracy . . . in government or organization . . . is merely a deceptive phrase, a weapon of demagoguery and a perennial fraud." Mr. Welch has also declared that "the United States is not a democracy but a republic, and we ought to keep it that way."

The Birch Society regards democracy as an evil and as a sure road to Communism. It does not respect democracy, its political and ethical concepts, or the integrity of its institutions. In this connection, the Society is guilty of attempts to pressure our courts of law by threats of impeachment. Whether the target be the Chief Justice of the United States or the lowliest police magistrate, this is a fundamental violation of our constitutional concepts and harmful to the American form of government.

In our country voluntary agencies traditionally play an important role—for good or evil—and the John Birch Society is the latest voluntary negative movement in America. We have had Coughlinism, America First and the McCarthy movement—and now their successor, Birch. It is a radical right-wing organization, composed of a small band of extremists on the fringe of American political life, which sees all problems in conspiratorial terms. But this one has two features the others lack: a leader with a great capacity to organize and a technique of semi-secrecy—and secrecy of action through "front organizations."

The John Birch Society is part of a larger movement, the major section of which is not quite as irresponsible. While clearly the most notorious and best publicized of the radical right-wing groups on the American scene—it is only one of many new ones on the far right. Some 206 groups—from conservative to extremist right-wing—have sprung up in the United States, most of them within the last two years. Of the 206, there were 19 new ones in 1960, and 79 in 1961; more in the first ten months of this year than in any similar period in the last twenty years.

To sum up its strength—in less than three years the Birch Society has developed a gross annual income of about a million and a half dollars from dues, life memberships, special contributions, and the sale of literature. Although it will release no membership figures, experts in the field say that those who pay dues number about 60,000. Its paid staff consists of approximately 63 men and women. Thus, while substantial, the movement is obviously not quite as big as its press notices would indicate. The fact is that the Society earns extravagant amounts of publicity by Welch's outrageous charges of Communism against such Americans as former President Eisenhower, the late John Foster Dulles, or an unidentified group of several hundred Roman Catholic priests. (For instance, Monsignor Francis J. Lally, editor of "The Pilot" in Boston, was among the American editors who spoke up in an excellent editorial, published on October 14th, in defense of the Catholic clergy after Mr. Welch at Garden City in effect charged 273 Catholic priests with being Communists.)

Mr. Welch contends that the Communists are responsible for precipitating the press attack upon his organization—part of the conspiracy, of course. It was, he claims, triggered by a "signal" given in an article published on February 25, 1961 in the Communist "People's World" which circulates on the West Coast. He referred to that article as the "mother piece" for all that followed, adding that Time Magazine was the first in line.

But his charge does not square with the facts. The plain truth is that the "People's World" was a "Johnny-come-lately." Back in July 1960, newspapers in the Mid-West uncovered and published the details of Welch's accusations in his then-secret manuscript "The Politician."

The John Birch Society would never have received its nation-wide notoriety if its Founder had not written "The Politician"—the book he called a confidential letter—with its outlandish allegations of treason. However, under any circumstances, some of its leadership stands sufficiently high in the community power-structure to win the group a hearing from newspaper editors. Local leaders and members of the Society are, in many cases, people of financial responsibility and social status in their communities, often able to exert considerable influence and impact at the local level.

In affirmation of his hatred of democracy, Mr. Welch has structured his Society in an un-democratic fashion: The organization is centrally-controlled and tightly run by the Founder himself. Everything operates from the top down; Mr. Welch picks his national organizers for the Society; they report directly to him; chapter leaders report to national, regional or local organizers picked by Mr. Welch or his agents.

The Conspiratorial Outlook

If the authoritarian structure of the Birch organization is elementary, its basic premises are primitive: First, it believes in the conspiratorial theory of history and politics. Conspiracy is always the answer. Second, it believes that the Communist conspiracy has already captured control of most of the world—including the United States—and because it is already victorious here on our shores, battle must be done to recapture the country from the enemy.

That both premises are false is patent and demonstrable.

Perhaps not all Welch followers agree with everything he says. Some Birchites have gone to great lengths to disassociate themselves from his views about General George C. Marshall and other great American leaders he has smeared. They say these views are personal, not organizational. The contention is untenable—because, by his own statements, Welch has made it clear that he is the Society—that the Society is a monolithic organization in which he is the central moving spirit. Any attempt to separate the two fails.

If the Society's members are uneasy or embarrassed by his more sensational views, they nevertheless live in the same political fantasy-land with Mr. Welch. It is a world whose inhabitants assume that there must be solutions that will produce victories on the international scene and will resolve all our domestic problems. If no easy solutions are forthcoming, there must somewhere be a conspiracy preventing it. They see the world around them—the churches, the press, radio and television, the unions—almost all the established institutions in our free society—in the grip of Communist conspirators, or their sympathizers.

Those who disagree with this view are naturally a part of the conspiracy, for there can be no honest basic differences of opinion: you are a Bircher—or you are a Red, or a tool—and this applies to anyone from Republican to left-wing Socialist. Most ridiculous of all, the Birchers view the government itself—and its political leaders—as just another part of the same pack of Communist agents or dupes—few of them to be trusted.

The Communist Parallel

A most striking and significant feature of the Society is that many of its campaigns parallel those of the Soviet Communists. The Society would seek to destroy, among other things, NATO, the United Nations and the vital American system of economic and military aid to underdeveloped countries. These are also precisely the aims of the Soviet Union in its efforts to weaken the United States throughout the world. Let's look at the parallels:

1) NATO: The Soviet would smash NATO so that it could not protect against Communist intrusion upon Western Europe . . . Birch would take U.S. troops out of NATO, making it incapable of protecting against Communist intrusion upon Western Europe.
2) The United Nations: To capture control of it, the Soviet insists upon the right of veto, even in the administration of U.N. work . . . Birch would take the United States out of the U.N., leaving the Soviet in control of it, including administration.
3) Foreign Aid: The Soviet tries to persuade underdeveloped countries to reject American economic and military assistance . . . Birch would withdraw such American assistance from underdeveloped countries.
4) The Communist Menace: The Soviet argues that Communism is not an external threat to the United States . . . Birch argues that Communism is more an internal threat than an external one.
5) The Race Problem: The Soviet would convince Asian and African nations to turn their backs on the United States because of its alleged pro-racist policies . . . Birch would impeach Earl Warren for his anti-racist decisions.
6) Social Justice: The Soviet does not believe in it . . . Birch is oposed to civil rights and the religious gospel of social rights.
7) The Front Organization: The Soviet attempts to use "fronts" as an essential tool in the dissemination of its propaganda in the United States . . . Birch advocates the use of "fronts" as a technique for propaganda purposes.
8) The Communist Party: In the Soviet it is a monolithic, totalitarian movement with no dissent permitted to its followers from the principles laid down by its leader . . . Ditto for the Birch Society.

The reason for the recent appearance of many right-wing organizations on the American scene—and for the success (such as it is) of the Welch movement—is a complex of things: the frustrations of the American people; the troubles we are having with Russia; the problems in Berlin, Laos and Cuba; the American lag in rocketry, long-range missiles, the space race—in short, the cold war. And on the domestic front: high taxes, rising living costs, the integration struggle, and so on. For all these difficulties, the Birch movement offers a single, simple solution—tear down everything that's up.

Welch's organization has no future in America. Eventually, it will go the way of all know-nothing movements. Once its character is completely understood by the American people, the organization is doomed to failure. They will inevitably reject and repudiate it as an unwholesome political growth in American soil. In the nature of things, the United States will eventually evolve adequate and proper remedies for its international and domestic problems. At that point Americans will turn their backs on Robert Welch and his John Birch Society.

Pagano Goes To Peace Corps

Jules Pagano, education director of the Communications Workers of America, has taken a leave to accept a top assignment with the Peace Corps.

Pagano, a graduate of St. Johns College of Annapolis, Md., has been education director for CWA for the past ten years.

The CWA staffer will begin his new assignment on the New Frontier in mid-January. He will hold the job of Chief, Professional, Technical and Labor Affairs. He will work in the information and recruitment fields with unions and professional and technical groups.

The Peace Corps now has projects in 11 countries, mostly in Latin America and Africa. It has plans in progress for projects in another 11 nations. It has recruited some 1,000 volunteers who are in training or at work in the field. It has received about 16,000 applications.

Peace Corps members receive $75 a month in a lump sum at the end of a two-year enlistment. They are furnished transportation, food, clothing, shelter and pocket money during their training and field work. They work in such fields as education, training, sanitation, agriculture and construction. They have generally been enthusiastically welcomed by host nations and work directly with the people.

The Corps is seeking skilled workers to help impart know-how in construction, equipment maintenance and similar areas. It is looking to organized labor to help fill this requirement.

The Big Money

A blurb from Fortune magazine, touting a series on personal "investment," tells where the big money really lies.

The publication advises that a profit of $50,000 could have been made with no money down by speculators alert enough to cash in on rumors that the German mark was being revalued last spring.

It also reported that a 25 percent annual return, partly tax free, is being earned by syndication partners owning a New York office building.

And if you had only held soybean futures last spring, you could have multiplied your money thirty times.

What's more, nobody calls the activity inflationary, and at most, profits are generally subject only to a low level capital gains tax.

FOREIGN SERVICE PROGRAM. Union officials serve as public members of the State Department's 1961 Foreign Service Selection Board. Task of the Board is to review personnel files and recommend promotions. Board members included: Andrew Pettis, Marine and Shipbuilding Workers vice-president (far left), and Paul Nagle, Postal Clerks vice-president (fifth from left). Secretary of State Dean Rusk is third from left.

Big Firms Give Financial Aid to Ultra Right Groups

Big money has lined up with the John Birchers and others on the far right, a recent article appearing as one of a series in the Washington Post has revealed.

The big money comes in part from corporations which finance radio and TV pickups of far-right events. The federal treasury bears 52 percent of the cost since the companies are able to charge off the funds used as advertising.

In Southern California not long ago, far right forces staged a "Project Alert," allegedly to expose the "menace of internal communism." The rallies—which were chiefly tirades against Kennedy, the income tax, the State Department and Chief Justice Warren—were poorly attended. Nonetheless, they were brought to the living rooms of thousands via telecasts paid for by Southern California Edison, Carnation Milk and Pacific Indemnity Insurance Co.

Earlier, Richfield Oil, Shick Razor and Technicolor Corp. used company funds to pay for a 34 city TV telecast of Dr. Fred C. Schwartz' Christian anti-Communist Crusade rally at the Hollywood Bowl. Dr. Schwartz' "Crusade" has been termed the poor man's John Birch Society.

In California, Attorney General Stanley Mosk is now investigating sources of the militant right's income. He has not yet revealed what he has discovered. The newspaper report on right wing financing, however, states that many "business and banking firms are involved in anti-communism affairs."

Big money financing of ultra-right antics is hardly new. H. L. Hunt, Texas oil millionaire, has long financed Freedom Forum and other right wing propaganda. The use of corporate money for outright sponsorship of right-wing affairs is something new.

Especially in the Southwest, the press also is rallying to the cause of the ultra-right. The Dallas News has supported ultra-right causes with vigor. In Phoenix, both papers are owned by Eugene Pulliam who also owns the Indianapolis Star. All are anti-labor and openly or covertly support Birch causes. The same is true of the Hearst Los Angeles Herald Express and the Omaha World-Tribune.

Less frantic elements of the ultra-right under the name of Young Americans for Freedom, are now seeking to invade New York en masse and to fill Madison Square Garden. YAF is looking to the big money men and the well-to-do to buy 1,000 tickets at $25 each and patron's boxes for $250.

Right-wing "youth" has dragged out old Herbert Hoover as a special attraction. Its speakers will include John Dos Passos, far right author who was once identified with Communist causes; General Edwin Walker and far right economist Prof. Ludwig Von Mises. Sen. Thomas Dodd (D., Conn.) is also listed as a speaker. An award will be given Katanga Pres. Moise Tshombe who has resisted the United Nations.

Fighters for Freedom

A rally of conservatives in Madison Square Garden March 7 is having a hard time. First, General Walker was dropped from the program, at Senator Goldwater's insistence. Then, Senator Dodd sent his regrets. Finally, the brightest star, Moise Tshombe, won't be there because he has been denied a visa; anyway, his presence might have been embarrassing. Only last week, Mr. Tshombe repeated his charge that the United Nations has intervened in Katanga "for the profit of the United States capitalists."

But the absence that interests us most is that of Sal B. Hoffmann, International President of the Upholsterers International Union. When the Young Americans for Freedom, Inc., appealed to him to support their rally, Mr. Hoffmann declined with an explanation worth quoting at length:

"I am certainly interested in the fight for freedom. . . . For some 80 years my International Union, and for some 42 years I, as an individual union officer in every type of post, paid and unpaid, have battled for freedom from want, freedom from fear, freedom from tyranny of arbitrary authority . . . on behalf of the least educated, the lowest paid, the most lowly born of our population, the thousands of industrial workers following my own and my father's trade. For 40 of those years, since their first appearance on the American scene, my Union, like the AFL as a whole, and I have been notable for our recognition and continuous resistance, both in our Union and public life, and now internationally, to the Communists, who, though they frequently speak to us falsely in the name of various freedoms, are freedom's bitterest foes.

"While some of your officers and, presumably, your members also, are too young to have borne any part in this battle against Communism or to even have firsthand experience with this struggle or with fighting off the real article, I have no doubt that your education and advantages in today's America have ensured that you are arrayed with us against these obvious foes of freedom. [But] when I read your program, I find some doubt as to whether your political education has taught you all of the real history of the unfolding of freedom in these United States. With all of the certainty of youth, you assert the superiority, in accord with the genius of the Constitution, of state power as against federal powers. I seem to remember that a hundred years ago it was state powers which guarded and perpetuated the institution of chattel slavery, and that it was federal power alone that destroyed this institution of complete denial of freedom. And, I also remember that federal power alone was able to wipe off the books of the most vociferous of the states now asserting the sacredness of state power, such infamous laws as the Black Codes, which even in 1865, after four years of costly Civil War, still made it a capital offense to teach a black man to read and write.

"As I read my country's history, every major subsequent advance made since the legal extinction of slavery by federal enactment, and aimed to remove its odious remnants in law and practice, has required the use of federal power.

"As a trades unionist, I certainly know that every major advance in my lifetime, in freedom from want and economic oppression of the people who earn their bread with their daily labor, has been by the exercise of federal power, frequently not only at the expense of, but, as in the case of slavery, over the bitter opposition of state powers.

"Before you or most of your members were born, I lived and worked in this country when there was no protection against the arbitrary will of an employer or his foreman, whose power over the economic life of the workmen was so great Chief Justice Taft once declared that the very tone of voice, independent of the words used by the master to his workmen, could constitute intimidation. It was federal power superseding state power that ended virtual industrial serfdom in big industry. . .

"I am certain that your two listed keynote speakers, Senators Goldwater and Tower, do not understand the whole and indivisible nature of the freedom you assert. I have listened and heard them speak only for that portion of freedom which is useful for the already rich, well born, well educated, powerful and comfortable. . . . All of this brings me to inspect your more elderly advisers. At least two of them spent long years forwarding the Communist cause in literature, in teaching and in labor, while organized elements, like my Union and myself, were fighting that Communist offensive, including their part in it. These are high grade intellects and they are properly welcomed back to freedom's side. But they, in all proper humility, might well refrain from lecturing organized labor in such patronizing tones, as John Dos Passos and Dr. Bella Dodd have unpardonably done, to those who only a few years ago were holding the line against the Communists, while Dos Passos and Dr. Dodd, in Communism's era of much greater domestic strength than now, were passing up the ammunition to our Communist foe.

"Captain Eddie Rickenbacker is also on your list. I remember that in the days of the great illusion about Soviet co-belligerency on the part of almost every large section of America, except organized labor, Captain Eddie Rickenbacker came back from a visit to the Soviet Union, with its state-controlled slave trade unions, and publicly praised to the skies the "no-nonsense" treatment of labor in the territory of our "great" Soviet ally as compared with the presumably lily fingered softness to organized labor back here in the USA. I have never heard Mr. Rickenbacker repudiate that wartime nonsense and may be forgiven for doubting if he has ever understood the nature of freedom here, except an anarchic, selfish individual part of it, which is no guide for you and me, any better than he understood what he saw in Soviet Russia in wartime. . .

"I will not send you money, since the men you sponsor as speakers and their supporters didn't seem to need it the last time I looked. I do send you much more valuable advice, and the cost of time, brain sweat and effort to a boy merely educated in tax-supported Philadelphia public schools and the hard college of the labor movement, is so considerable, that I feel like a very generous man.

YAF AT THE GARDEN

By Lawrence Emery

TOTAL ENGAGEMENT until "communism is driven from the face of the earth" was the dominant theme of an enthusiastic rally of more than 18,000 persons who filled New York's Madison Square Garden on March 7 under the auspices of Young Americans for Freedom. The cheering crowd gave an ovation to Sen. Barry Goldwater, who was introduced as "the conservative choice for President in 1964."

But the call to "eliminate the red menace from the earth" was presented as an ultimate goal; the immediate task stressed by most speakers was the removal of the "liberal establishment" which now stands between the ultra-rights and the real enemy. Every mention of John F. Kennedy, Lyndon Johnson, Adlai Stevenson, "the State Dept. boys" and the New York Times was loudly hissed and booed.

'VICTORY' POLICY: Goldwater centered his attack on "radical liberalism" and at one point, departing from his prepared text, said conservatives must "direct their attention to the radical Left who now infest our government."

He said: "The answers which the liberals have given us over the years have been tried and found wanting . . . I suggest that the liberal approach to America's problems has failed miserably in every sphere of activity . . . We are today in a position where only the speedy application of conservative principles can meet the threat . . . [we must] dedicate ourselves once and for all to a policy of victory . . . a policy that will put this country back in an offensive position."

Goldwater called "conservatism . . .

the wave of the future" and said the YAF rally "could be a historic hour" because it represented an "astounding truth . . . that conservatism has gained a foothold and is growing rapidly in the metropolitan areas of the nation." He characterized this as "the biggest, most important development on the political front today."

A FEW DISSIDENTS: The young men running the rally—there was only one woman among the 26 speakers—seemed both proud and startled that they had filled the Garden; many confessed that a year ago few would have believed it possible. It was hard to tell how many in the audience were there from curiosity, and there were a few dissidents who from time to time voiced barely audible disapproval. Although it was a youth rally, nearly half the audience seemed old enough to be the parents of those running the show.

YAF itself is only 18 months old and this was its second annual rally to make awards to its heroes for "contributions to the nation and the cause of freedom." There were 11 this year and the one most highly honored wasn't there: Moise Tshombe of the Congo's Katanga Province. He was praised for "his dedication to the basic principles of freedom and his gallant leadership of his people's struggle," and the State Department was roundly booed for opposing his trip here to accept the award. From the balcony came a shout: "Down with Kennedy!"

Tshombe sent a cable complaining that the State Department had employed "ambiguous reasons to deny me a right which has already been granted to the worst enemies of freedom and the West." (The reference was to Premiers Castro and Khrushchev.) Tshombe added: "May that blindness not provoke further catastrophes."

'NO PEACE': Rep. Donald Bruce (R-Ind.), a freshman in Congress, appeared in Tshombe's place and denounced "State Department support of murderous policies of the United Nations in the Congo." "There is no peace" said Bruce, and when he ended with Patrick Henry's lines "Is life so dear . . ." the audience gave him an ovation.

Although the young ultras had staked out their first line of defense in the Congo, it was a white folk's rally. One Negro sat among the honored guests on the platform; none could be seen in the audience.

Herblock in the Washington Post

"I don't like foreigners, but my heart always goes out to the ones that are really loaded."

The rally started on time but before it was half over it was running an hour behind schedule. It was nearly 10:30 when L. Brent Bozell was introduced for a keynote address. He was presented as one of the most brilliant of young conservatives, a one-time speech writer for the late Sen. Joseph McCarthy, a present editor of National Review and a leading Catholic layman. He saw a "receding liberal tide," said that bomb-testing should not have been stopped in the first place, scorned the paralysis and despair and the lack of a will to win on the part of liberals, called on the faithful to "build a Christian civilization," and said conservatism is "at the threshold of leadership" and must achieve a working political majority.

THE ORDERS: When he went into a long theological analysis of the "failures" of liberalism because of its belief in gnosticism, the huge audience grew restive. Paper planes were sent sailing from the balconies, there were scattered cries of "We want Barry" and at one point a rhythmic clapping threatened to send Bozell from the speaker's stand. But he got his audience back when he went into his peroration, which listed the orders that would go out when the ultras' Great Day came:

"To the Joint Chiefs of Staff: Make the necessary preparations for a landing in Havana.

"To our commander in Berlin: Tear down the wall.

"To our chief of mission in the Congo: Change sides.

"To the AEC: Test every conceivable nuclear device.

"To the chief of the CIA: You are under instructions to encourage liberation movements in every nation of the world under communist domination, including the Soviet Union itself, until communism is driven from the face of the earth."

'DIXIE' IS THE TUNE: Aided by a brass band and a shower of balloons from the Garden's ceilings, things livened up when Sen. John Tower, the pride of Texas Republicans, was presented. He made the standard warning that the "real threat comes from the liberal establishment," but he got his biggest applause early in his speech when, noting the time, he said: "I'm going to make it brief."

Two Democrats originally scheduled to appear were not present. Ex-Gen. Edwin A. Walker, now Democratic candidate for governor of Texas, had been ruled off the program by Goldwater, whereupon Sen. Thomas J. Dodd (D-Conn.) withdrew because he would be outnumbered by Republicans. This gap was filled by Sen. Strom Thurmond (D-S.C.), who came to accept an award. Douglas Caddy, national director of YAF, introduced Thurmond and emphasized that he himself was a Republican but "Strom cuts across party lines." He wondered where the nation would be "if not for Strom." The band played "Dixie."

When Thurmond asked the rhetorical questions: "Will our present policies protect freedom and defeat the Marxist forces? Will we win with our existing policies?" the audience responded with thunderous Noes.

POLICY SECRECY: Thurmond charged that the American people were kept in ignorance of their government's foreign policy. To correct this, he announced that "beginning tomorrow [March 8] I will discuss on the floor of the United States Senate the United States foreign policies such as the guidance appears from National Security Council directives."

"The first step to victory," he said, "is the revelation of their own foreign policies to the American people, in order that they, whose liberty is at stake, may judge for themselves whether these policies are designed to win."

Other award winners were:

Herbert Hoover, who declined to interrupt a Florida fishing trip to be present but sent a message to the youth. Eugene Lyons, a senior editor of Readers Digest and a biographer of Richard Nixon, accepted the award for Hoover.

Roger Milliken, a textile manufacturer in South Carolina.

Dr. Ludwig von Mises, economist.

John Wayne, movie actor, of whom a YAF leader said: "Bobby forgot the Alamo . . . But John Wayne is a power in the saddle. He will not forget the Alamo. He is Hollywood's answer to communism." Wayne wasn't present but dancer George Murphy appeared for him.

Charles Edison, former Governor of New Jersey who recently retired as director of the Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. to devote full time to the promotion of conservative organizations fighting communism.

Dr. Richard Weaver of the English Department of the University of Chicago.

John Dos Passos.

Marvin Liebman, secretary of the American-Jewish League Against Communism. In his acceptance speech, Liebman said that Herbert Hoover, Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker and columnist George Sokolsky helped raise the money to start YAF and kept it going.

M. Stanton Evans, editor of the Indianapolis News. He called the Garden rally "the authentic future of the United States."

A prayer for world liberation from communism was offered by the Very Rev. Msgr. Francis Costello, who appeared as the personal representative of Francis Cardinal Spellman. Time (the rally ended at midnight) prevented Dr. Daniel A. Poling from giving a Benediction at its close.

DAVID DANZIG

THE RADICAL RIGHT & THE RISE OF THE FUNDAMENTALIST MINORITY

EARLY IN FEBRUARY of this year a group of leading Protestant ministers and laymen in Dallas, Texas, were invited to form the core of a local chapter of "Christian Citizen," a new national organization whose announced aim is to train Christians in the techniques of practical politics. The founder of Christian Citizen, Mr. Gerri von Frellick (a Denver real estate developer and a Southern Baptist lay leader), spelled out the program of his movement as primarily an educational one whose purpose is to foster Christian principles in the nation's government and to combat "an increasing sense of futility and apathy in America." Qualifications for membership require only that the recruits must "give testimony of their personal experience with Christ" and must "accept the Bible as the infallible word of God." Once having joined, the "Christian Citizen" will be given an extensive training period at the precinct level and then go to work in the political party of his choice. The organization itself, according to von Frellick, will not endorse any candidate or take partisan stands on controversial issues. Appropriate action will be left to the "graduates" who will organize Christians to vote as a bloc and thus "participate effectively in the nation's political life." It is von Frellick's expectation that the movement will eventually become influential enough to "take over a majority of the precincts in this country."

As to actual political objectives, von Frellick has insisted that these are open and unspecified, the ideology of Christian Citizen being that "the democratic process has room for all viewpoints." When questioned about his position on certain key leaders and groups of the much publicized "radical right," von Frellick said that Dr. Fred C. Schwarz's Christian Anti-Communist Crusade was a "terrific" organization and "doing a fabulous job." He also said that the John Birch Society has "made a tremendous contribution to alerting the American people to the problem of Communism." The main difference which the Denver realtor finds between his organization and these others is that they lack "a positive approach"—whereas Christian Citizen can be "a means of launching an offensive in the ideological struggle with Communism."

Behind the vague and pious slogans, then, what we have here is the most recent formation of a cell nucleus in the growing organism of the extreme right. Christian Citizen also offers a particularly clear example of the relation of the more extreme wing of Protestant fundamentalism to the new ultra-conservative movement—a relationship that has frequently been overlooked or scanted by writers in their haste to explain the movement in purely political terms and to find its roots in the same general rightist tendencies that produced the politics of Father Coughlin or of Senator McCarthy or Senator Goldwater, as the case may be. While it is true, of course, that Senator McCarthy is taken by the John Birch Society as its second great martyr, there are some significant differences between McCarthyism and the new radical right—one of the most decisive of which has precisely to do with the connection between this radical right and extreme Protestant fundamentalism.

DAVID DANZIG's two previous contributions to COMMENTARY, "Christianity in a 'Post-Western' Era" and "The New Map of Christianity" (January and September of 1961) were widely discussed. Mr. Danzig is program director of the American Jewish Committee.

Fundamentalism, when noticed at all by our popular journals, is usually patronized as a colorful fragment of an older, vanishing way of life. But the truth is that fundamentalism is a growing socio-religious force in America. While its more moderate wing has been attempting to work out a position of "classic orthodoxy" in theology and an over-all modus vivendi with liberal Protestantism (particularly of the National Council of Churches variety), its more extreme wing, defined in good part by a belligerent opposition to liberal Protestantism and deep hostility to the NCC, has by no means lost ground. It is only of this latter group that we shall be speaking in the following pages.

Fundamentalism is not a sect or a denomination or a specific church; it is a rigorously orthodox point of view which completely dominates some Protestant denominations and has adherents in many others, including even the Episcopal church. Among its basic doctrines are the inerrancy of the Bible, salvation by faith alone, and the pre-millennial return of Christ. On religious questions, it takes a stand against any attempts at revisionism and modernism. This emphasis upon literalness and purity of doctrine makes the fundamentalist look upon pragmatism in the social world with the same suspiciousness and distaste with which he views revisionism in religious doctrine. His commitment to Biblical prophecy, moreover, results in an anti-historicist perspective which readily supports the conspiracy theory of social change. Given all this, and given the association that came to be developed between the "Protestant ethic" and the ideology of 19th-century capitalism, it is not surprising that fundamentalism should always have had a strong disposition to regard the revisions of this ideology (which were partly inspired by Protestant liberals) as the work of heretics and atheistic radicals, infected with and spreading false doctrines in a conspiratorial manner.*

In fundamentalist eyes, departures from 19th-century capitalism have carried with them the corruption of virtually sanctified socio-economic doctrines and have consequently helped to undermine the Christian society. Thus, the fundamentalist's apocalyptic conception of the world as strictly divided into the saved and the damned, the forces of good and the forces of evil, has readily lent itself to reactionary political uses. Fundamentalism today supports a super-patriotic Americanism; the conflict with Communism is not one of power blocs but of faiths, part of the unending struggle between God and the devil. The danger of Communism, therefore, is from within—from the corrosion of faith by insidious doctrines. That is to say, by "collectivism"—the modern fundamentalist's secular counterpart of atheism.

THE INHERENTLY CONSERVATIVE bent of fundamentalism has been further reinforced in America by regional factors. The fundamentalist population has always been located predominantly in the South, the border states, the Middle West, and in several Western states. It was partly as a spokesman for this population that William Jennings Bryan could talk of the East as "enemy territory," and express their economic plight in the fundamentalist imagery of the "cross of gold" speech. In Bryan, as later in Huey Long, the hatred of finance capitalism, or "Wall Street," by a rural population could produce the reforming spirit of Populism without appreciably liberalizing the impacted prejudices of fundamentalist social attitudes. As H. Richard Niebuhr has said:

* In his History of Fundamentalism, Stewart Cole speaks of fundamentalism as "the organized determination of conservative churchmen to continue the imperialistic culture of historic Protestantism, within an inhospitable civilization dominated by secular interests and a progressive Christian idealism."

> The fundamentalist movement was related in some localities to . . . intense racialism or sectionalism. With them it shared antagonism to changes in the mores which the war [World War I] and its consequences, the rise to power of previously submerged immigrant or racial groups and other social processes, brought forth. The political effectiveness of fundamentalism was due in part to this association and to the support which it gave to political leaders, who found in it a powerful symbolism representative of the antagonism of political and economic minorities against the eastern or northern urban industrial majority.

The influence of fundamentalist ideas on the political and social life of these regions is seen in the fact that the states in which the movement predominated were the ones that passed—or nearly passed—statutes forbidding the teaching of evolution in the schools and that first enacted prohibition laws. Similarly, fundamentalism's ancient and unregenerate hostility to Catholicism was in good part responsible for the heavy losses which the Democrat Al Smith suffered in 1928 in these regions.

THE STATES that repudiated Darwinism and Al Smith are today prominent among those nineteen that have passed "Right to Work" laws. Since World War I the social base of fundamentalism has shifted markedly, though few political writers have apparently noticed the shift. Its constituency is no longer mainly made up of sharecroppers and poorly educated villagers. Many fundamentalist churches are modern and imposing, financed by wealthy oilmen from Texas and Oklahoma and prosperous farmers in the wheat and corn belts. Rich and influential lay leaders such as J. Howard Pew and von Frellick now make their influence felt in the power structure of the community and state. The fundamentalists also operate a vast network of colleges, training schools, Bible institutions, Bible prophecy conferences, prayer meetings, and study groups. They have many large publishing houses which blanket small towns with conservative tracts and pamphlets. An increase in Protestant orthodoxy has added members to their churches at a more rapid rate than the liberal churches have been able to show. Though still more numerous in the small sects and local churches such as the Pentecostal and Seventh Day Adventists* and among the Southern Baptists, the fundamentalists, in some areas, are also found in the Presbyterian and Methodist churches, and to a lesser degree, in the Episcopal and Congregationalist ones. For example, the members of a Congregationalist church in Los Angeles and an Episcopal church in Fort Worth, both cities with powerful fundamentalist traditions, are likely to have a stronger affinity with these traditions than with those practiced by their sister church memberships in the large New England cities.

Population movements, affluence, and mass culture have all, of course, obscured some of the distinct regional features of fundamentalism. But it would be a mistake to view the more prosperous and integrated surfaces of contemporary fundamentalism as indicating any real loss or modification of its identity. Though it has become increasingly middle class, this has not changed its profoundly conservative character, and its vast wealth and growing respectability have mainly served to broaden the base of its traditional antagonism to modern reform capitalism. Its local and regional character has insulated it from the influence of religious pluralism; still mainly Anglo-Saxon, it has preserved—unlike Catholicism and liberal Protestantism—an ethnic homogeneity that shields it from the liberalizing social adjustments invariably created by contending ethnic interests.

WITH THE CONTINUING world crisis, fundamentalism is finding a new political relevance for its doctrines and an arena in which it can exert its growing influence. As Christian Century, the leading organ of liberal Protestantism, observed recently: "Now the fundamentalists have apparently decided that the time has come to break out of their isolation and to contend for the soul of American Protestantism." A special target of theirs has been the National Council of Churches—the citadel of modern Protestantism. On the whole the attacks have come in the rural areas rather than the large cities, by means of local media rather than national. (One exception was an Air Force manual charging that the National Council of Churches was infiltrated by Communism, which had the effect of driving the Fourth Baptist Church of Wichita, Kansas—the largest local church in the Baptist convention—to withdraw from the convention in protest of its affiliation with the Council.) In those regions populated with churches, schools, publishing houses, and study groups that are dominated by fundamentalists, liberal Protestantism has been subjected to an avalanche of bigotry and calumny exceeded in intensity only by the worst period of anti-Catholic propaganda.

In analyzing the motives behind these attacks, Dr. Truman B. Douglas, formerly vice president of the Board of Home Missions of the Congregational Churches, has explained that "what they really want is to silence the witness of the Church on all social problems and issues. . . ." That is to say, on all social issues and problems other than Communism. However, as we began by indicating, the fundamentalist mentality and temperament—in the extreme, unregenerate forms that we are discussing in this article—is unable to view the threat of Russian or Chinese Communism in pragmatic and realistic ways. For the fundamentalist mind the great menace of Communism is less in its military power than in its doctrines, and the main threat of these doctrines is not that they operate abroad but at home. Like the "papists" of America who, the fundamentalist continues to believe, have never ceased in their insidious and cunningly concealed attempts to undermine the faith and institutions of Protestant America and to deliver the nation up to Rome, the Communists today are everywhere at work disseminating under such subterfuges as "liberalism" and "middle-of-the-road progressivism" the heretical doctrines of collectivism that are poisoning American faith and subverting its social order. Instead of a puissant and pure Christian America marching resolutely toward its apocalyptic encounter with the Soviet anti-Christ, the nation, drugged with false doctrines and blinded by traitorous leaders, is being carried down the road to appeasement and, eventually, capitulation.

It is not surprising to discover, then, that Robert Welch, who has built his organization to fight a conspiracy which numbers President Eisenhower among its members, should have come from a strong fundamentalist background, or that John Birch himself first prepared for his martyrdom in China by being suspended from college because of the extremist zeal of his fundamentalist activities. Much of the affinity of fundamentalism for what is today called the radical right derives from the attempt to wed Protestant zeal and reactionary animus which developed and took shape during the New Deal years. The leader of one such group, the Christian Freedom Foundation, wrote a diatribe which was titled The Menace of Roosevelt. During the same period of the middle 1930's, an organization called Spiritual Mobilization was established "to check the trend toward pagan statism." In coming out of their "isolation," as the Christain Century puts it, the fundamentalists are not only "competing for the soul of Protestantism" but are also trying to reassert the traditional cultural and political supremacy of conservative Protestantism. Its leaders—men like the Reverend Billy Joe Hargis, the Reverend Fred C. Schwarz, the Reverend James Fifield—are no less aware than the late Senator McCarthy was of the demagogic possibilities inherent in an anti-Communist crusade. But they enjoy an advantage that McCarthy did not have: a massive potential following which is prepared to accept the belief that a restoration of the influence of the old-time religion must be accompanied by a return to the pre-New Deal era of free enterprise and isolationism if the country is to be purged of its disabling doses of collectivism and internationalism. Thus the fundamentalist movement provides both potent political images and popular support to rally other disaffected Americans of different backgrounds who nonetheless feel that they, as well as the nation as a whole, have been losing power, and who are united not only in their hostility to Communism but in their anti-minority, anti-city, anti-labor, and anti-international attitudes.

THE ELECTION OF A Catholic to the Presidency has signalled the change in America from a Protestant nation with a prevailing Anglo-Saxon tradition to a pluralistic nation with a Protestant tradition. The defeats that the South has been suffering in civil rights mark the demise of white supremacy in its own sectional stronghold. Given current population trends, increasing urbanization, the organizational growth of minority groups, these changes are not likely to be reversed. Not long ago a leading figure in Spiritual Mobilizers, who also heads a large and wealthy Los Angeles church, articulated part of what the fundamentalist position amounts to in socio-ethnic terms when he reportedly said, "We are not going to give the city away to the Jews, Negroes, and Mexicans." Such cities as Houston, Miami, and Los Angeles were always fundamentalist strongholds, but the fact that they are now also centers of rightist politics is at least partly to be explained in terms of local responses to a growing Catholic minority, a growing Jewish community, and rapidly increasing Negro or Spanish-speaking minorities.

While the election of Kennedy reflected a decline in bigotry in some quarters, his campaign stimulated a recrudescence of it in others; and his career as President is likely to provoke an increase in self-consciousness among our religious communities and a heightened awareness of their sources of contention—in other words, it is likely to deepen the pattern of religious pluralism in America even further. The fundamentalists' reaction to the ascendancy of pluralism is double-sided. As Anglo-Saxon Protestants, in the main, they are reacting to the loss of the political dominance that came from their majority position. As fundamentalist Protestants, however, they are a particularly fervent and committed religious minority and one growing in wealth and numbers and ambition. As such, they are behaving more and more like other important minorities in America—demanding more time and space in the media, and devoting more energy to organizing their constituencies for social and political action. Whatever else may develop, it is abundantly clear that the Protestant fundamentalists have now taken their place among the other distinct groups—the Catholics, liberal Protestants, Jews, Negroes, and secular humanists—that make up the pluralistic socio-religious pattern of America.

In trying to convince the community that America's interest will best be served through their leadership, many fundamentalist religious and lay leaders have been moving into the seats of power which have opened on the radical right. Insofar as militant anti-Communism today has a socio-religious cast, fundamentalism has replaced Catholicism as the spearhead of the movement.* None of this is to say, of course, that the radical right has become identified with the aspirations of a single group—it would hardly have got off the ground if it had. The radical right cuts across all groups in varying degrees, and no doubt there is still a hard core of Catholic McCarthyites who have followed his sanctified image into the radical right movement. Father John F. Cronin, the author of the pamphlet issued last month by the NCWC attacking the new "extremists of the right," was indeed quoted by the New York Times as saying that "quite a few Catholics" belong to the John Birch Society.

BUT SUPPORTERS of Senator McCarthy were, on the whole, a much more variegated and dispersed group than the constituency of the radical right today seems to be. Though many Catholics found in the Senator an expression of their militant anti-Communism, McCarthyism never became a "Catholic movement." It drew the bulk of its support from the traditional "isolationist bloc"—pro-German and anti-British—who had opposed an alliance with Communist Russia against Nazi Germany. McCarthy also had a sizeable following in the large cities, in the national veterans' organizations, and in working-class groups—particularly those with roots in countries now behind the Iron Curtain.

From his famous first speech in Wheeling, West Virginia, McCarthy clearly played up to the minority groups, who were attracted by his hard anti-Communism, which they saw as posing no threat to the economic gains they had made during the New Deal. For the most part, McCarthy managed to attack New Deal liberalism for allowing itself to be infiltrated by Communists, without directly challenging the policies and practices of reformed capitalism that had been achieved by the Democratic coalition and had come to be supported by the middle-of-the-road consensus in America. Seen in historical perspective, McCarthyism was the final phase in the repudiation of our wartime alliance with Russia; the charges of treason and disloyalty were aimed vengefully by those who had always considered Stalin a greater menace than Hitler against those who had taken the opposite position and engineered the alliance with Russia, and who might therefore be held responsible for the post-war predicaments which had flowed from that alliance. However, McCarthyism was virtually devoid of social and economic content as well as religious inspiration, and so lacked stable bases of local, popular support. With an all but inevitable logic, McCarthy was forced to play out his role in the national arena where his main concerns lay. Once his performance there had been discredited by the changes in international policy that were already in progress when his star appeared on the horizon, and by his unchecked hostility to the Executive branch that was now in the hands of his own party, McCarthy collapsed. And with no further issues and grass-roots support which his followers could exploit, McCarthyism, in effect, collapsed with him.

The radical right, as we have been seeing, is a very different affair, one

* Father Robert A. Graham, among others, has called attention to this change in a recent issue of America: "It was not so long ago that Catholics were regarded as the most active foes of Communism. This can no longer be said today. Dr. Fred C. Schwarz's anti-Communist Christian Crusade is of predominantly Baptist inspiration. The National Education Program of Dr. George S. Benson [of the Church of Christ], is another fundamentalist operation. It is no accident that the key centers of the John Birch Society are in the fundamentalist South and Southwest." An even more authoritative indication of the fact that the new radical right does not lean on a predominantly Catholic base is the campaign begun last month by the National Catholic Welfare Conference—the central administrative body of the American Bishops—to discourage participation by Catholics in extreme anti-Communist movements.

with a definite political, economic, and social purpose, and able to capitalize on the growing power of an important religious group which has long felt the denial of its rightful share in shaping the policies of the nation. To be sure, fundamentalist conservatism is today by no means a monolithic ideology. Even as von Frellick was attempting to recruit prominent ministers and lay leaders in Dallas for Christian Citizen, a leader of the Baptist General Convention of Texas was publicly reminding them of the recent recommendation of the Convention that "Baptists . . . exercise caution when asked to support efforts to mobilize Christians into a political power." But despite this recommendation, and despite warnings by other Baptists and moderate fundamentalists, it remains clear that large numbers of fundamentalists are being "mobilized" and that their religious and regional conservatism is converting readily into the ideology of the radical right and swelling the chorus of reactionary and apocalyptic voices in the land.

THE MAIN STRENGTH and appeal of fundamentalist conservatism lies in its nativist nationalism. In the "gray atmosphere" of America's tense, cautious international power struggle with the Soviet Union in a nuclear age—an atmosphere made even more troubled by the rise of the minorities within the society—its program of "Americanism" becomes a way of explaining the nation's loss of supremacy and autonomy; it also provides a set of crusading directives for the road to Armageddon that dispels uncertainty and discharges both national tensions and local frustrations. On the international scene, it identifies America's "decline" and the Communist ascendancy with the loss of the West's four-hundred-year monopoly of power and with the passing of Anglo-Saxon dominance. The immense strengthening of America's world position since the war counts for nothing in the light of our failure to assume the world dominance which Great Britain has relinquished. The shock which followed Sputnik has doubtless helped to bring on the somewhat delayed discovery by certain people in the hinterlands that the American century had been lost, just as the Supreme Court decision on desegregation and the election of Kennedy woke many of the same people to the fact that political power in America was also passing out of their hands.

The appeal of the new nativist nationalism, however, need not remain confined to the rabid—as McCarthyism, being a form of revenge politics, necessarily was. The redistribution of power both abroad and at home has disheartened many moderate people—those who gladly might have settled for less than a monopoly if they could be sure that the Russians (and the Chinese) would do likewise, and who might have accepted the claims of the racial, religious, and ethnic minorities (and of labor), so long as these did not encroach upon their own lives, and so long as their own interests continued to be dominantly represented. Feeling that all of this is no longer the case, the nativist segment of the Protestant population becomes a prey of those who would like to replace the pluralistic orientation which has led America to a precarious co-existence by a doctrinaire, chauvinistic Americanism seeking to achieve a "Pax Americana." In Protestant fundamentalism, imbued with nationalism—not unlike the case of pre-World War II German Lutheranism—many formerly moderate people find a powerful rationale and symbolism for this complex of attitudes. The practical program to support the "Americanist" effort in foreign affairs has the further attraction of asking for the abolition of the welfare state, which the Protestants in question see as benefiting mainly the minorities whose rise to prominence has begun to threaten their control within the society and reshape their America in a different image. Thus they are susceptible to a program which by calling for a return to a 19th-century type of capitalism and an end to collaboration with our allies on an equal basis, will bring into power those native groups who can restore their traditional position in the scheme of things. It is on such anxieties and impulses that the radical right has battened.

Whoever has taken the radical right as amounting to nothing more than the fulminations of a few crackpots, or the temporary prominence of the lunatic fringe achieved mainly by publicity, would do well to ponder the matter further. More thought had better be taken, also, by those who have concluded that since the radical right is unlikely to take over America, it can be disregarded as a growing power bloc and a potential influence for harm.

WHILE IT IS PROBABLY true that the new-found strength of reactionary ideas cannot be said to indicate a turn toward conservatism in the population at large, it does seem to indicate that American conservatism is being pulled to the right. This in itself represents a gain for the ultras. But what gives them an even greater potentiality for influence is the fact that they operate at the local and state levels, where a minimum of pressure can exert a maximum of effect, and where there is no necessity for taking the risk of an all-or-nothing gamble—as McCarthy, working at the national level only, was forced to do. This does not mean that the new ultras are interested only in local affairs. On the contrary, as a distinct and now politically self-conscious minority within the pluralistic pattern, they are demanding a greater voice in the shaping of national policy, which they hope to achieve through a strategy of interlocking local pressures. (The effectiveness of such a strategy can be seen from the enormous amount of attention Manager Mitchell attracted through his attack on public welfare programs in the city of Newburgh; a similar attack in Congress would probably have fallen flat.)

So far as foreign policy is concerned, there is even an advantage to the ultras in being an out-of-power faction: they can conduct their programs with wild irresponsibility, blanketing the country with small undercover cells, repressing free discussion, and imposing a doctrinaire conformity. The effect of all this is to reduce the government's opportunities for a flexible handling of delicate problems such as we now face in Germany, in the UN, in Africa. Perhaps most important of all, the ultras make it very difficult for the country to dissociate itself from the imperialism and white supremacy in which the Anglo-Saxon world has figured so prominently in the past. It is ironic, if not yet tragic, that having more or less united the Western world around the belief that the best way to oppose Communism is through the promotion of social reform and the development of international pluralism, America should now be the scene of a nativist movement which would substitute for this idea a belligerent nationalism, one whose socio-religious mystique is not very different from that with which certain European nations recently experimented and in so disastrous a fashion.

DOMESTIC REPORT

APRIL 1962 - VOL. 14, No. 6—PUBLISHED BY THE ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH

REV. BILLY JAMES HARGIS: THE CHRISTIAN CRUSADE

In the growing complex of self-appointed America-savers, self-styled experts on Communism and money-minded crusaders which comprise the so-called "radical right" in American life, Dr. Billy James Hargis and his Christian Crusade rank among the most zealous, the most energetic and the fastest blooming.

Hargis, who operates his Crusade out of Tulsa, Oklahoma, has been claiming to fight communism by radio and from the pulpit for about ten years, but only in the last five has he sky-rocketed to a position of major importance on the radical right. This fall his message will "go national" via the Mutual Radio Network.

Today, Hargis' claimed budget for 1962 is $1,250,000 a quarter-imllion increase from his reported budget for 1961. He broadcasts some 400 programs a week over 200 radio stations in 46 states and over some dozen TV outlets covering some 20 states.

Radical Right-Wing Ideology

There is little doubt that the propaganda line that pours forth from Hargis and his Tulsa headquarters is orthodox radical right-wing ideology. It proclaims that the national government, and the nation's churches, clergy, press, schools, colleges, and labor unions are controlled or strongly influenced by Communists, their tools or their agents. So is the U. S. Supreme Court which, in its recent rulings, has aided the Communist conspiracy, and so is the U.N. At least, so the radical right would have us believe.

In addition to his broadcasts, Hargis pours forth his extremism in a weekly newspaper column, and in articles, sermons, tape recordings, TV films, books, tracts and pamphlets available from Christian Crusade headquarters in a downtown Tulsa office building. (Plans have been underway for the construction of a new $500,000 Crusade headquarters on a piece of property in Tulsa purchased in 1960).

Hargis also purveys the standard radical right-wing line at the numerous rallies he stages in various parts of the country—but mostly in the South, Southwest and Far West. He travels to these rallies in a luxurious "land-cruiser"—a converted Greyhound bus refitted to include living quarters, a drawing room, an office, baths and a recording studio. The land-cruiser was converted at a reported cost of $50,000 and is being paid off at the rate of about $800 a month—but Hargis is a big man and spends money in a big way.

He is on the road some 20 days each month peddling his right-wing extremism in emotional and evangelical tones.

The chapter headings of Hargis latest book—"A Communist America—Must It Be?" give the flavor of his propaganda pitch:

"Communism, Its Founder and Its Objectives; A Bird's Eye View of Treason; America—Marked for Conquest; A Free Press—Leading America Leftward; The Faith of our Fathers; Patriotism—Once Revered, Now Smeared; Communist Influence in American Schools; Communism and the Labor Unions; The Suicidal Folly of American Business; Communism and Racial Tension; A Supreme Court Against America; United Nations—Greatest Hoax Ever Perpetrated on the American Public; Fantastic Foreign Aid; Communism and the National Council of Churches; Christ, The Great Destroyer."

Million-Dollar-a-Year Operation

While Robert Welch and the John Birch Society are ahead of Hargis in volume of national notoriety, the Tulsa evangelist's Christian Crusade ranks along with the Society as a million-dollar-a-year operation, and may even be ahead in terms of grass-roots impact. While Welch's membership is estimated at about 60,000, Hargis claims the Crusade has more than 100,000 repeating contributors, that his monthly magazine goes to 110,000 and that it is actually seen by 500,000.

In any event, Hargis and the Christian Crusade today are a major force on the "radical right" and the rotund preacher shows increasing evidence of wanting to branch out. Besides his projected nationwide broadcasts, he has announced plans to boost his following ten-fold—to a million—and to launch a campus drive to enlist the support of collegians and save America's college youth from alleged Communist influences.

In addition, Hargis recently took the lead in calling a conference of rightist groups in Washington, D.C. with the stated aim of trying to achieve some coordination in the activities of a large number of such organizations. Included in the goals Hargis announced for the Washington conclave was the election of conservatives—regardless of party—to the U.S. Congress.

Hargis claimed he took the initiative in calling the Washington conference and that he paid for it out of his own pocket, as an individual, and not as the founder and director of the Christian Crusade. This may well have been a maneuver to protect the tax-exempt status of the Crusade because of the political overtones of the meeting in Washington.

Press reports of the number of Senators and Representatives invited to attend the Washington get-together ranged from ten all the way up to 35 or 50. Two attended. One of them was Rep. John Rousselot, Republican of California, an admitted member of the John Birch Society who is also a member of the Christian Crusade Advisory Committee. The other was Rep. E. Y. Berry, Republican of South Dakota. Both spoke at the Washington meeting.

Newsmen Barred From Meeting

Although newspaper reporters and other media were barred from the closed-door conference, Hargis briefed the press afterwards. About 100 leaders representing some 75 rightist groups, he said, had attended the parley, held in the Washington Hotel. Those who attended, according to Hargis, set themselves up as a "coordinating committee" which would meet again in June.

Five men were chosen, Hargis said, to serve as a "steering committee." Several of those he named were fairly well known personalities in rightist activity. Edward Hunter, journalist and author who is regarded by rightists as an expert on Communist brainwashing, is serving as chairman.

Serving with him are retired Brig. Gen. Bonner Fellers, national chairman of "For America" and identified with a baker's dozen of super-patriotic and rightist groups; retired Maj. Gen. Charles A. Willoughby, a member of the Christian Crusade National Advisory Committee, ex military editor of the "American Mercury" magazine, and now editor of the Foreign Intelligence Digest section of Hargis' "Weekly Crusader"; Benjamin Gitlow, long ago a top-ranking Communist and now identified with right-wing activity; and Rep. Rousselot.

Groups Represented

Among the groups identified in the press as having been represented at the Washington meeting were the Daughters of the American Revolution; the John Birch Society; the National Indignation Convention; We The People (of which Hargis is national chairman); For America; Right to Work National Committee; Young Americans for Freedom; American Society of Physicians and Surgeons; American Coalition of Patriotic Societies; Citizens Foreign Aid Committee; Liberty Lobby; the American Free Enterprise Assn.; and the Manion Forum.

The American Legion was also identified in the press as having been represented, but other reports said that Legion national headquarters denied having authorized anyone to represent the veterans' group in an official capacity.

As broad program goals, the Washington parley called for 1) support of efforts to get the U.S. out of the U.N. and the U.N. out of the U.S. 2) pressure on U.S. Attorney General Robert Kennedy to force members of the Communist Party to register under the law, or to prosecute them; and 3) encouragement of courses on constitutional government in the public schools, especially at the high school level.

Exactly what Hargis got out of the conference—or what he hoped to achieve beyond his stated aim of sparking some coordination on the right—is a mater for speculation. One fact is clear; the Washington parley was Hargis' most ambitious venture so far into the national ultra-rightist arena.

Besides the organizations named as having been represented at the Washington conclave called by Hargis, there were also some interesting individuals present. Hargis, for instance, has disavowed Gerald L.K. Smith, dean of anti-Semitic rabble-rousers in the U.S., and has said he wants nothing to do with Smith.

This did not, however, prevent Mrs. Opal Tanner White, Smith's long-time colleague and assistant, from attending the Hargis-sponsored meeting in Washigton. Since admission to the gathering was by invitation only, and since credentials were carefully examined at the door, it can only be assumed that Hargis or his aides blundered by inviting Mrs. White, that she got in without an invitation, that Hargis didn't know who Mrs. White was and what her links were with Smith, or that Hargis knew all about Mrs. White, but didn't care.

Similar questions might be raised about a young man who reportedly said he represented the Nationalist Party of New York, (a gutter-type, anti-Semitic group of young men who hate Jews), and about Willis A. Carto of the Liberty Lobby, an associate of anti-Semites and until 1960 the operator of an anti-Semitic newsletter called "RIGHT".

Hargis' Career

Hargis is an evangelistic preacher who has, with some astute commercial public relations and promotional help, built his Christian Crusade into an operation with a 1962 seven-figure budget. He is dedicated to fighting alleged Communist influences in American life, as well as Liberalism in religion and political affairs. Hargis views Liberalism as posing as serious a danger to America as Communism—and he says so.

Along with the John Birch Society, the National Education Program of Harding College, and the National Indignation Convention, Hargis' Christian Crusade is —today—among the three or four most important organizations on the ultra-right. In his literature and publications, Hargis calls the Christian Crusade "America's largest anti-Communist organization."

Whether the claim is true—or prideful exaggeration—the plain fact is that the Hargis operation has grown with phenomenal rapidity in the last few years. It is a far cry from the small operation of 1951, which Hargis incorporated in Sapulpa, Oklahoma, as Christian Echoes Ministry, Inc.—changed in 1952 to the Christian Echoes National Ministry, Inc., which is still the official corporate name of the Crusade.

A rotund, youngish man of 36, who weighs about 250 pounds, Hargis operates with tremendous energy and drive.

Hargis was born in Texarkana, Texas, in 1925. He graduated from Texarkana High School. He then enrolled in Ozark Bible College, Bentonville, Ark., (a small institution with 20 students, no longer in existence) and was ordained a minister in the Disciples of Christ denomination at the age of 18.

[The Disciples of Christ and the Christian Church denominations merged a few years ago. With respect to Hargis' affiliation with the International Convention of Christian Churches (Disciples of Christ), Dr. Gaines M. Cook, executive secretary of the Convention had this to say:

"Mr. Hargis' name has not been listed since our 1958 Year Book was published inasmuch as he no longer serves a congregation connected with the International Convention of Christian Churches, nor any agency affiliated with us. We understand that he is now engaged in a private enterprise which has no connection whatsoever with the Christian Churches (Disciples of Christ)."]

Hargis assumed his first pastorate at Sallisaw, Oklahoma. Later he served at Granby, Missouri (near Joplin), and then arrived in Sapulpa, Oklahoma, where he was a pastor until 1950. In that year, he states, he resigned to direct his anti-Communist activities.

His Christian Echoes Ministry was incorporated the following year.

In an odd sequence of educational progression, Hargis received a Doctor of Divinity degree in 1954 from Defender Seminary (Puerto Rico), and then went on to a Bachelor of Arts degree in 1956 and a Bachelor of Theology degree in 1958 from Burton College and Seminary, Manitou, Colorado, near Colorado Springs. In 1957, Hargis received an honorary Doctor of Laws degree from Belin Memorial University, then located at Chillicothe, Missouri, but now located at Manassas, Virginia. And in 1961, the Founder and director of the Christian Crusade received another honorary Doctor of Laws degree from Bob Jones University, Greenville, S.C. Hargis has for some years enjoyed a friendly relationship with Bob Jones Sr. and Bob Jones Jr., founder and President respectively, of Bob Jones University.

It is perhaps pertinent to note that Burton College, from which Hargis received his Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Theology degrees, is listed by the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare as a "degree mill." The Department defines a "degree mill" as "an organization that awards degrees without requiring its students to meet educational standards for such degrees established and traditionally followed by reputable educational institutions."

It is also pertinent to note that Belin Memorial University, too, is listed by the Department as a "degree mill." Dr. Clyde Belin, president of the school, was indicted by a Federal grand jury in Kansas City on June 25, 1959 on six counts of using the mails to defraud. He pleaded nolo contendere and was sentenced on Sept. 16, 1959 to a one-year term in Federal Prison, Terre Haute, Ind.

At its new location in Virginia, Belin has a new President but is still listed as a "degree mill."

As for Defender Seminary in Puerto Rico, from which Hargis received his Doctor of Divinity degree, that was an enterprise of the late Rev. Gerald B. Winrod, a notorious anti-Semite of the 1940's, whose bigotry earned him the dubious title of "Jayhawk Nazi."

Hargis, His Crusade and Anti-Semitism

While Hargis and the Christian Crusade do not peddle anti-Semitism, Hargis himself has acknowledged the debt he owes to the late Winrod. Hargis wrote that he once called on Winrod for help and guidance to begin a radio crusade against communism. "Dr. Winrod," Hargis reported in the October, 1959, "Christian Crusade" magazine, "explained the operations of an office and the use of letters to underwrite the cost of such an expensive operation."

Articles and letters by Hargis appeared on a number of occasions in Winrod's anti-Semitic magazine, "The Defender." The November, 1954, issue of Winrod's hate sheet, for instance, reprinted a letter in Winrod's behalf by Hargis to Robert E. Lee of the Federal Communications Commission. In it, Hargis asked that Winrod be permitted to broadcast over local radio stations. Hargis asked Lee to stop the persecution and boycott allegedly being suffered by Winrod at the hands of local radio station owners.

In his letter to Lee, Hargis wrote, in part:

"In my years as a Radio Pastor I have learned to know and love many religious leaders on radio. I have great respect for these men. One of the Radio Pastors I have appreciated because of his sincere and inspiring Christian programs is Dr. Gerald B. Winrod of Wichita, Kansas..."

Hargis added that he was writing to Lee "without Dr. Winrod's knowledge or approval..."

Another to whom Hargis paid tribute, and with whom he cooperated in the past, was the late Rev. E. F. Webber of Oklahoma City, former pastor of the Calvary Tabernacle in that city. Webber was a former associate of Winrod's, and conducted the Southwest Radio Church of the Air. As late as September, 1956, a magazine, called "Truth," published by Webber, was carrying articles by such notorious anti-Semites as Don Bell, George Deatherage and Rev. Bob Shuler, Sr. Shuler for many years edited the now-defunct "Methodist Challenge" and was a notorious bigot and friend of Gerald L. K. Smith. In 1958, Hargis and Webber jointly staged a series of "one-day crusades" in six Texas cities—billed as "The 'Texas Tour' for Christian Americanism." When Webber died in 1959 at the age of 65, Hargis wrote a tribute to him in "Christian Crusade" magazine and acknowledged the help he had received from Webber, as well as from Winrod.

Hargis has also been involved in the promotion of magazines and literature from a few sources that can hardly be called untainted.

At the time of the Little Rock desegregation crisis, Hargis sent out a leaflet to his followers, offering for sale—at $1 a copy—a pamphlet called "The Lowdown on Little Rock" which, he said, he had reviewed in his radio broadcasts. The author of the pamphlet was Joseph P. Kamp, a long-time extremist pamphleteer, many of whose efforts have been replete with ill-concealed anti-Semitic innuendo.

After his broadcasts mentioning the Kamp pamphlet on Little Rock, Hargis indicated that he had managed to get copies in response to requests by thousands of his listeners. "We are proud," he added in his plug for Kamp, "to send you a copy..."

Kamp and Winrod are not the only members of the anti-Semitic fringe upon whom Hargis apparently has relied over the years. He also promoted the "American Mercury" magazine at a time when the once great name in American magazine journalism was serving as an outlet for blatant anti-Semitism.

The December, 1956 issue of Hargis' "Christian Crusade" published a report on a meeting between Hargis and the then publisher of the "American Mercury"—at which, the article said, they reportedly agreed to exchange articles and to offer a special rate for subscriptions to both "Christian Crusade" and the "American Mercury." In a New York television interview, Hargis acknowledged the exchange of articles and the cooperation between his organization and the "American Mercury." A subsequent flyer, issued from Hargis hedquarters, offered—for $5—one-year subscriptions to the two magazines, five back issues of "American Mercury" and a series of 25 so-called "Mercury Reprints." In his flyer, Hargis praised the "American Mercury" magazine.

(The "American Mercury" was sold by its publisher in January 1961 and was taken over by Defenders of the Christian Faith Inc., the late Gerald Winrod's organization. While it now reflects a Fundamentalist and ultra-rightist viewpoint which puts it close to the American radical right, it no longer disseminates anti-Semitism.)

Hargis' Odd Connections

There are a number of other odd connections between Hargis and individuals who have been identified with anti-Semitic activity:

- Ed Hill of Tulsa, Oklahoma, is listed by Hargis as a trustee of the Christian Crusade. Ed Hill of Tulsa, Oklahoma, has been listed by Gerald L. K. Smith, notorious anti-Jewish rabble-rouser, as a financial contributor to Smith's Christian Nationalist Crusade, Los Angeles, California, for the years 1952 to 1956 inclusive, and 1958 through 1960 inclusive. The total Smith says Hill contributed to his activity in those years was $5,077, his yearly contributions ranging from $520 in 1952 to $745 in 1953—and averaging $634 a year.

- Allen Zoll, a notorious anti-Semite who once headed an organization called American Patriots Inc., listed as subversive by the U.S. Attorney General, was identified as a staff member of the Hargis Christian Crusade for a few months during 1961. Hargis' magazine also reported that Zoll's files had been acquired by the Christian Crusade, and termed them "priceless"—although the same article fixed their value at $50,000. Asking his flock to contribute towards the $2,400 cost of shipping the files to Tulsa, Hargis said they had been started in 1919, and contained "the names of thousands of clergymen and educatores who have chosen to affiliate with communist front organizations over the years..."

Hargis did not tell his readers anything about Zoll's history as a long-time anti-Semite, nor did he disclose the fact that one of Zoll's organizations was included on the U.S. Attorney General's list of subversive organizations. It is not known whether Hargis was unaware of Zoll's lurid history as a bigot, or whether he knew, and chose to ignore it, withholding the information from his followers. In any event, the Zoll episode tends to suggest that Hargis and his organization may well share a malady of those on the radical right—a lack of awareness, a lack of alertness or a lack of concern about anti-Semitism.

All sorts of similar oddities turn up when one examines the names of other persons with whom Hargis has had relationships of one kind or another, over the years, or who may have graced his platform as speakers before Christian Crusade audiences.

● Willis Carto: Now an official of a right-wing group called "Liberty Lobby," with offices in Washington, D.C., Carto was a featured speaker at a major Christian Crusade convention held in Tulsa in August, 1961. From 1955 to 1960, Carto was executive secretary of a San Francisco organization called "Liberty and Property" which published a periodical called "RIGHT"—a newsletter which purported to be an organ of conservative views and opinion, but which increasingly became a clearing house for information regarding the activities of anti-Semites, and a vehicle for the dissemination of blatant anti-Semitism. Carto was in touch with a number of notorious anti-Semites during his period as executive secretary of "Liberty and Property" and plugged their work and their literature on frequent occasions. The blatant anti-Semitism in the publication "RIGHT"—plus Carto's contacts with known anti-Semites—placed him close to, if not actually inside, the extremist, anti-Semitic fringe of American life during the years 1955 to 1960. For a short time, during 1959, Carto was employed by Robert Welch of the John Birch Society.

● Wickliffe Vennard, Houston, Texas: Manager of an insurance company in Houston, Vennard holds to the view that the Federal Reserve System is the cause of most of the evil in the world generally and in the United States in particular. Vennard's "revelations" about the power and influence of the Federal Reserve System are generously salted with anti-Semitic innuendo and open charges of an anti-Semitic nature. As early as 1954, he distributed a 15-page document in which arguments in favor of an extreme isolationism were spiced with references to "a small minority" that "fomented and financed the Russian Revolution" and which "furnished advisers to our Presidents," etc. Another document by Vennard declared that in the past and now "our enemy was and is within—the international Zionists who have steered our ship of state from Wall Street by means of money control." In "The Federal Reserve Corporation," Vennard apologizes for Hitler's Nazis, and defends Hitler who was, he says, "forced... into power to chase the money changers from the temple..." As "documentary evidence," Vennard cites the "Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion" and charges that "Jews from Eastern Europe have set up an underhanded scheme for world control."

In August, 1957, Vennard's book on the Federal Reserve was plugged by Hargis and the Christian Crusade via a letter offering it to those who would promptly send contributions to the work of the Christian Crusade. In his signed plug, Hargis called the Vennard book "truly monumental" and "dynamic," and described Vennard as "a dear and trusted friend of Christian Crusade." On one occasion, in response to a request that he recommend literature, Vennard suggested that his inquirer read "Don Bell Reports" —a notorious anti-Semitic publication—which Vennard himself had, in his book, shown evidence of having read.

● W. L. Foster, Tulsa, Oklahoma: Until his death last August, Walter Lee Foster of Tulsa was a long-time friend and associate of Hargis. A cover picture in the March, 1960, issue of "Christian Crusade" magazine shows a group that includes Foster, who is identified by the magazine itself as "Dr. Hargis' business advisor." The picture was taken on the occasion of the purchase of a tract of real estate in Tulsa for the new Christian Crusade headquarters. On page 18 of the same issue, an article on the purchase contained the following paragraph:

> "The purchase of the property for Christian Crusade was handled by one of our loyal Tulsa Crusaders and a true Christian patriot, Dr. W. L. Foster. Dr. Foster is well-known in local banking and investment circles, and has served for several years as Chief Business Counselor for Christian Crusade. It was largely through his vision and alertness that we were able to secure this property at a real bargain price."

When Foster died last August, the September issue of "Christian Crusade" carried a black-bordered box relaying the news to the magazine's readers. That box identified Foster as business and financial consultant to the Crusade, and a close personal friend of Hargis. It said that Foster's widow has asked that, in lieu of floral tributes, donations be sent instead to the Christian Crusade.

The Christian Crusade was not the late Mr. Foster's only interest. Reports filed by Gerald L. K. Smith's Christian Nationalist Crusade show Foster to have been a contributor to Smith's operation in 1952, 1954, and 1959, when he gave amonts of $125, $115 and $105 to the West Coast anti-Semitic rabble-rouser.

Foster also served for some time as chairman of the U.S. Day Committee, with headquarters in Tulsa, which was set up to oppose U.N. Day, and in which Merwin K. Hart, a long-time anti-Semite, was one of the main and moving spirits.

Foster was active in a long list of ultra-rightist organizations, such as the Congress of Freedom, and "We The People" of which he was a regional leader in Oklahoma. He was also a member of the National Board of Fellows of the Freedom School in Colorado and of the temporary Advisory Board of Carto's "Liberty Lobby" operation.

At the 1959 "We The People" convention in Chicago, Foster was observed together with Opal Tanner White, Gerald L. K. Smith's long-time colleague in the Christian Nationalist Crusade, and Elizabeth Dilling, a notorious anti-Semite for more than 20 years.

News of Foster's passing was solemnly recorded in such known anti-Semitic publications as Smith's "The Cross and the Flag," Conde McGinley's "Common Sense," and Merwin K. Hart's "Economic Council Letter."

● Retired Marine Corps Lt. Gen. Pedro A. Del Valle has in the past been listed officially by Hargis and the Christian Crusade as a member of the Crusade's National Advisory Committee, although his name does not appear in more recent listings. Del Valle is an anti-Semite, whose record of bigotry goes back more than a decade to the time in 1950 when he publicly endorsed a blatant anti-Semitic pamphlet authored by one Robert H. Williams, a leading anti-Jewish hate peddler of the 1950's, who is no longer active as a propagandist. In 1952, Del Valle addressed a letter to the delegates at the Republican National Convention in Chicago, urging them to read carefully the June, 1952, issue of "Williams Intelligence Summary," an anti-Jewish periodical, now defunct, which Williams published for a number of years. In the June, 1952, issue, Williams characterized General Eisenhower as a dupe of "Zionists and Communists."

Del Valle also has a long-standing close relationship with Merwin

K. Hart, and the National Economic Council. For more than ten years, Del Valle has been an officer of the Hart organization, and at present is listed as one of its vice-presidents.

Del Valle, over the years, has lent his name to a number of extreme right-wing organizations, such as W. L. Foster's U.S. Day Committee, Carto's former organization (called "Liberty and Property" which published "RIGHT"), and has for some years headed up a group called "Defenders of the American Constitution, Inc."

A year or two ago, his name was listed as a member of the Advisory Committee of the newly-formed "Committee on Pan-American Policy" whose president was Harold Lord Varney.

● Harold Lord Varney was associated in the 1930's with Joseph P. Kamp and Lawrence Dennis (author of a book called "The Coming American Fascism") in the publication of a sheet called "The Awakener." During the 1950's, he served as an editor of "The American Mercury" magazine. This was the period during which the "Mercury" had become a vehicle for the dissemination of anti-Semitism. Allen Zoll (see above) shared offices in Washington, in 1960, with Varney's Committee on Pan-American Policy. Varney, in turn, was listed as a member of the Board of Governors of a group called the Federation of Conservatives, set up in 1960 by Zoll. (Zoll's group also listed Del Valle on its Board of Governors.)

Bible-Balloon Campaign

Hargis first attracted attention in 1953 when his name was identified with an international Bible-balloon campaign, whereby Bibles printed in Russian were attached to balloons and were floated across the Iron Curtain from launching "pads" in West Germany. Launchings were carried out each year from 1953 through 1957. The operation was set up under the auspices of the International Council of Christian Churches, a group of fundamentalist denominations whose leader for some time has been the Rev. Carl McIntire, well-known in the past for his anti-Catholic sentiments. The ICCC also has an American branch called the American Council of Christian Churches, in which Hargis has been active with McIntire.

It was, in fact, McIntire who gave Hargis an early boost by naming him to head up the Bible-balloon project. Their friendly relationship apparently continues; an article by McIntire appeared on page 9 of the September, 1961, issue of Hargis' "Christian Crusade" magazine.

The ACCC, in which McIntire and Hargis are active, along with such other preachers as Harvey Springer of Englewood, Colorado (a violent anti-Catholic known as the "Cowboy Evangelist,") has for years carried on a war of words with the larger and more influential National Council of Churches.

The ACCC and its leaders have charged the NCC with "modernism"—and worse, with being infiltrated by Communists and with doing the work of the Communist conspiracy. This is a line which Hargis has peddled continuously in his speeches, publications and sermons. Today, he is one of the foremost purveyors of these charges.

As far back as 1954, Springer's publication "Western Voice"—which serves as a vehicle for Springer's special brand of bigotry—published several articles by Hargis attacking "modernism," "liberalism" and communism in the churches, especially those associated with the NCC.

In 1960, Hargis made newspaper headlines when he revealed himself as the source of material alleging communist infiltration of the nation's churches which had appeared in a manual prepared for Air Force Reserve officers. Following the outburst of national indignation provoked by the circulation of these charges in a Defense Department publication, the Pentagon withdrew the manual and apologized to the National Council of Churches.

Hargis on Brotherhood

While Hargis has disavowed such a notorious bigot as Gerald L. K. Smith, and has expressed concern over Harvey Springer's anti-Catholicism, these apparently firm stands have not prevented the Tulsa evangelist from declaring publicly that the concept of Brotherhood is an un-Christian idea, being promoted by "modernists."

Here's how Hargis put it in the January, 1961, issue of "Christian Crusade, in an article which was headlined "Brotherhood of Man—A Smoke Screen." In the article, Hargis said in part:

> "No, my friends, brotherhood of all men is not a Christian concept; it is unchristian and even anti-christian. Modernist destroyers of the faith are on thin ice when they promote this false theory. Purpose of a Christian believer should not be to compromise the Christian faith in the interests of so-called brotherhood, but to bring men repentance of their sins and acceptance of Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour. Those who would water the Christian faith down into an all-inclusive religion of togetherness would destroy the truth of our Lord and Saviour."

It would appear that in the eyes of Dr. Hargis, the instruction that "Thou Shalt Love Thy Neighbor as Thyself" is not part of the truth which Jesus imparted in his teachings.

Hargis and the Birch Society

In the picture he paints of the United States in the process of being taken over—in all facets of its national life—by Communists and Communistic influences, Hargis parallels in large measure the image of America reflected by Founder Robert Welch of the John Birch Society. But while Welch's tone is secular, Hargis' strident preachments are replete with the religious evangelism and fundamentalism that are part of his own background.

The fact is, nevertheless, that a friendly relationship exists between Hargis and his Christian Crusade and Welch and his John Birch Society.

A list of the National Advisory Committee of Hargis' Christian Crusade, circulated in November, 1961, is literally loaded with the names of personalities prominent in the John Birch Society.

Seven members of the John Birch Society National Council are members of the Crusade's National Advisory Committee. They are: Tom Anderson of Tennessee; Col. Laurence Bunker of Massachusetts; F. Gano Chance of Missouri; Fred C. Koch of Kansas; Dean Clarence Manion of Indiana; Professor Revilo C. Oliver of Illinois, and Hon. M. T. Phelps of Arizona.

In addition, a number of persons listed as members of the John Birch Society Committee of Endorsers in the various states are members of the Crusade's National Advisory Committee. They are: Matt Cvetic and D. B. Lewis of California; Brig. Gen. Bonner Fellers of Washington, D.C.; Lt. Gen. Sumter L. Lowry of Florida; J. H. Gipson Sr. of Idaho; Hugh S. Ramsey, M.D. of Indiana; Hon. Wint Smith of Kansas; Brig. Gen. W. L. Lee of Texas; and the Hon. J. Bracken Lee of Utah.

Until his death, the late Kit Clardy, a former member of Congress, also served on both the Christian Crusade's National Advisory Committee and the John Birch Society Committee of Endorsers for the State of California.

Welch and Hargis also praise each other's literature. But perhaps the best evidence of the friendly cooperation between Hargis and Welch was the Third Annual Convention of the Christian Crusade, staged August 4-6, 1961 in Tulsa.

No less than five top personalities of the John Birch Society graced Hargis' platform at that convention—Welch, Anderson, Bunker, Koch and Manion.

Welch and Hargis also are ideologically comparable because neither of them makes any real distinction between liberals and Communists. Their struggle against what they see as Communism or Communistic influences is, in large measure, an attack on a middle-of-the-road position, and on liberalism.

One important difference between Welch and Hargis, however, is that Hargis makes no bones about it—he clearly declares that the enemy is liberalism, every bit as much as it is Communism. While this, in a sense, solves Hargis' problem for him—because he doesn't need to make any precise distinctions between Communists and liberals—Welch handles the problem somewhat differently. He doesn't actually come out and say the enemy includes liberals and liberalism; he simply brands liberals as Reds and has done with it.

Christian Crusade is Big Business

Simply as a money-making operation, Hargis' Christian Crusade is an impressive phenomenon, which has grown rapidly since 1954 or 1955 when Hargis sought out L. E. (Pete) White, a 43-year-old Tulsa advertising man, and placed himself under White's advertising, publicity and promotional guidance. (Earlier, White had built faith healer Oral Roberts into a million dollar business proposition in a few years of intensive promotion.)

When the Hargis-White relationship began, Hargis was limping along with a four-page periodical that reached some 20,000 readers. He was broadcasting over three or four radio stations including two in Mexico, one in Tulsa and one in Siloam Springs, Ark. His billings for radio totalled about $40,000 a year. Today, his total billings are somewhere between $400,000 and $500,000 a year, on which White's ad agency collects the usual 15% agency commission. As already noted, the Hargis magazine goes to some 100,000, Hargis proudly claims each issue is seen by 500,000, and the annual budget of the Christian Crusade has jumped from about $500,000 in 1960, to 1,000,000 in 1961, to $1,250,000 in the current year.

The Christian Crusade is, in short, big business. Hargis, himself, says he draws $12,000 a year in salary. In addition, of course, he receives expenses since he is "on the road" 20 days of each month. Last year, says Hargis, he travelled to 36 states.

In addition to salary, expenses, and the converted Greyhound bus—his "headquarters on wheels"—Hargis is supplied by the Crusade with a "parsonage" (a $43,000 ranch home in Tulsa), with domestic help, and with two cars—a sedan and station wagon—for the transportation of Mrs. Hargis and the brood of four young Hargis children, all of whose initials are "B.J.H."—just like their father's. (A fifth child is on the way).

Promotion and Fund Raising

Most of the tax-deductible contributions received by Christian Crusade are in the $1 to $5 category, and Pete White says they average $2 to $4 a letter. These, and larger contributions from more affluent supporters, bring in the bulk of the Crusade's income.

Another $145,000, it is said, was earned in 1961 through speaking fees, and some $50,000 reportedly was grossed in the form of royalties on books and records albums.

To aid in the task of "bringing in the sheaves," Hargis employs the services of some 52 persons, plus the separate services rendered by Pete White and his ad agency. Everything is strictly busines, and it is fair to say that Hargis and White are fund-raising experts.

When Hargis recently signed to go on the Mutual Radio network, starting in October, 1962, he was able to raise the $39,000 cost of the 26 weekly broadcasts at one session of his Third Annual Convention in Tulsa.

The technique was direct, simple and to the point. As The New York Times of August 7, 1961, described it:

> "... through alternate appeals to God and the 700 persons in his audience the evangelist began a prayer auction to raise the money.
> "The 36-year-old Mr. Hargis spoke beneath a banner that read 'For Christ! Against Communism!' He cried out:
> " 'I pray to God for one man to sponsor this program for six months. I know that man exists in the audience. Will he stand up?'
> "No one stood up.
> " 'All right, then, we will divide this burden. I need four men who will accept God's challenge and give $10,000 each to sponsor this program.'
> "Two men stood up.

"'Give us four, Oh, God, who would give $5,000 each. Quickly! ... $2,000?'

"One man stood up.

"'One thousand dollars?'

"Three men stood up.

"And so it went down from $500 through $100. At the end, seventy-nine men had pledged a total of $38,870—the exact amount needed."

Hargis and his colleagues are equally persuasive in their written appeals for support, which are not only eloquent, but frequent. (In fact, a person unfamiliar with the Hargis operation would quickly conclude that the Tulsa headquarters was in a constant state of financial crisis, behind in its bills, and frequently, if not continuously, faced with the problem of raising thousands of dollars in a few weeks time to meet the more presing of its obligations. If the picture painted by Hargis in his frequent fund-raising letters is the true one, it suggests a serious inclination on the part of Hargis and the Christian Crusade to spend beyond their means, resulting in repeated appeals for help.)

"Pray"—But Send Money

A Hargis "emergency" appeal for funds from the faithful is—in its own way—a work of art. Whether it is headlined "An Emergency Appeall" or "Wonderful News" the conclusion is the same—"Pray"—but send money. Key sentences are underlined in red or in some contrasting color for the faithful whose attention span may be short. Marginal notes or post-scripts in the handwriting of Dr. Hargis himself appear frequently. Sometimes they may urge the faithful to read a significant chapter or verse from the Holy Bible. At other times they may be more to the point.

"Shall I quit now?" Hargis wrote across the top of a September 15, 1959 appeal, which contained the following paragraph (suitably underlined in blue ink): "We must have help—I mean it. We either receive immediate help or Christian Crusade's fight to preserve our freedoms and our churches may be through." And at the end of the appeal, right near Dr. Hargis' own signature, there was a hand-written concluding appeal—"Oh friends, please don't say NO!" The concluding paragraphs of the 1959 appeal, to which was attached a letter from Hargis' attorney, telling of the Crusade's sad financial plight, read as follows:

"Rush ... rush ... rush. We haven't a moment to lose. Send the largest gift you have ever sent for Christian Crusade Radio and publishing expenses.

"The bottom has dropped out in the last few weeks ... for God's sake, get into this fight. God will lead you to do something now, if you sincerely ask His will. Please ... please hurry. It is that desperate.

"Pray for victory, ... pray for an avalanche of sacrificial gifts now. Oh, dear friends, stand with me. God's truth shall conquer if we hold the line.

Yours for God and Our Children"

A handy coupon was right at the bottom of the page —as it always is—and, of course, there were some printed materials available for those who rushed in their money.

A January 19, 1960 appeal—four months later—struck a similar note:

"Frankly we need immediate money. Our income in December was far below our budget, hence we were unable to pay thirty of our radio stations during December. We stand a chance of losing these stations entirely if we don't catch up during this month.

"We are desperate for immediate help. There is no time to lose. We dare not retreat at a time when God and America need this message on national radio so badly. I beg of you not to delay in rushing me an answer to this letter. Would you please, in Christ's name, rush an answer today?...

"Bombard Heaven with prayer for Christian Crusade and especially for the new daily broadcast in Washington, D.C. Then show God your love for Christ and Christian America by sacrificing NOW. Send $100.00 if you can. If you can't, please send $50.00, $25.00 or $10.00. Gifts of $5.00, $2.00, or $1.00 are desperately needed. Do your best. The need is great and immediate."

The message was essentially the same in July, 1960, and in many of the following months—right up to November, 1961, when Billy James Hargis and his colleagues declared they were "thrilled at the way God has been blessing us." Telling the faithful of "victory after victory" which God had wrought for the Crusade, Hargis concluded with the usual appeal: "Never before have we needed your support as now ... As you have done in the past, please act now—today—by sending the biggest gift you possibly can. We need it very badly. We never needed it more.

"This month we start our 14th year in this crusade—please send your Anniversary gift. We are faced with the most vital mission imaginable in this puzzling world."

In short—whether the news is bad or good, there is always, down Tulsa way, need for the wherewithal to do the work of the Crusade.

Attractive Offers for the Faithful

Direct spoken and written appeals for funds are not the only Hargis technique. Every issue of Christian Crusade is loaded with attractive "offers" for the faithful. The November, 1961, pre-Christmas issue of the magazine contained four pages of "soul-saving, nation-saving gifts of worth for a Christ-centered Christmas—cards—books—Bibles—recordings—films ("It is Christ's Birthday! To honor Him and help make America conscious of our godly heritage, take advantage of these gift items; by doing this, you keep Christ in Christmas, and keep Christmas in America—Use Order Form on Page 12").

The June, 1961, issue of "Christian Crusade" is another example of the constant opportunity that is given to the faithful to help Hargis in his struggle—by sending money.

On page 2, an appeal is made for funds to wipe out a deficit in the television fund.

Page 6 urges subscriptions to "Christian Crusade" and if the reader sends in the names of five friends, along with $5, he gets his own subscription free.

Page 7 carries a letter from a Crusader in a small Texas town urging help for Dr. Hargis and telling how "God has prospered me since I've been helping Dr. Hargis with the work of the Christian Crusade..."

Page 8 contains an appeal for subscription to the "Weekly Crusader"—another Hargis publication.

Page 9 urges contributions to pay for the $2,400 dollar cost of moving Allen Zoll's files to Tulsa—funds to be sent to Tulsa in care of the "File Fund."

Pages 10 and 11 are devoted to an ad for the "Gold Star Total Abstainers Hospitalization Policy" (other special insurance offers are frequently made to members of Christian Crusade).

On page 13, readers are urged to send $1 for several copies of a Hargis speech. Sharing it with friends is described as "IMPORTANT TO THE SURVIVAL OF THE NATION!"

On page 14, there is a plug for "Christian Crusade's Bible study course... your guide to spiritual growth!"—with eight workbooks in three volumes for only $1 a volume. An order for all three volumes brings one a "special bonus gift"—the "Evangelical Sunday School Lesson Commentary" which regularly sells for $2.50. The same page also advertises "inexpensive anti-Communist tracts" written by Hargis on "hundreds of subjects... 100 for only $1.00."

Page 17 offers the Hargis book "Communist America... Must It Be?" with the paper back edition available at $1 and the clothbound available at $2—"regular $3 value."

Page 19 lists a flock of "new anti-Communist publications" hot from the presses—nine of them written by Dr. Hargis himself and available at a dime apiece—minimum order 10 tracts for $1.

The back cover of the same issue contains an advertisement for a song book and record album, also offered to the general public. The songbook was entitled, "Billy James Hargis' Favorite Hymns"—official songbook of the Christian Crusade—and featured pictures of the Hargis family, the Crusade staff and Crusade headquarters, along with the words and music to the hymns and the patriotic music "you love best!" As for the record album, it bore the title, "Songs and Saying of Billy James Hargis"—an LP treat combining a visit with the Hargis family, the best in gospel music, patriotic songs and devotional readings.

Other issues of the "Christian Crusade" have offered readers a wide variety of other opportunities for enlightment and for contributing to the cause: Tapes of Hargis speeches; books and pamphlets offered in return for contributions to the Hargis Radio fund; a chance to invest savings in the "Christian Crusade Property Fund;" Christian Classics record albums through a "Record of the Month" plan; sound and color films at $100 each; Christmas cards; and a "Puppet of the Month Club"—Bible story puppets that "really make Bible stories live!"

Summary and Evaluation

● From the facts and evidence available, it seems clear that Billy James Hargis has built his Christian Crusade into a million dollar a year organization that is one of the major forces on the radical right.

● Like other radical right-wing groups, Hargis and his followers see America as in the grip of a well-advanced and on-going Communist takeover that has penetrated major institutions of American national life.

● With a probable following of some 100,000, Hargis' Christian Crusade ranks among the larger radical right-wing groups and Hargis exerts an undeniable grass-roots impact in smaller cities and towns across the country, but especially in the Southwest.

● Hargis shows unmistakable signs of wanting to "go national" and to break away from his basic identification with the Southwestern Bible belt. Evidence of this is seen in his projected national radio program on the Mutual radio network; his recent effort to spark a coordination of rightist activities; and his statement that the aim of such coordination was to capture one or both of the major national political parties.

● Hargis and his Christian Crusade do not promote anti-Semitism, but like many on the radical right, he shows a lack of awareness, alertness or concern about the danger of anti-Semitic taint. As a result, certain anti-Semites have become identified with Hargis or his Crusade through association or cooperation. Hargis' astigmatism regarding anti-Semites and anti-Semitism contrasts with his repeated calls for awareness, alertness and concern on the menace of Communism and Communist infiltration.

● Hargis shows a marked interest in, and concern for, the financial and fund-raising aspects of his Crusade and bombards his followers with a wide variety of emotion-packed appeals for donations, contributions and emergency gifts. These, along with materials and merchandise available for purchase from "Christian Crusade," have become a prime characteristic of the Tulsa operation, and suggest that if the Crusade is dedicated to fighting Communism, liberalism and modernism, it is committed to doing so on a strictly business basis.

● The Christian Crusade does not have any field organization that reaches the grass-roots. The Christian Crusade is basically Hargis, Pete White, the Crusade staff at the Tulsa headquarters, and a large unorganized group of contributors and subscribers.

● What the Crusade may lack in field organization at the grass-roots level is, in some measure, supplied by the energetic Hargis and his staff. To a great extent, Hargis maintains his hold on his following by direct contact, through his personal appearances, and by the steady stream of written, recorded and broadcast communications he pours out.

Hargis has wrapped the cross of his religious faith in the flag of his country, and is merchandising anti-Communism like a super-salesman, Bible in one hand, ledger in the other.

A Letter to 'Facts'

The following letter was received by the Anti-Defamation League after publication of the issue of "FACTS" on the John Birch Society.

February 17, 1962

TO THE EDITOR OF FACTS:

In the November-December 1961 issue of FACTS (Vol. 14, No. 5), my name appears in the article "The John Birch Society" on page 225.

You are quoting from the Bulletin "The John Birch Society" of April 1, 1961, and, under specific reference to it, you state:

"He (Welch) then goes on to point out that some of his closest associates and advisers (emphasis mine) are Jewish: William Schlamm, a writer; Julius Epstein, an author; Morrie Ryskind, writer; the late Alfred Kohlberg, a leading figure for many years in anti-Communist causes; and Rabbi Max Merritt of Los Angeles, an active leader of the American Jewish League Against Communism."

When I asked you to provide me with the source material of this absolutely untrue statement—at least as far as I am concerned—you sent me a photostatic copy of the page on which my name appeared in the Bulletin "The John Birch Society" of April 1, 1961.

As I saw from this photostatic copy, you completely misquoted Mr. Welch's remark about me. He has never called me "one of his closest associates and advisers."

What Mr. Welch wrote about me, was this:

"Of course, I am in fact just about as 'anti-Semitic' as Willi Schlamm, who has been the leading writer for our magazine, AMERICAN OPINION, since its first issue; or as Julius Epstein who wrote specifically for us what is still by far the best and most authoritative exposé of The Bang-Jensen Tragedy, which we published as a special monograph issue of AMERICAN OPINION."

Your misquotation, and therefore complete misrepresentation of my relationship to Mr. Welch, has caused me great harm and is continuing to cause me harm.

My study on the Bang-Jensen case appeared in the May 1960 issue of AMERICAN OPINION (Vol. III, No. 5), long before the John Birch Society hit the headlines of the American Press. AMERICAN OPINION was not then and is not now the organ of the Birch Society. When I negotiated the appearance of my work with Mr. Welch on January 16, 1960 in his Belmont, Mass. office I did neither know anything good nor bad about the John Birch Society. At that time, I did not even know about its existence.

I have seen Mr. Welch twice in my life: The first time on January 16, 1960 for about two hours, when the arrangements for the writing and publication of the Bang-Jensen study were made, and the second time on August 12, 1960, when I had made a short stopover in Boston on my way to Provincetown. This second visit lasted less than an hour and had the purpose to obtain some copies of my Bang-Jensen article. Surely, not enough to present me to the readers of FACTS as one of Mr. Welch's "closest associates and advisers."

Whatever the merits or demerits of The John Birch Society may be, and without prejudicing its case one way or the other, I want to stress the fact that I never had any dealings with the Society, but only with Mr. Welch as Publisher and Editor of AMERICAN OPINION, a magazine, the Advisory Committee of which contains—among others—the names of Charles Edison, former Governor of New Jersey, Professor Ludwig von Mises, and General Wedemeyer.

JULIUS EPSTEIN.

Although he doesn't care to prejudice the John Birch Society's case "one way or another," we are glad to know that Mr. Epstein does not want his name linked with that organization. But his argument, we think, is with Robert Welch, not the Anti-Defamation League.

Mr. Epstein did not quote the entire paragraph from Mr. Welch's statement. The whole paragraph read as follows (the material in italics being omitted by Mr. Epstein):

"Of course I am in fact just about as 'anti-Semitic' as Willi Schlamm, who has been the leading writer for our magazine, AMERICAN OPINION, since its first issue; or as Julius Epstein, who wrote specifically for us what is still by far the best and most authoritative expose of 'The Bang-Jensen Tragedy,' which we published as a special monograph issue of AMERICAN OPINION; or as my good friend Morrie Ryskind, referred to earlier in this bulletin; or as was my even closer friend, the late Alfred Kohlberg, who despite having had four coronary attacks, never missed one hour of a single all-day meeting of our COUNCIL, and who spent all of Saturday at such a meeting before he died of a final heart attack the following Thursday; or as Rabbi Max Merritt, whose glowing praise of our work we published in the March bulletin of the Society; or as a hundred other good friends of the Jewish faith I could name."

Mr. Epstein also declares that "AMERICAN OPINION was not then and is not now the organ of the John Birch Society."

In June, 1960, a few weeks after Mr. Epstein's article had appeared in the May, 1960 issue of AMERICAN OPINION, Mr. Welch announced that the magazine "now belongs to the John Birch Society."

THE COMMITTEE FOR THE MONROE DOCTRINE
Suite 909
79 Madison Avenue
New York 16, New York

EMERGENCY APPEAL 31 October 1962

FROM: Edward V. Rickenbacker; Admiral Ben Moreell; Charles Edison; William F. Buckley, Jr.; James Burnham

RE: Preservation of the Monroe Doctrine

At 8 a.m. this morning, we met in emergency session to undertake the organization of The Committee for the Monroe Doctrine and to draft the attached Statement which sets forth our views and expresses our deep concern over the dangerous concessions offered by President Kennedy to Premier Khrushchev regarding Cuba.

The Administration's propaganda machine is working overtime to present the so-called Cuba settlement as a great Kennedy victory and a stunning Communist defeat. In fact, the exact reverse is true. Khrushchev is now firmly entrenched in Cuba and Communism on that island is guaranteed against attack from any quarter by the President of the United States. We believe it is imperative to register a public protest—and quickly—or we will lose the ball game by default.

We are telegraphing our Statement to hundreds of candidates for Federal office requesting their endorsement. We plan to release the Statement and its endorsers to the press immediately.

We hope you will see fit to join with us in endorsing our Statement and becoming a charter member of The Committee for the Monroe Doctrine by writing or wiring us your acceptance. We call on you to do your utmost to publicize this effort in every way possible. Further, we ask you to immediately approach all candidates running for Federal office in your district and state to take a stand on this issue by endorsing the enclosed Statement.

If we are to proceed with this undertaking, we must have funds in hand. We call on you to wire or air-mail us your maximum financial pledge and/or contribution at once so that we may effectively plan just how far we can go in the critical days before November 6.

Time is truly of the essence. This is an historic moment and the Nation is in critical danger. We hope you will join with us in what we consider an enterprise of transcendent urgency.

Please make your check payable to The Committee for the Monroe Doctrine and mail it to the above address.

STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE FOR THE MONROE DOCTRINE

1. President Kennedy assured the United States on April 18, 1961, that at the very least our government would not tolerate the arming of Cuba with offensive weapons.

2. We never doubted the President would be true to his word, and endorse his recent ultimatum to the Soviet Union insofar as it faced up to the problem of Cuba's offensive military potential. However,

3. The President has apparently guaranteed the Soviet Union that in return for dismantling the missile bases the United States will guarantee that Cuba will not be invaded.

4. But the Monroe Doctrine declares that the United States will not permit the imposition by any foreign power of its "system" in any nation in the Western Hemisphere.

5. Therefore, the Presidential guarantee would appear to amount to a guarantee that Cuba will, without forcible interference by the United States, be permitted to remain as a Communist colony and therefore as a base for the continued political and psychological subversion of other nations in this hemisphere: i.e., that Khrushchev's control over Cuba, including an arsenal of tanks, MIG fighters and bombers, radar anti-aircraft batteries, and a "fishing fleet" in Havana harbor—is underwritten in effect by the President of the United States.

6. This renunciation of the Monroe Doctrine—the key defensive doctrine of this nation—should not be sanctioned without a Congressional debate.

7. WE THEREFORE CALL on all members of Congress and all persons running for Congress to pledge to consider the President's guarantee as given to Chairman Khrushchev on Sunday, October 28, immediately upon the convocation of the 88th Congress in January, 1963. And we call upon the members of that Congress there to RESOLVE:

8. That the maintenance of the Monroe Doctrine continues to be an essential plank of American foreign policy.

DOMESTIC REPORT

NOV.-DEC. 1962 - VOL. 14, No. 8—PUBLISHED BY THE ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH

The Case of Fred C. Schwarz

Frederick Charles Schwarz, M.D., migrated from Australia in the early nineteen fifties to save the United States from Communist conquest, through "patriotic" rallies, "schools" of anti-Communism and the sale of printed matter. His performance as a Paul Revere of the radical right has prompted citizens of every faith to ask: was this trip necessary?

The question is asked by those who sincerely believe in the common sense and the awareness of the American people; in the competence of our schools and universities to teach the meanings of history; in the effectiveness of our communications media to alert this nation to the dangers inherent in the Soviets' ambitions; and in the determination of our government to evolve just and sane solutions to the gravest problem of our century.

These sober citizens find in the Schwarz adventure, as in similar adventures, a genuine danger to the institutions of a free people. They see divisiveness and confusion created by the Schwarzites, as by the Birchers, Hargisites and others, the natural concern of Americans exploited till it reaches paranoia, in which neighbor turns on neighbor, teachers, under constant pressure, become too demoralized to teach, and churches and churchmen find themselves required to defend normal acts of democratic decency from charges of subversion. And in the thunder from the right, they hear ominous overtones of demand for a "preventive" thermonuclear war. They are troubled and with reason.

Schwarz Denounced From Senate Floor

The question is asked, as well by responsible public officials like Senator Stephen M. Young (D) of Ohio, who on the Senate floor denounced the flamboyant doctor from down under (Congressional Record: Vol. 108, No. 137, P. 14732); like Attorney General Stanley Mosk of California, who termed the Schwarz operation "patriotism for profit." It is asked by distinguished churchmen, like James A. Pike, Episcopal Bishop of California; Robert D. Bulkley, General Presbyter of the United Presbyterian Church, and Methodist Bishop Everett W. Palmer, who have found in this "Christian" crusade a grave threat to "basic American freedoms."

The question is also asked by professionally expert anti-Communists who have long labored in the vineyard. Veteran George E. Sokolsky, head of the American Jewish League Against Communism, has attacked the Schwarz migration bluntly in his syndicated newspaper column (June, 1962), appearing in the New York Journal-American, the Los Angeles Times, and 200 other newspapers.

Still others ask the question with a sincere envy of the overnight financial success of the Schwarz Christian Anti-Communism Crusade and its Schools of Anti-Communism. Well they may, for what began as a shoestring operation, fathered in 1953 by a radio evangelist and a printer, now enjoys an annual take of a million dollars plus. In 1961, the reported income of the Schwarz operation was $1,273,492. In 1960, it had been a mere $364,535.

The dollars multiply through sales of books and pamphlets, tape recordings of speeches, admissions to rallies, banquets, brunches, tuition fees at "schools," and the freewill offerings of those who expect this country to be saved by the Schwarz evangelism. These last range from the frightened little old lady who drops a Social Security dollar into the collection basket to heads of big business whose tax-exempt "unsolicited" annual contributions run to multiple thousands.

The Christian Anti-Communism Crusade conducts public, paid-admission, patriotic rallies throughout the United States. The sessions open with prayer and close with fund raising. The "crusade" has held its five-day Schools of Anti-Communism in a score of cities. For the faculties of his "schools," Schwarz has recruited a miscellany of former Government men, counterspies, Congressional investigators, retired Naval officers and other self-styled experts on Communism. None of them announces his qualifications for pedagogy by academic standards or state licensing regulations for teachers. Hand-picked by Dr. Schwarz, they are given leeway, in the name of academic freedom, to attack the defense policies and diplomacy of the United States, to abuse its educational system and berate its public figures. Schwarz himself, an alien, practices some restraint, devoting his standard lectures largely to the philosophy, intentions and tactics of the Communists, and to fund raising.

Nebulous Foreign Operation

In addition, the "crusade" carries on a nebulous foreign operation in several parts of the globe. Since this is an activity on which details are most sketchy, it is difficult to estimate how much is honest enlightenment of underdeveloped peoples, how much dangerous meddling with tax-free American dollars in the internal affairs of sovereign states. In nine years of business and ballyhoo, the "crusade" has adduced no clear evidence that it has diminished the genuine Communist peril at home or abroad.

Until the spring of 1962, Fred Schwarz had enjoyed an apparent respectability and toleration not accorded to other self-appointed saviors of the Republic. By and large, the press had dealt with him kid-gloved. Local officials in California, which is his base of operations and main source of strength, had endorsed and praised. Senator Thomas J. Dodd (D) of Connecticut and Congressman Walter H. Judd (R) of Minnesota had from time to time joined the "crusade," as lecturers and sponsors. It may be significant that in recent months Sen. Dodd has not apeared on Schwarz's platform.

In 1957, Schwarz had been a voluntary witness before the House Un-American Activities Committee. Though his status as a recently arrived alien might have prompted challenge of his qualifications as an expert on subversion here, he set the date of 1973 for a Communist take over of the United States.

The transcript of his testimony before the House Committee, printed by the Allen-Bradley Company of Milwaukee, became a major item of merchandise on the literature tables at his rallies, even as the lurid details of the presumptive take-over became a leading shocker in his speeches. The Australian warned: "When they come for you, as they have for many others, and on a dark night, in a dank cellar, and they take a wide bore revolver with a soft-nose bullet and they place it at the nape of your neck" . . . and housewives blanched, junior executives shuddered. The transcript of Schwarz's briefing of the House Committee, his Houston, Tex. disciple, W. P. Strube, Jr. declared, "has had a wider circulation in this country than any document except possibly the Bill of Rights, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution." (Harpers, Oct. 1961).

Life Magazine Mildly Critical

Life Magazine in September, 1961, included mild editorial criticism of Dr. Schwarz in a general review of the burgeoning radical right. It said: "A new kind of revival meeting, serving the nonreligious ends of an outfit called the 'Christian Anti-Communism Crusade' is being held with full hullabaloo and political portent in Los Angeles this week. Like nine other 'crusades' in the U.S. cities during the last year, it is presided over by Frederick C. Schwarz, 48, an Australian evangelist gone secular. Schwarz preaches doomsday by Communism in 1973 unless every American starts distrusting his neighbor as a possible Communist or 'comsymp' (Communist sympathizer).

"Schwarz tries to appear less extreme than the John Birch Society and he publicly disavows Birchism. However, his local steering committees have often included known Birchers. Schwarz himself landed in this country with $10 in his pocket in 1953 but he has built the 'crusade' into a $500,000 business. Having persuaded 41 California mayors to proclaim this week as an official anti-Communism Week,' he now plans to take the road show on to New Orleans and Columbus, then tentatively to Chicago, Washington and New York."

One month later, C. D. Jackson, publisher of Life and Vice President of Time, who had been special public-relations advisor in a period of administration crisis to President Dwight D. Eisenhower, stood beside a beaming Dr. Schwarz under kleig-lights on a flag-draped, film-star-studded platform in the Hollywood Bowl, apologizing for Life's "oversimplified misinterpretation." "I believe we were wrong and I am profoundly sorry," C. D. Jackson said. "It is a great privilege to be here tonight," he told Jane Russell, Linda Darnell, Ronald Reagan, James Stewart and fifteen thousand other cheering onlookers, "to align Life magazine with Senator Dodd, Representative Judd, Dr. Schwarz and the rest of these implacable fighters."

It was a shining hour for the spectacled Sydney physician, the climactic moment of his career. In his Newsletter, he boasted that the publisher had come "at his own request" and that "this action speaks more loudly than words concerning the revised attitude of Life magazine to the work we are doing."

Not the Radical Right

Cannily, Schwarz has fought all public identification of his "crusade" with the radical right, crying smear of "guilt by association." He has refused to praise or condemn Robert Welch and the John Birch Society in any save the mildest terms, though the consistency of his coyness slipped when he told Cabell Phillips of The New York Times (Apr. 30, 1961): "Certainly these people—these dedicated anti-Communists—want a leader. They want to be led. They want me to lead them. But I won't do it. If Bob Welch wants to do it, he can. He's got a program of action and a lot of ready resolutions. But it's not my business." Then, he added, "You know sometimes I get the notion Welch follows me around the country, signing up the people after I've worked them up."

He has since attempted to repudiate the latter statement, has claimed The Times apologized for it. In reference to this claim, The Times (Aug. 27, 1962) published the following. "Clifton Daniel, assistant managing editor of The Times said last night: 'I apologized to Dr. Schwarz for our delay in replying to a letter from him. I did not apologize for any error in Cabell Phillips' article, because in our opinion the article was correct in all important details."

Schwarz Meets the Press

The Times' statement was prompted by Schwarz's appearance on Meet The Press (Aug. 26, 1962), where he was persistently questioned about the Birch Society by Richard Clurman of Time and Life, William Rusher of The National Review, James Wechsler of The New York Post and Lawrence E. Spivak, the permanent panel member.

This is from the printed transcript of that NBC network telecast:

MR. WECHSLER: Will you tell us, Dr. Schwarz, in this situation in this city, what your view of the John Birch Society is? I have read your comments and in many places it seems to vary, depending on what city you are in. I wonder if you could tells us.

DR. SCHWARZ: My view has been consistent but I have established a policy that we specialize in Communist philosophy, morality and education relative thereto, and we do not sit in judgment on other organizations in a general sense and we reserve the right to criticize individual statements in relation to the Communist purpose. I don't feel competent to give an official judgment on the John Birch Society because I don't know too much about it. I am not a member. I have never been a member. I have never met Robert Welch and, if as many inaccuracies have been printed about them as have been printed about us, maybe my information isn't adequate for sound judgment.

MR. WECHSLER: You wouldn't consider that your educational function included getting some knowledge about this?

DR. SCHWARZ: I wouldn't. Because our educational function is a very limited one. We limit it to the philosophy, morality, the nature of the Communist process and we don't claim to be experts in every area.

Later in the program, Richard Clurman of Life and Time, resumed the questioning about the Birch Society.

MR. CLURMAN: Dr. Schwarz, as a teacher of anti-Communism in the United States, are you at all concerned with the excesses on the right?

DR. SCHWARZ: No, I certainly am not. I think that this tremendous concern about the right is a hysterical escape for people who are not prepared to accept the magnitude of the Communist danger. If this right wing that they talk about had a foreign base, if Hitler was still in power in Germany and had conquered half of Europe and if they had multiple megaton thermonuclear bombs and ocean-ranging submarines and the economic product of one billion people and they were the advance guard of it, I would say yes. But since there is no external base for this alleged threat, I think it is not comparable with the malignancy of the Communist danger.

MR. CLURMAN: May we talk for a moment again about the John Birch Society which you alluded to a moment ago. The John Birch Society and its founder, Robert Welch, have been denounced and renounced by President Kennedy, by the Attorney General, by President Eisenhower, by former Vice President Nixon. Robert Welch himself has said that former President Eisenhower was a Communist dupe, that Allen Dulles and the Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles, were tools of the Communist conspiracy. Mr. Rusher's magazine, The National Review, has denounced the John Birch Society. Surely, as a teacher of how, effectively, to fight anti-Communism (sic), you must have a clearer view of whether the John Birch Society is effective or not.

DR. SCHWARZ: My function is not the adjudication of other organizations or individuals, and people have got the right to do as they wish. If you ask me whether I agree with statements made by the John Birch Society, I am quite prepared to answer them but I find everybody agrees with my principle that I do not sit in judgment on other organizations or individuals, provided I make the one exception in the area where they want me to. I try to make no exceptions and not to condemn organizations out of hand. If you would like to ask whether I think President Eisenhower is a Communist, I think that is a totally inaccurate and ridiculous statement.

MR. CLURMAN: Don't you quite properly, sir, sit in judgment on organizations that you feel are Communist organizations?

DR. SCHWARZ: I feel our field is—we are specialists, if we are specialists in anything, in the field of Communism and I think when people get out of their field, their decisions and their influence is thereby weakened.

MR. CLURMAN: Mr. Welch doesn't think he is out of his field. He says "Dr. Schwarz is doing a grand job of awakening people to the menace of Communism. We frankly do our best to recruit people who have been stirred up, awakened and alarmed by him into the John Birch Society as action groups to do something about it all." Do you welcome that or not?

DR. SCHWARZ: That is his privilege. I have never been associated with it. But we live in a democratic society where every group has got the freedom to recruit whom they will and if people don't agree with that they then have the responsibility to try and take advantage of it for the forces they consider beneficent. I have no association with the John Birch Society and never have had but I am not in a position to adjudicate every organization that has members attending our schools.

MR. CLURMAN: Sir, we are not asking you to adjudicate every organization. The John Birch Society has virtually been drummed out of respectable political conversation. It has been renounced and denounced by the most distinguished Americans. Yet you equivocate on the question.

Schwarz and "The Birchers"

From some cities come reports that known local members of the Birch Society help in the planning and bolster the attendance at Schwarz rallies and rush into the vacuum left at his departure, recruiting memberships. "In the wake of Dr. Schwarz's rallies and anti-Communism schools," wrote Fletcher Knebel in Look magazine (Mar. 13, 1962) "sprout militant 'study groups' that expand, subdivide and multiply like human cells. The Rev. James D. Colbert, vice-president of the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade, says the Crusade itself has founded 5,000 study groups. Starting with basically sound Schwarz material, many 'students' go on to find Communists in the White House, the income tax sapping America for a communist coup and Red plots behind such proposals as county-wide governments for municipalities."

Declaring his purpose is merely "education, dedication and evangelism," Schwarz offers no panaceas, no solutions to the Communist peril. "What's the answer?" he asks rhetorically. "I don't know. I don't know. The answer lies in the minds and characters of millions of people who can and must think about such problems," the assumption being, apparently, that the obssessed and over-anxious who come in admitted ignorance to his meetings will by some mystical process arrive at the solutions which thus far have eluded the world's statesmen.

Since he leaves no program, no specifics of action, no field supervisors to make sure his students do their homework, the hard core of rightists in the community moves in to nudge the overheated into suspicion of their next door neighbors, of their children's teachers, their clergymen and elected officials.

Schwarz and Anti-Semitism

On the question of anti-Semitism, Schwarz has been vociferous in denial.

The "Christian" appellation of the "crusade" raises in some minds the question of anti-Semitism. "We call it Christian," Schwarz told the Oakland, Calif. Tribune (Dec. 19, 1961) "because we who founded it are Christians. We invite and welcome Jewish people to attend the School. We hope they will form Jewish organizations to combat our common enemy. We repudiate any relationship between Communism and the Jews. Communism is not racial or religious or national. It is a conspiracy dedicated to atheism."

Traditionally, New York is a difficult city for promoters to crack. It is huge and it is diffuse. Its news media have a global outlook. The space available for visiting evangelists is necessarily limited. Above all, the city is sophisticated about the nature of Communism. It has seen Khrushchev and Castro face to face. It failed to crowd the Australian doctor's rallies.

The New York news media gave the Schwarz "crusade" what is normally considered fair and reasonable coverage. Yet the doctor cried suppression and persecution. In private conversations he talked about Jewish control of press, radio, and television. He "discovered" a massive campaign of "boycott, bigotry and fear."

Retreating to recoup funds and prestige to the hospitable terrain of Tyler, Texas, on August 7, 1962, before an audience of 1000 in the John Tyler High School and under the auspices of the Tyler Freedom Forum, Schwarz unleashed a fury about Jews which made even extreme rightists in an audience wince. Dr. Walter Kerr, evangelist-director of the "Walter Kerr Youth Force for God and Freedom Crusade" told the Texas Observer a week later, "Boy, I tell you he spells out a death struggle with the Jews. I was quite amazed and really rather heartsick. New York is controlled by them, that is by the Jews, he says. He said the thing is divided down the middle, Christians and Jews . . . With people like Schwarz operating this could become a leading problem."

Schwarz continues to maintain it is impossible for him to be anti-Semitic since his own father had been a Jew.

It is true that his father had been Jewish.

Paul Schwarz was a Jew born in Vienna. He left Austria for England at the age of twelve, converted to Christianity, married Phoebe Smith, an English girl who was an active worker in the Methodist Church. He became a Pentecostal lay preacher. In 1905, he emigrated to Australia and prospered there after World War I as a dealer in surplus goods. He fathered eleven children of whom Frederick Charles, born in Brisbane in 1913, was the fourth.

By his own declaration, Frederick Charles was raised in a "Christian home" and at 17 made a "personal commitment to the Christian doctrine and the Christian manner of life." He describes his religious affiliation as "Baptist of Evangelical persuasion."

Fred Schwarz was graduated from the University of Queensland with a degree in science, having majored in physics and mathematics. He later studied philosophy and political economy, obtaining a liberal arts degree. After graduation, he taught briefly in high school before he was engaged to lecture in mathematics and science at Queensland Teachers College.

Pedagogy failed to satisfy him. He turned to medicine. In 1944, he was graduated from the University of Queensland Medical School. He served an internship at the Brisbane General Hospital, then purchased a medical practice in Sydney. There his shingle still hangs and his wife, Lillian May, his children, John, Rosemary and David, reside. Aside from the fact that he served briefly as psychiatrist at the Cathedral Marriage Guidance Clinic of Sydney and the New South Wales Community Hospital, the records of his medical career are scanty.

That the prophet is considerably less than honored in his own country was revealed by Forest Allen of the Cleveland, Ohio Press. In a column headed, "They Don't Think Much of Schwarz Down Under" (July 12, 1962) Allen wrote: "Schwarz never took on very well in Australia, I was told there earlier this year. And his blatant promotion of himself in this country hasn't boosted his Australian popularity. In newspaper circles down under, in fact, Schwarz is described as 'Australia's gift to America—in return for Harry Bridges.'

"In the country of his birth, education and citizenship Schwarz makes little impact, has no influence and doesn't receive much attention on his visits there. He returns every year and made one of his visits in April. I called on an Australian editor and asked how he was received . . . In Sydney, he conducted a long dull meeting before 200. His Sydney collection was $70, it was announced—not enough to pay meeting expenses."

Schwarz's American Sponsors

Two touring Fundamentalist clergymen from North America, Dr. T. T. Shields of Toronto and Rev. Carl McIntire of Collingswood, N.J., in 1950 heard the doctor in debate in Sydney. They found the physician sturdy and personable. He had a waggish grin and folksy manner. He combined an aura of book learning with old-fashioned fire and brimstone. They decided he was a man for their barricades.

Both clergymen were veteran crusaders, chiefly against "modernism" in religious teaching and against the Catholic Church. McIntire had been expelled from the Presbyterian Church in 1936, had organized his own Fundamentalist Presbyterian Church as well as the American Council of Christian Churches, a minority, ultra-conservative wing of American Protestantism. He had become a dedicated foe of the National Council of Churches, the author and promulgator of a running attack, charging that body with Communist infiltration and with serving the Communist cause.

Shields and McIntire invited Schwarz to make a two-month lecture tour in the United States, under the aegis of the American Council of Christian Churches.

Thus began the third and current career of Frederick Schwarz.

McIntire and Schwarz drifted apart. McIntire had found another protege, Dr. Billy James Hargis, had given him the publicity-rich assignment of floating Bible-balloons above the Iron Curtain, thereby launching another money-minded super-patriot on the national scene. Shields died. But by that time Schwarz had glimpsed the lush pastures of fame and fortune in the merchandising of anti-Communism. And he had found another sponsor.

This one was Dr. William Pietsch, an Iowa radio preacher. Pietsch offered Schwarz his microphone for a series of talks on the Communist peril. The listener response was encouraging, and in Waterloo, Iowa, the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade was born. "God has raised up Dr. Fred Schwarz from Sydney, Australia, as a special messenger on this vital subject," Dr. Pietsch wrote to celebrate the blessed event.

Since that day, Schwarz has commuted across the Pacific. In September 1960, he applied for permanent residence in the United States. He will become eligible for citizenship in September 1965. His status is therefore that of a "lawful resident alien."

"Crusade" A "Non-Profit" Organization

Articles of incorporation of the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade, as a non profit corporation, were filed on May 12, 1953, with the Iowa Secretary of State. They declared the objects and purposes of the organization to be: "To combat Communism by means of lectures in schools, colleges, civic clubs, service men's organizations and other similar organizations and through radio and television broadcasts and by providing courses for missionaries and others to be used in Bible Schools and seminaries and the holding of religious and evangelistic services and through the publication of books, pamphlets and other literature and by other appropriate means."

The incorporators were: Leonard Bosgraf of Chicago, Ill., William E. Pietsch of Cedar Falls, Iowa, and Robert Sackett of Waterloo, Iowa. Mr. Bosgraf was an attorney, Mr. Sackett a printer. The Crusade's address was Box 508, Waterloo, Iowa.

In 1958, the articles of incorporation were amended. The name of Fred C. Schwarz replaced that of Leonard Bosgraf. By that time, too, the "crusade" had received tax exemption, as an "educational and religious" organization, from the Federal government.

International headquarters and executive offices of the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade were established in February, 1958, in Long Beach, Calif., a short sprint on the Freeway from Los Angeles, a metropolis which has been notably responsive to revivalists.

Regional offices are maintained—sometimes in conjunction with the business or professional offices of the regional directors—in San Diego, Calif., Houston, Tex., Seattle, Wash., Kenmore, Wash., Ypsilanti, Mich., and Indianapolis, Ind. The international flavor is supplied by the branch office address of 142 Concord Road, Concord, Australia, where Lillian May and the young Schwarzes reside.

"Crusade" Roster

By the time the "crusade" had hit its stride as a going concern, the name of Dr. Pietsch had vanished from its governing body. The present roster of officers and directors is:

PRESIDENT AND EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR: Dr. Fred C. Schwarz, Sydney, Australia
VICE PRESIDENT: Rev. James D. Colbert, Long Beach, Calif.
VICE PRESIDENT: Dr. George W. Westcott, Ypsilanti, Mich.
VICE PRESIDENT: William P. Strube, Jr., Houston, Tex.
SECRETARY: Miss Ella Doorn, Long Beach, Calif.
DIRECTORS: Robert E. Sackett, Waterloo, Iowa
Dr. Joost Sluis, San Francisco, Calif.

No treasurer is listed.

Rev. James D. Colbert, an erstwhile self-employed truck driver, is Director of Missions for the "crusade," co-ordinating and planning its activities. He apprenticed for his career as an expert in anti-Communism as pastor of a church in Pedley, Calif. (Pop. 2226) and as Director of the Riverside, Calif. branch of Youth For Freedom. He has lectured at the Schools of Anti-Communism in Philadelphia, Miami, Los Angeles, New Orleans and New York.

Dr. George Westcott, a surgeon and former medical missionary to Africa, directs the "crusade's" Michigan activities and renders field service in the Caribbean area. From his medical office in Ypsilanti, he distributes quantities of "crusade" literature. He leaves his practice to attend the Schools of anti-Communism and to tape the lectures delivered there. He has served on the faculties of the "schools" in Milwaukee, New Orleans and Oakland.

William P. Strube, Jr., is one of Schwarz's most fervent disciples, having seen the light at a Schwarz rally which by his own admission left him trembling and a-sweat. He is the only one of the guiding group, outside of the doctor, to have achieved national magazine notice. Harpers in October 1961 profiled him as a leading Houston superpatriot. Strube is president of the Mid-American Life Insurance Company and director of the "crusade's" Houston operation. His office is jammed with portable tape recorders, giant tape reproducing machines and technicians, for duplication of speeches delivered by the crusaders." "We must have fast and mass dissemination of the information if we are to preserve our freedom," he declares.

"Keep moving" is Strube's slogan. He advocates above all proliferation of patriotic organizations under different names and banners. "Our strength is not in unity," he said. (St. Louis, April, 1961) "It is in the mobilization of multiple motivation."

"If we had one big group," Strube made explicit, "it becomes easily smeared with a half truth or a news story or something of that type that is not true. If you have one group operating under one name, one story can kill it nation-wide in a few seconds. If you've got 10,000 groups, each one with a different name, built around their own motivations, if they smear one, while they're smearing that one, start ten more and you, in turn, keep moving."

Modestly, Strube describes himself in a self-authored pamphlet as "one of America's leading authorities on the subject of the Communists' tactics in the cold war." Aside from his tutelage by the Australian doctor, Strube's preparation for this role included a year at Hannibal, Mo.'s La Grange Junior College, a few months of Naval ROTC at the University of Washington, Seattle, and University of California, Berkeley, and a year's service as an ensign aboard a destroyer in the Aleutians after the end of World War II.

James A. Spurlock joined the "crusade's" Houston staff in January, 1962. Spurlock has been a professional lecturer on Communism since his undergraduate days at the University of Houston.

Miss Ella Doorn, the Secretary, has been with the "crusade" since its incorporation. Before that she taught school in rural Wisconsin and worked for the Hovland Sheet Metal Works at Eau Claire, Wis. She is the doctor's administrative assistant. At headquarters she shares responsibilities with Frank B. Fuhr, Executive Administrator, who was formerly Assistant Executive Director of the International Christian Leadership, Inc. of Washington, D.C.

Robert E. Sackett, the sole remaining founder, owns the Morris Printing Company of Waterloo, Iowa, having acquired it in 1955 after working there for fifteen years. The Morris Printing Company produces the "crusade's" pamphlets, newsletters and other literature.

Dr. Joost Sluis, born in the Netherlands and naturalized in the United States in 1944, World War II naval veteran, graduate of M.I.T. and Harvard Medical School, is an orthopedic surgeon. He maintains a part-time medical office in San Francisco and is a clinical instructor at the University of California Medical School, but the bulk of his time and energy goes into the direction of the Northern California activities of the "crusade," and to its foreign operations. He lectures at the "schools," distributes films and tape recordings, travels extensively in this country and abroad.

Capt. E. R. Barnes, former District Chaplain of the Eighth Naval District, directs the San Diego, Calif., office; Charles Sarvis and Floyd Burroughs, business executives in Seattle and Indianapolis, direct the "crusade" in their respective areas out of their business offices. Elton Wilson is director of the Australian program, Mrs. Fred C. Schwarz its salaried secretary.

"Crusade" Program

The program for which they assume responsibility has four principal aspects:

The patriotic rally
The Schools of Anti-Communism
The foreign operations
The publication and dissemination of literature and recordings.

THE PATRIOTIC RALLY centers around the personality, philosophy and evangelistic zeal of Fred Schwarz. General admission is one dollar. An offering is taken before the question period.

The size of audiences varies, depending on the efficacy of advance promotion. The audiences are largely middle-aged and middle-class, predominantly Protestant, invariable white. For them, Schwarz has a direct and terrifying message: "They (the Communists) aim to liquidate the bourgeoisie. Who are the bourgeoisie? Well, if you own shares of common stock, it means you. Fifteen million Americans own common stock. If the Reds win, it means the gallows."

The doctor begins his standard lecture with these premises:

The Communists propose to conquer the world.
They are conquering it.
They are doing it by means of a program and a timetable.
If they succeed, it means slavery and death for free men.
Many of us are helping the Communists.
We must do something about the problem.
There is no limit to what we can accomplish if we really want to and if we make the effort necessary.

The program of the Communists, he points out, is to bring about "progressive surrender" through "military encirclement, economic encirclement and psychological encirclement." The area of "psychological encirclement" is pre-empted as the Schwarz domain. "Ninety percent of the people get their information from Communist sources," he declared. "We must study the nature of Communism" (from Schwarz literature and lectures). "We must fight Communism with knowledge."

"Each of us has a personal responsibility," he says. "We cannot leave it to the government. The government and the State Department have tremendous problems—an appalling job to do—and it's easy to criticize from the vantage point of no responsibility. But unless each of us does his job, accepts personal responsibility, we have no right to criticize." and "We don't express an opinion on national programs. We will not tell our (sic) government what to do." (Oakland, Cal. Tribune, Dec. 19, 1961)

Nevertheless, when the House Un-American Activities Committee asked Schwarz whether he believed it possible to negotiate with the Soviets, he had answered flatly, "To negotiate true peace with people who are utterly dedicated to the concept of the historical inevitability of class war and their victory is impossible. To think that we can do it is to indicate a failure to understand Communism so completely that it approaches mental illness," thus by implication questioning the sanity of four American presidents—Roosevelt, Truman, Eisenhower and Kennedy—all of whom have authorized negotiations with the Soviets.

Before the House Committee, he has belittled the entire American approach to the Communist danger. "Here is the great paradox. The Communists profess themselves to be materialistic and we profess ourselves to be idealists and spiritual people. As a consequence of these beliefs, the Communists are winning the world by first winning the students ideologically while we try to combat them by material means. Basically, the program, at least if you look at it, budget-wise, is about 40 billions approximately for military purposes, then about three billions for material assistance and a tiny fragment for purposes of information, education and spiritual welfare.

"The paradox is this: basically, much of our program to combat Communism rests on a Marxist foundation. Marxism teaches that the ideas of the mind, as well as the emotions of the heart, emerge out of material environment. When we want the people of the world to resist the Communist idea and embrace the idea of freedom, we think that if we give them material benefits, this will automatically come to pass . . . The foundation is wrong."

This theme—that our foreign aid program is of no value, is materialistic, even Marxist, that our defense spending is absurd—"They (the Communists) don't want to preside over radio-active rubble"—is repeated over and again in his lectures. Communism, he insists, does not have its roots in poverty, ignorance, and despair. It has its roots in students and in intellectuals.

Primary Targets

Hence, the primary target of the Schwarz "crusade" is the student, the intellectual, and the university. It was no accident that when Schwarz spoke of British Guiana's Cheddi Jagan and Jagan's wife, Janet, he said: "He went to Northwestern University in Evanston and received his Communist training in this country. She went to Wayne University in Detroit and received her Communist training in this country." (St. Louis, April, 1961)

The drumfire of criticism, from the man who disclaims the right to criticize, is kept up in city after city:

against broadcasts of the Voice of America: "If we were urging them to revolt against their masters, that would be one thing. But when we keep reminding them they are in jail, I can't see what good that does." (New Orleans, Oct. 1961) against American hopes for a coalition government in Laos: "It will be playing the Communist game." (Philadelphia, May, 1962) against Constitutional guarantees of civil liberties: "Americans should be willing to renounce a certain measure of personal freedom in the battle against Communism." (Phoenix, Ariz., April 1961)

"Now let's stop crying about legal technicalities and think about this as intelligent people. The use of the Fifth Amendment protects against punishment by law—and nothing else. There are many things in this life which are not legally punishable but are definitely undesirable. There are many things not legally punishable but come within certain social consequences . . . If a person is asked a question that has two answers—one answer that could incriminate him and the other could not and he replies 'I won't answer because if I did I might incriminate myself," the answer must be incriminating or he's a liar and a perjurer. So when a person is asked, 'Are you a Communist?' and he says, 'I refuse to answer because it might incriminate me,' he is either a Communist or a perjurer and you are entitled to treat him as such . . ." (St. Louis, April, 1961)

The fast exaggeration, the glib overstatement, the startling declaration which cannot be proved or disproved, but leaves the listeners panting and beseeching help, are his stock in trade:

"Communist children are forced to witness mass executions as part of their education. Communists believe they must put about half the world's population to death and the children are being conditioned for their role as adults." (Chicago, Nov. 1953)

"I believe he (Khrushchev) has chosen San Francisco as headquarters of the world Communist dictatorship. The Mark Hopkins Hotel will make splendid offices for him. The people of San Francisco—those they don't dump in the Bay—can be put in the Nevada desert which is quite handy." (San Francisco, Jan. 1962)

"The hour of their final conquest draws near. I think my prediction of world conquest for the Communists by 1973 was too conservative. They are running ahead of schedule . . . There are one billion people in Communist laboratories today being organized and exploited for world conquest. This is six times the population of the United States . . . Their Godless doctrine of Communism is being taught children at a ratio of five to one over doctrines taught in any school anywhere . . . If Communism takes over the world, it will be unrestrained. People will be animals, to be disposed of. Imagine them coming for you!" (Phoenix, Ariz., Mar. 1961)

Sometimes directly, sometimes obliquely, he has attacked organized labor, the film and television industries, as well as universities, liberals, intellectuals and the American governmental agencies, though, he insisted in Seattle (Feb. 12, 1962) "Our purpose is not to create distrust or pit neighbor against neighbor, as they charge. We are out to look at the truth and to examine it." A fortnight before this pious declaration, however, he had attacked the Alameda County (Calif.) AFL-CIO Labor Council which had passed a resolution opposing his "crusade" in Oakland, comparing the Labor Council to the Central Committee of the Communist Party in Russia. "It's the same methods the Communists use," he said.

Asked in St. Louis about subversion in Hollywood, he gave a sweeping answer: "There are two things we can do. We can cry out in the darkness. We can cry out about how awful the Communist influence is in radio, TV, the press, in government. We can just regret it all. Or we can light a candle . . . we can personally bring our own program of light, education . . ."

"Hollywood's Answer . . ."

The light was brought, when television Station WPIX, owned by the New York Daily News, on November 3, 1961, devoted three hours of prime evening time to "Hollywood's Answer to Communism," a "special," made up of the proceedings of the spectacular Hollywood Bowl Rally of the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade and the "seminars" conducted by the Southern California Schools of Anti-Communism.

Billed by the station as a public service program, the time was nevertheless paid for by the Schick Safety Razor Company and Technicolor, Inc., who had joined in paying for the original live telecast of the Rally over a network of thirty-three stations on the West Coast.

Though the home screen offered George Murphy, actor and vice president of Technicolor, Inc., welcoming to the "crusader's" ranks Jack Warner, Walter Brennan, Pat O'Brien, Linda Darnell, Jimmy Stewart, Ronald Reagan, Y. Frank Freeman, Dale Evans, Roy Rogers, Jane Russell, Connie Haines and other film and TV luminaries; the solemn statements of Senator Thomas J. Dodd and Representative Walter H. Judd, the apology and pledge of alliance by C. D. Jackson, the familiar combination of piety, platitudes, and melodrama of Fred Schwarz, the dramatic honors of the evening were pre-empted by W. Cleon Skousen, of Salt Lake City, Utah, former F.B.I. man, author of "The Naked Communist" and frequent faculty member of Schwarz's Schools of Anti-Communism.

Skousen, a devout Mormon, has been intimately associated with the entire spectrum of rightwing organizations. He does not hesitate to commend Robert Welch and the John Birch Society. "I personally approve of the good work that the John Birch Society is doing. It is a nationwide organization and they're fighting Communists." (Santa Ana, Calif., Mar. 1961)

Before the thousands in the Hollywood Bowl and unnumbered home viewers, Skousen charged that the late Harry Hopkins, adviser to President Roosevelt, had violated the security of the United States in 1943 by sending atomic information to the Soviet Union. He blamed "the planning and thinking of a select group in the State Department" for Communist successes in China, Korea, Laos and Cuba, and demanded: full scale Congressional probe of the U.S. State Department; rewriting of the United Nations Charter and recapturing of the organization by the West or America's withdrawal from the U.N.; outlawing of the Communist Party in the United States; severance of diplomatic relations with Russia; establishment of a trade embargo against the entire Soviet bloc.

He received a standing ovation.

At the St. Louis School of Anti-Communism, Skousen charged: "President Roosevelt died and American foreign policy fell into the hands of a hard core left wing in the American State Department that ran our tragic foreign relations with other governments during the next several years. Now this group that I call the left-wing branch of the American State Department were individuals that seem to feel that somehow we must cut down world tensions through appeasement, gradual capitulation or whatever else was necessary. There were some members of that group with the advisers thereto that were under Communist discipline. Others were Socialists. Others were just confused, depending on their particular state of mind at the time."

At the Greater Phoenix School of Anti-Communism, Skousen had warned of "a small minority of teachers who guide and control thousands of teachers and students in American schools," and of textbooks, "intended to destroy our basic beliefs," and had said: "It is dangerous to point at those teachers who help Communism but are not actually Communists. But it may be pointed out that they are definitely helping Communism."

Anti-Communist "School"

THE SCHOOL OF ANTI-COMMUNISM is Fred Schwarz's favored technique for prolonging his impact on communities and for raising funds for his "crusade." The idea is not original. Similar "schools" of anti-Communism have been conducted by Project Alert, by Education for American Freedom, Inc., and with similar "experts" as faculty. Yet so highly does the doctor regard his achievements in the educational field that he has talked grandiosely of establishing a university of anti-Communism, possibly to supersede The National Education Program at Harding College, at Searcy, Ark., which hitherto has functioned chiefly as an arsenal for superpatriots, supplying them with literature, films and film strips.

According to the red white and blue circulars which herald them, the Schwarz "schools" have two purposes: 1. "To instruct citizens in the philosophy, morality, organization, deceitful techniques and objectives of Communism; 2. To encourage the students to begin a combined program of study and applied citizenship in order to transform acquired knowledge into local, national and international programs which will be effective in the maintenance of freedom."

The "schools" have nine basic policies: 1. To emphasize the nature and techniques of Communism as revealed in their own basic literature and by their past history; 2. To refrain from judging other organizations or individuals. However, the specific actions of organizations or individuals may be discussed in relation to the announced Communist purpose; 3. No national programs will be designed; 4. The "School" is nonpolitical, nonsectarian and secular; 5. Academic freedom is granted to faculty members. Their interpretations and suggested programs are presented for consideration and are not to be regarded as the official interpretations and policies of the "school"; 6. No literature will be distributed promoting any organization not formally associated with the "school"; 7. No literature attacking other organizations or individuals will be distributed; 8. No petitions will be circulated nor programs of political action advocated; 9. All speakers and school personnel shall adhere no standards of courtesy and truth.

Policy Number 5 is the disclaimer, officially and in advance, exonerating Frederick Schwarz from the excesses of his handpicked faculty.

Beginning at Long Beach in December, 1958, the five-day Schools of Anti-Communism have been conducted in Indianapolis, Milwaukee, San Francisco, San Diego, Philadelphia, Phoenix, St. Louis, Los Angeles, Shreveport, New Orleans, Columbus, St. Petersburg, Oakland, Seattle, Honolulu, Omaha, Dallas, Tyler (Texas), Anaheim (the seat of Disneyland) and in New York City.

Nominally, each "school" is sponsored by a local "citizens' committee" or "freedom forum," built up out of the interlocking directorates and supporters of indigenous "patriotic" organizations, "in association with the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade," to which checks for "tuition" are to be made payable.

"Tuition," called "donation" for purposes of tax deductibility, is twenty dollars (closing banquet additional) for five days of instruction. Cut rates are available for ministers, priests, rabbis, teachers, students, policemen, firemen and servicemen. A "donation," varying from four to eight dollars, will secure admission to one day's sessions.

Each "school" day (running time 8:30 A.M. to 9:45 P.M.) begins and ends with a lecture by Dr. Schwarz. The Schwarz lectures follow this order: First day, A.M.: Philosophy of Communism, Part 1; P.M.: Communist Appeal to the Intellectual. (This lecture also has been titled, "Why Millionaires, College Professors and Ministers of Religion Become Communists.") It forms a chapter in Schwarz's major opus: "You Can Trust The Communists (to do what they say)." Of this lecture, The Christian Century (Dec. 13, 1961) wrote: "By not naming anyone, he places all under suspicion. He never indicates which millionaire, which professor or which minister becomes a Communist, thus implying that becoming a Communist is a characteristic tendency of these three breeds of men. This is what generates superheated emotion and divides Americans against each other."

The balance of the week Schwarz lectures as follows: Second day, A.M.: Philosophy of Communism, Part 2; P.M.: Communist Philosophy and Methods of Violence; Third day, A.M.: The Communist Party; P.M.: The Cause and Course of Communism; Fourth day, A.M.: Communist Fronts and Captive Organizations; P.M.: Treatment of Communism; Fifth day, A.M.: How to Debate with Communists and Fellow Travelers; P.M.: Principles and Program of Anti-Communist Action. Schwarz also delivers the main speech at the "Design for Victory" banquet which closes the "school." It is a fund-raising function.

The twelve-hour sessions are broken up by showings of films. These may include Blue Print for Communism, Nightmare in Red, Revolt in Hungary (made by CBS and narrated by Walter Cronkite), The Ultimate Weapon (narrated by Ronald Reagan), as well as the discredited documentary "Operation Abolition" and a strip "Communism On the Map" prepared by Harding College. The latter film showed North America as the one white spot on a red global map, with even Hawaii crimson. It was withdrawn from public use by the "crusade" when the San Francisco Chronicle (Jan. 1962) protested directly to Schwarz.

Between the doctor's personal appearances, his faculty instructs. The more-or-less "regulars" include Rev. James Colbert, Dr. Joost Sluis, W. P. Strube, Jr., W. Cleon Skousen (previously mentioned), Robert Morris, former Chief Counsel for the U. S. Senate Internal Security Subcommittee; Herbert Philbrick, former F.B.I. counterspy and author of "I Led Three Lives"; Dr. Tirzo Del Junco, a Pasadena, Calif. surgeon, Cuban-born, and John Drakeford, Australian citizen, former patient of Schwarz, now Professor at Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary in Texas.

Professor Drakeford lectures on The Communist Manifesto and Das Kapital. His lecture begins with the proclamation that "Karl Marx was a Jew," and that he was short and ugly, lazy and slovenly and had no desire to go out and work.

"Crusade" Schools Guest Lecturers

Among the guest experts lecturing at the "schools" have been:

Richard Arens, veteran of fifteen years on Capitol Hill, who is credited with drafting the McCarran-Walter Act. In 1956, Arens was appointed Committee Director of the House Un-American Activities Committee and the following year conducted the friendly interrogation of Schwarz. In speeches, he has declared that there are 3,000,000 to 5,000,000 illegal aliens in the United States, all with Communist leanings or criminal Communist backgrounds, and that "there are 9,000,000 Communist agents in Africa and the House Committee knows for a fact that some African witch doctors have been taken to Moscow, trained and returned to Africa, loaded with the new and terrible drug from which there is no point of return." Arens has been associated as paid consultant with the Draper research project to prove Negroes genetically inferior to whites, has acted as adviser on grants for "patriotic projects" to H. L. Hunt, the Texas multimillionaire superpatriot. Meetings of John Birch Society chapters feature tape recordings of Arens' speeches.

Anthony T. Bouscaren, professor of political science at Syracuse University, author of "A Guide To Anti-Communist Action," foe of liberals in and out of universities, consultant to the House Un-American Activities Committee, active participant in Young Americans For Freedom, Intercollegiate Society of Individualists, American Committee for Aid to Katanga Freedom Fighters, Conservative Party, Inc., of New York. Bouscaren has publicly approved of Robert Welch and the John Birch tactics.

Rev. C. Stephen Dunker, C.M. of St. Louis, one of the founders of the Cardinal Mindszenty Foundation and for three years its chairman and spiritual director. In "You Can Trust The Communists" Schwarz states this organization was created at his suggestion "to spare the embarrassment of mixing Protestants and Catholics."

John Fred Schafly, Jr., Alton, Ill., lawyer and former member of the Special Committee of the American Bar Association on Communist Strategy, Tactics and Objectives, has been actively associated with Project Alert, Education For Freedom, Inc. The favorite target in his speeches is the United States Supreme Court.

F. Gano Chance, electrical equipment manufacturer of Centralia, Mo., former president of the Missouri Chamber of Commerce, member of the National Council of the John Birch Society and founder of its Centralia Chapter.

Rear Admiral Chester Ward, U.S.N. (Retired), Director of Education for the American Security Council, a private intelligence service for businessmen. In his speeches, he names George Kennan, Adlai Stevenson, Senator William Fulbright, Walt Rostow, McGeorge Bundy and Jerome B. Wiesner, as a "power elite" who have "brought defeat to the defenders of freedom throughout the world."

Commander Paul A. Terry, U.S.N. (Retired), of San Diego, Calif., director of the Department of Education for the conservative Copley newspapers, organizer and speaker for Project Alert. Terry has attacked President Kennedy and Senator Fulbright, has defended the John Birch Society. "They are dedicated to fighting our enemy. We never want to lose sight of that."

Half Truths as Whole Truths

In May, 1962, Leola McKie attended the "school" in Omaha, Neb. and recorded her observations in the Christian Century. (July 4, 1962.) I heard half truth expounded as a whole truth," she wrote. "I learned how powerful propaganda can be when promulgated through showmanship." She heard Schwarz disclaim responsibility for what his faculty taught and wondered "how many public or private educational institutions could get by without assuming responsibility for what their faculties taught." She listened to Dr. Del Junco's defense of the John Birch Society; Schafly's attack upon the United States Supreme Court, Robert Morris' contention that our military establishment, schools, churches, television, radio, nongovernmental agencies, had been "neutralized" to admit the Communist victory; Skousen's demand for overhaul of the State Department, Central Intelligence Agency, and the United Nations.

She heard Schwarz belittle danger from rightwing extremism. "He reminded us that on the 'left' are the communists with 100 megaton bombs and on the 'right' only a candy maker with 1 million bonbons and a few minute men with rifles in their garages.

"Along with his task of disseminating information," she wrote, "Dr. Schwarz introduced sales talks for the books on display (particularly his own), tape recordings and banquet tickets . . . He is not interested in programs, he said, but in people; when people have enough knowledge they will create their own programs. Knowledge is power; we must know the enemy. And there is a price to be paid for that knowledge: $20 tuition for the 'school's' 14 sessions, $2 for a single session; a tape with two speeches for $5; a set of recordings covering all the sessions for $75 ('a bargain!')

"I became in turn frustrated and angry," she concluded. "Bored and incredulous, irritated and amused. But I thanked God that more people were not there to hear the downgrading of my country to which I listened."

Daily attendance at the Omaha "school" varied from 116 to 500, with a no-admission-charge family and youth night, featuring the double bill of Schwarz and Philbrick, which drew 1,750. Cash receipts from the banquet were $17,565 and income from tuition "donations" and sales of literature, $19,644.

Attendance at the "schools" has varied from a low of 75 in Philadelphia to several thousands in Miami. Larger, more sophisticated cities, like San Francisco, Philadelphia and New York are least responsive. Highly successful in attendance as well as financially, was the "school" in the Los Angeles Sports Arena at the end of August, 1961. The published balance sheet reported cash receipts of $311,253, expenses of $96,496, net profit of $214,757.

Some of these profits—how much cannot be precisely determined—go into the "crusade's" foreign projects.

Foreign Projects

THE FOREIGN PROJECTS have been alternately shrouded in vagueness and boasted about with extravagance.

By its nature, an operation which is perforce shrouded in mystery is necessarily, and for its sponsors, providentially, secret, yet certain details of the "crusade's" activities abroad are general currency. Schwarz's own figures, given to the New York Times, reported an expenditure of $234,560 for foreign projects in 1961. Of this sum, Schwarz said, $152,615 went to India, $58,000 "for a rotary press and a building to enlarge the distribution of The Voice of Kerala, a daily newspaper the "crusade" has been subsidizing for nearly three years. It has a circulation of 29,000 in an area where the Communists formerly were in control and are still very strong. Also $5,000 was used for an anti-Communist book in Kerala. Ten thousand dollars went to purchase property for a home for orphan boys in Secunderabad in Andhra State and additional amounts for the sustenance of fifty boys and their teachers. Other sums were spent on literature and in support of native organization." (N. Y. Times, June 24, 1962*)*

Schwarz was, in this interview, far less specific about the expenditure of $37,067 in British Guiana where Prime Minister Cheddi Jagan had accused the "crusade" of working for the opposition to his People's Progressive Party. According to persons close to the "crusade," the key figure in the "crusade's" grand design for liberating British Guiana is Belrum Singh Rai, an Indian who was expelled from the People's Progressive Party after its April elections.

"In Japan where $11,974 was sent last year, the book 'You Can Trust The Communists' has been translated into Japanese and help is being given to student organizations opposed to communism. Lesser amounts were spent in other countries. A comic book in Spanish distributed widely in Mexico has colored cartoons of Communist soldiers prodding a priest with bayonet, a whip-flourishing woman with hammer and sickle on her uniform threatening helpless children, and a group of slave laborers, one of whom is being lashed by a guard. The "crusade" also paid for 3,000 copies of Dr. Schwarz's book in Spanish for Mexican distribution. Most of the current work in Australia is distribution of literature and subsidizing Dr. Schwarz's book."

In connection with inquiries into his expenditures, Schwarz personally offered figures widely at variance with these. He cited gifts of "approximately" $50,000 to "certain parties" in Kerala for the rotary press, "approximately" $24,000 for the establishment of a daily newspaper, "approximately" $24,000 to the orphanage in Secunderabad, there three grants to India totalling $98,000. In addition, "approximately" $25,000 went to the "Asian Institute of Research in Tokyo" and "approximately" $2,400 to a publication "Our Africa" in Johannesburg, South Africa.

In his Meet The Press interview, Schwarz cited the Voice of Kerala as the outstanding achievement of the "crusade" abroad.

> MR. SPIVAK: I believe you yourself admit, though, that British Guiana is going Communist, so you haven't been very successful there.
> DR. SCHWARZ: He (Ambassador Morrison) claimed it was very successful because he claimed Cheddi Jagan, whom he named as a Communist, was going to be defeated . . .

(Later in the program, the following exchange took place:)

> MR. WECHSLER: Dr. Schwarz, it is the declared position of the Kennedy Administration, as it was of the Eisenhower regime, that we seek honorable agreements with the Communists throughout the world, however difficult and harassing the quest for such agreements may be. Is it the objective of your movement to disrupt the effort to obtain such agreements?
> DR. SCHWARZ: Not for a minute. The objective of our movement is to give education concerning the philosophy, the morality, the educational structure, the techniques and objectives of Communism so that the value of such agreements and the probable future of such agreements may be realized and so that the democratic process may be more effective in this area.
> MR. WECHSLER: I think you have answered my question. You have talked a good deal about the function of your movement in educating this country. Is it your view that the leadership of this country is inadequate to that role? It seems to me when you talk of setting up printing presses in India and other places that, in effect, you have set yourself up as an adjunct to our government or perhaps superseding it. Is it your view that the government is inadequate to the task of resisting the Communist challenge?
> DR. SCHWARZ: Yes, I believe that the government of the United States is a constitutional government that is established with certain constitutional liberties. It is not a totalitarian government. It has a monopoly in military areas. It does not have a monopoly in many other areas and the government has always encouraged people-to-people and individual private areas to operate in the field of education and we are acting in the area which the government encourages in that regard. I think on the evidence it is quite clear that our past programs, whoever is responsible for them, have been inadequate.
> MR. WECHSLER: But isn't the educational program that you are carrying on actually at variance with the stated position and objectives of the United States government?
> DR SCHWARZ: Not in any sense because actually . . . various agencies of the government are using our material in many areas of the world . . .
> MR. WECHSLER: . . . Could you tell us here which agencies and what material?
> DR. SCHWARZ: For example my book, "You Can Trust The Communists."
> MR. WECHSLER: What agency?
> DR. SCHWARZ: The United States Information Agency has arranged for the translation of it into Korean and we are cooperating with them in the purchase of a number of copies so that they can be distributed to the Koreans in Japan.

The enormous gap between reality and Schwarz's claim became evident in the aftermath. Following Meet The Press, Schwarz told the New York Times the U.S.I.A. had arranged with a publisher in Japan to translate the work and that his organization was providing the money to buy "about" 3,000 books, noting that Koreans in Japan had been "especially subject to pro-Communist propaganda."

On August 27, the U.S.I.A. told the New York Times it had bought 210 copies of Schwarz's book, had paid the doctor $100 for foreign rights, had paid a printer in Korea $281.31 to run off copies for agency libraries and Korean officials. Distribution was to be limited to South Korea.

"Crusade" Merchandise for Income

THE CRUSADE MERCHANDISE, spread on lobby tables, and also available by mail, runs from hardcover books to "midget missiles," sold in bulk, with blank space on which business firms may print their own names and patriotic slogans.

"You Can Trust The Communists" sells for $2.95, hardcover; fifty cents, paperback. Schwarz says the paperback has sold one million copies. He estimates his royalties at $20,000 a year. He also claims all of his royalties are turned back to the "crusade." However, no entry on the income side of the balance sheets he has made public gives verification of this—nor of an additional claim that he turns back to the "crusade" the hundred dollar fee paid him for each lecture he delivers.

Skousen, whose "The Naked Communist" ($4.95) and Philbrick whose "I Led Three Lives" ($3.00), compete with the master's work, have made no similar claims of generosity.

A basic set of materials is available for $50 to those desiring to go on with their education. Initial equipment consists of twelve sets of booklets and taped speeches by Schwarz, Strube, Jr., Arens and Philbrick. Skousen tapes may be purchased separately.

The "crusade" reported an income in 1961 of $26,110.97 from the sale of printed matter, tapes, films and recordings. For free distribution, it offers a pamphlet "What is the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade?", the Newsletters, issued from Long Beach but printed in Waterloo, and a Government Printing Office List of Publications, issued by the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Adding together the prices of the urgently recommended "crusade" materials, California Attorney General Stanley Mosk observed, "If an individual bought just one of each available tape and one of each booklet, it would cost him $689.10" and added, "No wonder this whole movement has been called patriotism for profit."

In 1961, the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade reported a tax-free income of $1,273,492.39 and disbursements of $1,018,838.41.

Its income sources were broken down as follows:

Letters	$127,572.70
Meetings	245,747.21
Books	23,911.15
Pledges	11,214.63
Films, tapes	2,199.82
Interest	411.54
Unsolicited	20,000.00
Banquets	89,104.96
Schools and Rallies	462,662.93
Brunches	290,666.45

Not listed as "income" were sizeable amounts spent by individuals and corporations to buy television time and newspaper advertisements and to reprint and distribute "crusade" literature. The organization's audited reports, Schwarz told The New York Times (June 24, 1962) do not "reflect these expenditures because not one penny of that money ever passed through our hands."

Not listed, also, is Schwarz's own purported donation of his royalties and lecture fees, nor income from memberships which range from $10 to $100.

The doctor says his is a grassroots "crusade," with 70,000 individual contributors, one-third of whom reside in California. One of the most generous benefactors reportedly is the Glenmede Trust Company of Philadelphia, credited with gifts of $40,000 from 1958-1960, and with $43,000 in 1961. (Whether at meeting, banquet, rally or brunch is not known.) The Schick Safety Razor Company, Patrick Frawley, Jr. its President, the Rotary Club of Los Angeles and the Richfield Oil Company have also been among the larger contributors.

Accounts in the name of the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade are maintained at the Long Beach branch of the United California Bank and Security Company, the First National Bank of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Long Beach, the U.S. National Bank, San Diego, the Montrose National Bank, Houston, and the Girard Corn Exchange, Philadelphia. Schwarz has a "field account" at the Citizens National Bank in Long Beach, on which he, James Colbert and Ella Doorn sign checks.

The reported expenditures of the "crusade" (N. Y. Times, June 24, 1962) list $223,788 spent in 1961 for administrative costs, including salaries of thirty staff members, traveling expenses and rent for branch offices. The top salary reported was $7,800 to James Colbert. In addition, Colbert receives a "house allowance" of $200 a month, and all traveling expenses. Two of his sisters are also on the payroll.

Schwarz says he is paid a salary of only $5,000 a year, plus all living and traveling expenses. His wife, Lillian May, is paid $450 a month to serve as secretary of the "crusade" in Australia.

Strube, Jr. and Dr. Sluis are each paid $500 a month and traveling expenses.

Income from rallies and "schools" has varied from city to city, but until the "crusade" invaded New York in the spring and summer of 1962, Fred Schwarz had not experienced a drastic financial setback.

New York Invasion

THE NEW YORK INVASION began with the arrival of Schwarz, in person, on April 9. One week before (April 2) the Social Education and Action Committee of the Presbytery of New York had issued a memorandum to churchmen which read in part:

"...We support our government in its resistance to a Communist takeover of the free world and we think it should be spared the distraction at home of this lunacy of the extreme right, which the Roman Catholic Bishop John Wright of Pittsburgh referred to as a 'kind of sick-in-the-head patriotism—not patriotism at all but mere nervous indigestion'... Hurling their unsubstantiated charges of disloyalty at leaders and institutions dedicated to building the free society that Communism despises but can scarcely defeat, they are creating an anxiety neurosis in the Nation. They are destroying the people's trust in their free churches, community, schools and elected officials . . . Dr. Frederick Schwarz and his Christian Anti-Communism Crusade avoids the extremes, relatively speaking, of Welch and the Birchites. None the less, there is a disturbing, if unplanned, relationship between these two men that must be kept in mind... Schwarz is supposed to take a dim view of the Birch Society yet he grinningly concedes that Welch signs up people whom he, Schwarz, works up. There is a serious question about a movement that stimulates those whom it reaches to become Birchers . . . He cannot escape involvement in a certain unity of disruption that characterizes the whole right..."

Accordingly, at the press conference Schwarz held on his arrival, the doctor shrugged off identification with the "radical right" as a boon rather than a handicap. "It's easier to go where you're known than where you're not known," he said. And as previously, he declined to denounce the Birch Society. He revealed he had come to New York because the metropolis was desperately in need of education about the Communist menace and announced a "warmup" rally for April 13 at Manhattan Center.

His promotional strategy began immediately to emerge.

His plan involved a technique as old as the art of press agentry. Experienced publicists agree that it is one by which you cannot lose. Its opening gambit is to seek an expression of opinion, favorable or otherwise, from a group which enjoys prestige and the confidence of the community. A favorable expression becomes an endorsement to be spread by advertising. An unfavorable expression can be dramatized as persecution. Controversy is provoked. Controversy makes news.

Schwarz and his advisers chose the Anti-Defamation League as the target of their strategy.

Schwarz and the ADL

On the day of the Schwarz arrival (April 9), Marvin Leibman, a public relations man who had previously serviced the Young Americans For Freedom, the Committee of One Million, the American Committee to Aid Katanga Freedom Fighters, the American Jewish League Against Communism and other causes, telephoned the Anti-Defamation League, suggesting that its leaders meet with Schwarz. No action was taken on the suggestion.

Thus, tentatively, began the setting of the stage for what was later to be touted widely as a massive campaign of "boycott, bigotry and fear."

The warmup "rally" at Manhattan Center drew an audience of 2,000 to a hall which seats 3,000. Members of the Young Americans For Freedom served as ushers and led the applause for the Schwarz routine speech. An appeal for volunteers and money was made. The New York daily papers gave the meeting adequate news coverage.

On May 2, Marvin Leibman again telephoned the Anti-Defamation League, saying Schwarz was eager to meet with the director of its Civil Rights Division and with others of its top leadership to answers questions and "to clear himself." The following day, Schwarz himself telephoned to repeat the request.

While the request for a "clearance" meeting was under consideration, William F. Buckley, Jr., editor of The National Review, wrote to ADL's Civil Rights Director (May 10) stating he had been informed the League representative had "declined to meet with Dr. Fred Schwarz" and demanding, "why you declined to see Dr. Schwarz, if indeed you did." Buckley received an answer dated May 17th: "This is in response to your May 10 letter asking whether I have declined to meet with Dr. Fred Schwarz and if so why. I have no need to meet with Dr. Schwarz nor any sense of obligation to respond as to the reason."

On May 29th, as a guest on the Barry Gray program (WMCA) Schwarz said he had sought a "trial" by the Anti-Defamation League to clear up charges that he and/or his organization were anti-Semitic. He admitted no such charge had ever been made by the Anti-Defamation League or any other responsible Jewish organization. "The ADL and the official Jewish bodies have been much fairer and much more objective than some of the Christian groups in their criticism," he said on the air. "I'd like to go on record on that fact."

Even while he went on record for WMCA's midnight audience, the June 5th issue of The National Review was on the newsstands carrying a two-page editorial, headlined, "The Impending Smear of Dr. Fred Schwarz."

The editorial spoke of "the tendency, so frequently remarked, to brand as anti-Semitic anyone associated with an explicitly Christian undertaking, who is also a tough-minded anti-Communist or conservative." Declaring that "the ADL executive had flatly refused to meet with Dr. Schwarz" the editorial went on to say that there could be only one reason for the refusal to receive Dr. Schwarz: like so many other enemies of Dr. Schwarz, the ADL spokesman was afraid to put himself in the position of finding out that there is nothing wrong with Schwarz." The National Review concluded, "the high command at the ADL evidently reasoned that they would find it much more satisfying to profess ignorance about Dr. Schwarz and therefore encourage the continued circulation of invidious rumors about him than to have to report that they had investigated him, met with him and satisfied themselves that there was not in him the least secretion of racial or religious prejudice."

On that same date of June 5th, ADL's Civil Rights Director, keeping a long standing engagement, addressed the District 1 Convention of the B'nai B'rith at Kiamesha Lake, N.Y. In a general criticism of the radical right movement in America as a divisive force, he characterized Schwarz as "one of today's foremost practitioners of a philosophy of despair and gloom" and recounted Schwarz's efforts to get the Anti-Defamation League to hold a "formal hearing" to prove the doctor was not anti-Semitic. He stated that the Anti-Defamation League did not meet with Schwarz because "We will not permit ourselves to be used in this way." Of the "crusade's" program he added that it had condemned America's effective programs for combatting Communism and had confused many Americans by offering, "inane, meaningless, black-and-white solutions to our most complicated problems of survival" and would have Americans stand by "mute and disorganized, each man searching for Communists at home while international Communism capitalizes the distress and starvation of the world."

Schwarz reacted promptly, in lengthy letters to the New York Herald Tribune (which had reported the Kiamesha Lake speech) and to the International President of the B'nai B'rith. He termed the speech "defamatory" and "inaccurate," declared he had not asked for a "formal hearing" to clear himself of anti-Semitism, but had "merely requested an informal meeting to discuss with responsible officials problems that had arisen and to clarify areas of possible misunderstanding." The Schwarz communication was on the letterhead of the "Greater New York Anti-Communism Rally—Madison Square Garden, June 28, 1962." The name of the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade did not appear.

Eugene Lyons, a senior editor of Reader's Digest, entered the controversy on June 7 with a letter to the ADL, reporting that he had been invited to address the Madison Square Rally, adding, "I gather that the Anti-Defamation League has been attacking Dr. Schwarz. I would therefore be most grateful if you would let me know without delay what your League knows about him that I don't." He disclosed he had met with Schwarz personally the previous week and that Schwarz had "joined some of the Digest editors at a luncheon in which he was thoroughly grilled on all aspects of his work." He added a gratuitous warning: "The ADL stance on this mater is potentially dangerous in terms of anti-Semitism. Dr. Schwarz is meeting in the great Jewish city of New York the kind of harassment he has not met anywhere else. Millions of earnest anti-Communists are likely to misinterpret this and lay the blame at your door."

Before the Anti-Defamation League had an opportunity to answer, Lyons wrote a second letter (June 13th) protesting the alleged failure to reply to him and announcing he was making his own missives available to the press. The National Review, which in its June 19th issue had carried a hostile attack on the Anti-Defamation League ("He Shall Not Be Heard: The Anti-Defamation League"), published the Lyons letters in its July 3rd issue, headlined, "Does Mr. Forster Plead The Fifth?"

While the planned, coordinated "controversy" was thus being exploited, volunteers, recruited chiefly from the Young Americans For Freedom, toiled in Marvin Leibman's public relations office, stuffing envelopes, to flood New York with promotional literature for the Madison Square Garden Rally.

Hints Organized Conspiracy

Sizeable advertisements in The New York Times and the World-Telegram endeavored to explain that the use of "Christian" in the "crusade's" designation did not mean the movement was "anti-Semitic" and that its leader would welcome the opportunity to answer questions of any doubting organization and to confer with its leaders. The doctor also began to hint, in private conversation, as in public gathering, of an organized conspiracy by Jewish groups to prevent him from buying television time, of threats against his sponsors of boycott of their products. Communiques from Long Beach were stating, unabashed, that "New York was a city of bigotry, boycott and fear. In this city it was considered in many quarters un-American to be an unashamed Christian."

Nevertheless, Schwarz was able to report a "breakthrough." Despite "that clique," broadened now to include the National Council of Churches, he had managed to buy evening time on WOR TV (Channel 9) to promote the Garden Rally. He had been an invited guest on the "Long John" Show (WOR radio), had been the beneficiary of news coverage and features in The New York Times, and of a laudatory editorial in the New York Daily News, which had urged its readers to buy "You Can Trust The Communists." He held "warmup" rallies in the New York suburbs and made personal appearances in Episcopal and Catholic Churches in the four boroughs outside Manhattan.

Yet he found himself in new difficulties. The mayor of Mt. Vernon, N.Y. withdrew, with publicity, as a sponsor of the Garden Rally. The National Commander of the Jewish War Veterans declared the concern of his organization was not the issue of putative anti-Semitism but whether or not Schwarz and his faculty were cooperating with the forces of bigotry, authoritarianism and reaction. And the Internal Revenue Service questioned the tax deductibility of the Greater New York School of Anti-Communism, claiming tax exemption had been granted only to the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade, which Schwarz had deliberately kept in the background in New York. Indeed, on the Barry Gray Show he had flatly stated, of the "school" and rally: "This is not a function of the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade. This a nonpolitical, nonsectarian, anti-Communism rally and we're anxious and eager to have full cooperation of everyone."

His mounting panic over expenses and the possibility of failure was tacit in the announcement before the Garden Rally that the School of Anti-Communism would be held August 27-31 at Carnegie Hall (seating capacity 3,200), not at Madison Square Garden (seating capacity 20,000) as previously announced.

The Madison Square Garden Rally, promoted industriously for two months, drew an audience of 8,000, "less than half the number," The New York Times pointed out, "the CACC had drawn in the Los Angeles Sports Arena in August, 1961." A thin line of pickets, whom Schwarz in his Newsletter characterized as "Communists," "Fascists," "Neo-Nazis" and "Anti-Semites" marched outside the Garden. The faithful heard the doctor's hour-long speech, applauded Herbert Philbrick, Eugene Lyons, Arthur G. McDowell, an official of the Upholsterer's Union and Executive Secretary of the Council Against Communist Aggression, booed references to the United States Supreme Court, Bertrand Russell, Drew Pearson and Barry Gray, cheered when Pat Boone, singing star of radio and television, dramatically declared: "I would rather see my four daughters blown into heaven by an atomic bomb than taught into hell by the Communists." In his Newsletter, the doctor crowed, "The Madison Square Garden Anti-Communism Rally was triumphal."

Preparations for the "school" at Carnegie Hall moved ahead under the constant charge of "bigotry, boycott and fear." George Sokolsky in his column complained, "I do not understand why it is 'bigotry, boycott and fear' not to follow the behests of Dr. Fred Schwarz. What is the compulsion to follow his leadership or to attend his meetings? Those who want to go are free to go; those who want to stay away are free to stay away. Is this bigotry?"

Victory or Defeat in Two Months

"The open antagonism of the Communists and Nazis and their affiliates," the Schwarz Newsletter informed his constituency, "is comparatively easily handled. The sly, dishonest opposition of the underground is more difficult to locate and defeat. It must be drawn to the surface before it can be met and destroyed . . . The battle is now raging. The next two months will tell a story of victory or defeat. I need your prayerful and generous help, more than ever before. As the enemies of freedom are routed in New York City, the news will travel the entire world, striking terror to the tyrants and encouraging free men everywhere."

In August, desperate for cash, the doctor flew west, to Tyler and Dallas, Texas, to spell out, in meeting halls, crowded with local rightwing extremists, his battle with the Jews in New York.

His speech at Tyler began, as always, with the disclaimer of anti-Semitism because of his once-Jewish paternity, with the flat statement, "I don't believe that Judaism equals Communism." Having thus implanted an association in the minds of his audiences, he went on to relate that he had been asked to drop the word "Christian" from the name of his "crusade" because there were three million Jews in New York City. He declared Jews had threatened boycotts against his sponsors, particularly against the Schick Safety Razor Company, maintained he had minutes of secret meetings of Jewish organizations, plotting to sabotage him, spoke of the blackout against him by communications media, declared the Jews had persuaded the National Council of Churches and other Christian groups to denounce his "crusade." In response to a question, he said, "I have never believed that Zionism spawned Communism and I think those people who say it are probably wrong."

He said the "enemy" was those people hostile to him, that the hostile people were Communists. For the Dallas News (Aug. 10, 1962) he listed his opposition: The Comunist Party, Nazis, Fascists, Episcopal Bishop James A. Pike and other San Francisco clergymen, the Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches in New York, the Anti-Defamation League, Senator William J. Fulbright of Arkansas and Senator Stephen M. Young of Ohio.

In St. Louis and Los Angeles, he became more circumspect, neglecting to link his Jewish "opposition" with the Communists, as in Texas, though he played upon the theme of persecution. He told his Los Angeles audience he had been able to buy television time only by "storming into the office of the Chairman of the FCC and demanding it."

In a fortnight of barnstorming, Schwarz raised $10,000 to support the enlightenment of New York. He returned to Meet The Press and to preside over the opening of the Greater New York School of Anti-Communism at Carnegie Hall.

Objective observers, accustomed to estimating crowds, place the attendance at no more than 400. The faculty comprised Roy Brewer, former head of the Nebraska State Federation of Labor, and Vice President of the Council Against Communist Aggression, Rev. James Colbert, Professor John Drakeford, Raymond Joseph, a Haitian national, student at the University of Chicago; Dr. Tirzo Del Junco, Eugene Lyons, Arthur G. McDowell, Frank S. Mayer, an editor of The National Review, Herbert Philbrick, John Fred Schafly, Jr., Dr. Joost Sluis and, twice daily, Dr. Fred C. Schwarz.

Victory Banquet Fund-Raising

The "Victory Banquet" on the final evening concentrated on fund raising rather than on celebration. Dr. Schwarz announced that the New York "school" had incurred a deficit of $75,000. He said his slanderers and detractors had worked hard for this failure. He said the free will offerings of the dinner guests would be their answer.

In three-minute speeches:

Dr. George Westcott appealed for more money for tape recorders.

Don Smith, editor of Our Africa, asked for help to meet his expenses in Johannesburg.

Raymond Joseph begged for dollars for Anti-Communist education in Haiti.

Dr. Tirzo Del Junco read a letter from the Cuban underground, pleading for cash and for proof that America was doing its share to combat Communism.

George Thomas asked additional money for the "Voice of Kerala" and for his efforts to unite Christians, Hindus and anti-Communist groups in a concerted effort to change the government of this Indian state.

Dr. Joost Sluis said the Communists in British Guiana really fear the work being done by the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade and that his agents there were in desperate need of money.

Dr. Schwarz asked for an outpouring of generosity. He received $10,000 in cash, $1,000 in stock, $1,200 in pledges, "two-thirds as good as Omaha," he complained. He was disappointed, he said, to see how easily New Yorkers could be hoodwinked by pro-Communists and hesitant about defending their country. He wished to return to New York, he said, because he wants to help New York. He would, however, be compelled to use the money raised in the South and West to help the East. He planned, he said, to crusade immediately in San Francisco and Cleveland.

From Long Beach, dated Sept. 6, 1962, came a Newsletter with these contents:

"As I leave New York, my mood is one of calm jubilation. I believe that the New York School of Anti-Communism was an unqualified success...

"New York was chosen as the site for an Anti-Communism School for a very specific reason. New York City has become the focal point of the counterattack upon the anti-Communist movement. The instruments being used to destroy the grassroots surge of anti-Communism sweeping the country were the national news media . . . We decided to meet this challenge and go to the source from which these false reports originated... The strategy has been very successful and will pay great dividends in the future."

The Newsletter recorded the enrollment at the "school" as "over 2,000" with "a hard core of 400 people who attended and absorbed the complete message of the 'school'." They now form a real bridgehead of informed and dedicated workers for freedom. They are already establishing a network of study groups and clamoring for a return school..."

Dr. Schwarz listed among the "significant acheivements" of the New York incursion, the fact that "the most inflential newspaper in the United States, The New York Times, repeatedly reported our activities with objectivity and honesty."

Columnist George Sokolsky wrote the epitaph of the New York adventure on September 13, 1962. He said: "Dr. Fred Schwarz who operates the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade found New York to be a cold, distant city . . . Altogether, Dr. Schwarz is reported to have said that the operation netted him a loss of $75,000.

"That is a lot of money to lose. Dr. Schwarz was apparently poorly advised. New York City is no place to hold such meetings in August. It is too hot, too humid, too sticky. Second, an anti-Communist school implies that folks need to be taught. New York City includes some 60 institutions of higher education, including Columbia, New York, Fordham, St. Johns, Yeshiva Universities, to mention only a few. These universities deal with Marxism, Socialism, Communism, etc. through scholarship and usually students of these subjects are familiar with German and Russian and even Chinese and are doing original research.

"However, the Australian doctor and his associates have since been explaining the failure as the result of a conspiracy against him . . . There was no conspiracy against Dr. Schwarz. Others have failed in New York. The Giants had to move to San Francisco and the Dodgers to Los Angeles. There was no conspiracy against them . . .

"In the five thousand years of Jewish history, the Jews have learned to fear the apostate. Many of the most outrageous libels against the Jews throughout their history originated with apostates. Dr. Fred Schwarz's father was a Jew who became a Christian and here is his son, who, when an operation of his fails, by innuendo blames it upon a conspiracy which, by the way it is said, may be called a Jewish conspiracy . . . But there was no conspiracy . . .

"...An attack was made on Arnold Forster of the Anti-Defamation League that he would not meet with Dr. Schwarz. That is a matter of taste. Dr. Schwarz has been in this country eight or nine years and many persons have not met him. In fact more persons have not met him than have met him."

Warnings Without Solutions

In sum, to use the words of Fletcher Knebel of Look's Washington Bureau, "Dr. Schwarz is like the man who warns that a forest fire is raging toward town from all points of the compass, but shrugs his shoulders when asked how to put it out. 'I don't believe in giving the Government advice," he says. As Dr. Schwarz hurries away to warn another city, local fire fighters move in with their remedies. The more frenzied demand that we burn down the income tax, fry Earl Warren, smoke out the Communists in Washington, uproot the State Department, and don't worry about Khrushchev's bombs—he is bluffing."

In the view of many responsible observers—of all political opinions and religious persuasions—Schwarz and his Christian Anti-Communism Crusade do not represent sound and effective anti-Communism. Schwarz's preachments—and those of his associates—mis-state the nature of the Communist menace and offer no program to combat that menace, which is real enough. Those who view Schwarz's anti-Communism as unsound have sensibly recommended that Americans look to their schools, their universities, their churches and synagogues, and to responsible community and civic groups for dependable information and guidance on how to fight Communism effectively.

Political Memo from COPE

COMMITTEE ON POLITICAL EDUCATION, AFL-CIO
815 16th STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON 6, D. C.

No. 26—62 December 17, 1962

(Because the pace of "right-to-work" campaigns is stepping up in tempo, this and the next edition of the Political Memo will be devoted exclusively to RTW, and the right-wing connections of many of the men behind it.)

The Men, The Money, The Menace . . .

COMMON GOALS UNITE RIGHT-WINGERS, RTW FORCES IN ANTI-UNION CRUSADE

"No person shall be refused employment or in any way discriminated against on account of membership or non-membership in any labor organization . . ."

This sounds like a verbatim quotation from a present-day state "right-to-work" law. But it isn't. Instead, it is 60 years old and it is the pregnant phrase that gave birth to all state "wreck" laws. It first came to light in 1903 in a Declaration of Principles of the National Association of Manufacturers when that organization launched the original "open shop" campaign.

Though it has appeared under different aliases—American Plan in the 1920s and now "right-to-work"—the character and intent of the original open shop drive has been changeless over its 60-year history.

Not to be outdone by its Siamese twin of reaction, the United States Chamber of Commerce in 1921 joined the NAM crusade when its president declared: "We stand for the principle of the open shop." Since then, the NAM and Chamber have been inseparable in their determination to "rescue" American working people from the iron dungeon of trade unionism by throwing them a key labeled "right to work."

OOPS, THE CAT GETS OUT OF THE BAG

"Yes, it would weaken unions at the collective bargaining table. That is one of the purposes of the right-to-work proposal."—Statement by Prof. Russell Decker, Bowling Green (Ohio) State U., during debate held in Findlay, Ohio, July 17, 1958. Prof. Decker appeared as a spokesman FOR the open shop law.

A NATURAL HAVEN FOR THE 'FAR-OUTERS'

Through the years, the open shop movement has been a magnet for the ultra-reactionaries of the American right wing. Indeed, without them it would be as dead as vaudeville, for it is the ultras who today carry the load for state RTW movements.

A professional right-winger Vance Muse was among the first to employ the phrase "right to work" as a full-blown slogan. Muse helped organize in the 1930s the infamous Christian American Association, an Anti-Negro, anti-Semitic outfit. In Florida (1944) and Arkansas (1947), the first two states to pass scab laws, Muse's hate-mongering CAA played an important role. Muse's activities often were helped substantially by DuPont money and finances from Alfred Sloan of General Motors.

In the thick of the Arkansas battle, too, was the Veterans Industrial Association, founded by strong-arm man James Karam. A strike-breaking organization for hire, it had the support and cooperation of a powerhouse of today's right wing, George S. Benson, president of Harding College, Searcy, Ark. Benson and his college are the fountainhead of rightist films, literature, strategy.

ENTER THE 'NATIONAL RIGHT TO WORK COMMITTEE'

Ten years after the war, 17 states had adopted RTW, and the time was ripe for formation of a national front group. Thus, in 1955, founding of the National Right to Work Committee was announced. Its character can be judged by the heralds who trumpeted it onto the scene. One was North Carolina industrialist E. S. Dillard, presently an endorser of the John Birch Society and of the Manion Forum. The other was ex-Rep. Fred Hartley Jr. whose name endures as the far end of the Taft-Hartley Act. Hartley himself once was listed as sponsor of a political action conference organized by the late Merwin K. Hart, a holy name in right-wing circles.

Hartley was president of the newly-formed NRTWC, later became chairman of its advisory board, and after 1958 appears to have severed formal ties with the group. Dillard was NRTWC's first chairman of the board, has remained as a director.

Another of the prime movers in the early days of NRTWC was William Harrison, a disgruntled railroad worker. He served as executive secretary from 1956 to 1961 and left to become executive vice president of a far-out right-wing crowd in Indiana, the Council for Individual Freedom. He has since moved on to another rightist outfit, the National Labor-Management Foundation.

Joining NRTWC in 1961 as vice president and director of information was Glenn A. Green who had put in 12 years as chief assistant to the previously mentioned George S. Benson. Under Benson, Green produced propaganda films widely circulated by the John Birch Society and other hallucinated groups. Green is an admitted member of JBS.

Among members of NRTWC's board of directors with close ties to the extreme right are: Rev. Howard E. Mather, Amenia, N. Y., a leader of the Christian Freedom Foundation; Rev. Frederick C. Fowler, Duluth, Minn., a speaker at meetings of Billy James Hargis' Christian Crusade and a director of Christian Freedom Foundation; industrialist Charles E. Daniel, Greenville, S. D., member of the rightist American Good Government Society; Eugene B. Germany, Dallas, Texas, president of Lone Star Steel, one of the big donors to right-wing activities.

Nearly a dozen former directors of NRTWC have long histories of association with way-out right-wing causes.

THE MONEY TREE AND SOME OF THOSE WHO WATER IT

Money is no problem for NRTWC. Since its function is essentially propagandistic, it does not—nor does it need to—deal in millions. The most recent years for which figures are available are 1959 and 1960, during which the committee collected and spent more than $800,000, the bulk of it on "educational" materials.

WHERE MONEY FLOWS LIKE WATER

Speaking of money, the Kansas right-to-work backers shelled out more in 1958 to get the law passed than was spent in all the Republican and Democratic state and congressional campaigns combined. (New York Times, November 9, 1958.)

It collects funds on a sliding scale dues basis. For individuals, $1 a year and up; $25-50 for small businesses; $50-100 for average size concerns; $100 and up for large companies.

The big money for RTW comes at the state level (see box). Some of the sources are eye-openers. In Ohio, for example, in 1958 the open-shoppers got a big boost from the extreme right-wing Committee for Constitutional Government. The one-time chief of CCG, Edward Rumely, was notorious for the inferior quality of his patriotism. He was convicted after World War I for his wartime activities as a German agent.

The Toledo branch of CCG, in a letter dated May 1, 1958, dunned Ohio businessmen for contributions of more than $500 a head to aid the union-busting RTW campaign. Among signers of the letter were big industrialist members of CCG, one of them the president of Champion Spark Plug Co.

The flood of RTW funds in the states, of course, comes from businesses, the state chambers of commerce and state NAM affiliates.

In 1958, when scab law promoters were rebuffed in several major industrial states—among them Ohio and California—many millions were poured into the anti-worker crusade.

TIES TO NAM AND CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Loneliness will never afflict NRTWC. It has established close and permanent family ties with the NAM and Chamber of Commerce.

The Chamber, in 1961, set up its own Special Committee on Voluntary Unionism, describing its policy "to spearhead and stimulate a drive for an end to compulsory unionism wherever and in whatever form it may exist."

Heading the committee is Chamber Treasurer Wofford B. Camp, former director of the California Farm Bureau and member of the rightist American Good Government Society. Some other committee members are: Alpheus H. Borden, Elizabeth, N. J., Manion Forum endorser; Howard F. Jensen, Dallas, Texas, VP of Lone Star Steel; John J. Jury, Wichita, Kansas, member of the John Birch Society; John Ben Shepperd, Odessa, Texas, Manion Forum endorser. One-fourth of the Chamber's committee members are directly connected with NRTWC.

In its brief life, the Chamber's special anti-union committee has published two books, demogogic collections of pro-RTW statements by educators and clergymen. Of those quoted, nine are connected with NRTWC, and more than a dozen—among them former Agriculture Secretary Ezra Benson—have open right-wing links.

Not to be outdone—indeed, in order to cooperate to the fullest—the Chamber's soul-mate, the NAM, has set up a special committee which embraces RTW in its jurisdiction, the Center for the Study of Union Power. It is an offshoot of an earlier NAM Study Group on Monopoly Power Exercised by Labor Unions, formed in 1956, coincidentally only a year after NRTWC was launched.

Members of the first "study group" included such scholars on labor matters as William J. Grede (former NAM president) and Robert Stoddard, now members of the John Birch Society executive committee; two endorsers of the Manion Forum and Lemuel C. Boulware, General Electric's biggest anti-union weapon.

Among the members of the new NAM "study group" are reactionary ex-Rep. Graham Barden (N. C.); the legislative assistant to right-wing Senator John Tower (Texas); a member of the national advisory board of Young Americans for Freedom; and Godfrey Schmidt, endorser of Manion Forum and luminary in other extremist groups.

Political Memo from COPE

COMMITTEE ON POLITICAL EDUCATION, AFL-CIO

No. 27-62 December 31, 1962

Part 2: The Men, The Money, The Menace . . .

SCRATCH A RIGHT-WINGER AND YOU COME UP WITH AN RTW SUPPORTER

A listing of the right-wing groups and organizations which support the open shop campaign would approach a complete run-down of ultra-conservative groups. Thus, what follows will be a relatively brief treatment of only those groups which have readily apparent, direct ties to the National Right to Work Committee and its affiliates (see Memo, Dec. 17, 1962).

From NRTWC's first chairman, Edwin Dillard, to its present vice president and director of information, Glenn Green, John Birch Society members have always been prominent in the open shop movement in general and the NRTWC in particular. This is most evident at the state level — which is, after all, where support counts — and the pattern in Kansas, where the law was approved in 1958, is typical.

A Washington Post reporter who studied operation of the John Birch Society in Wichita ("under open colors") wrote that "The leadership of the Birch Society overlaps heavily with the leadership of the organizations that successfully campaigned in 1958 for a right-to-work amendment to the State Constitution." Two of these leaders, Coleman Company attorney Leonard Banowetz and box manufacturer Robert Love, were principal speakers at NRTWC's National Seminar in Chicago in 1961.

TOGETHERNESS

That the open-shop crowd is closely integrated with right-wing extremists was proved conclusively last April. Representatives of the National Right to Work Committee were included at a convention of rightist groups, among them the John Birch Society, National Indignation Convention, Young Americans for Freedom, Liberty Lobby, For America, We the People, the American Coalition of Patriotic Societies.

In terms of the links with employer groups at the local level it is also significant that Banowetz, a JBS field coordinator, is chairman of the Kansas State Chamber of Commerce's Labor Relation's Committee and Love, a member of the JBS National Council, was for five years a director of the National Association of Manufacturers.

Others in the Wichita Birch Society who were active in the open shop fight in Kansas were Rock Island Oil and Refining Co. president Fred Koch, lawyers Kenneth Myers and Thomas Woods, and personnel executive John Jury who, as noted in the last issue of the Memo, is a member of the Chamber of Commerce's Special Committee on Voluntary Unionism.

Still another John Birch Society member who appeared on the platform at NRTWC's 1961 seminar was S. Rayburn Watkins, managing director of the NAM affiliate in Kentucky, Associated Industries of Kentucky. Similarly, for the principal speaker at its 1960 board meeting, NRTWC chose ex-Rep. Wint Smith (R.-Kan.), a 1961 endorser of the John Birch Society.

Other leaders of the John Birch Society who have also been active in state "right-to-work" movements include F. Gano Chance of Missouri (a JBS Council member), James L. Doenges of Indiana (a JBS endorser), and Louis Ruthenberg of Indiana (a JBS Council member).

There are undoubtedly other overlaps with the John Birch Society, especially at the level of state "right-to-work" campaigns, but the above cover known public identifications.

OTHER NRTWC ALLIES: A ROSTER OF REACTION

American Enterprise Association: Organized in 1943 by a group of "industrial leaders" as a "nonpartisan research organization which examines the implications of current and prospective legislative proposals." States as its goal "to preserve the American principles of competitive enterprise and constitutional government."

Labor relations and unions are consistently a subject of AEA attention with a study in the field published at a rate of about one each year. Since 1955 these have included: Three Taft-Hartley Issues by Theodore Iserman, a member of the NAM Center for the Study of Union Power; Involuntary Participation in Unions by Philip Bradley, a contributor to one of the Chamber of Commerce booklets on "right-to-work"; Legal Immunities of Labor Unions by Roscoe Pound, who was formerly affiliated with the right wing Committee of Endorsers and its successor group, the Citizens Foreign Relations Committee; Economic Analysis of Labor Union Power by Edward Chamberlin, which concludes that "union power should be restricted"; Labor Unions and the Concept of Public Service by Roscoe Pound; and Unionism Reappraised by Goetz Briefs.

NRTWC reprinted excerpts from the last in pamphlet form. In addition to Iserman, four of the six "professor" members of the NAM's new Center for the Study of Union Power—Gottfried Haberler, James McKie, William Peterson and David McCord Wright—have all written at least one study for the American Enterprise Association.

Christian Crusade: Rev. Billy James Hargis, leader of this organization, has expressed himself clearly on the open shop issue, "The question involved in 'Right to Work Laws' is very simple and basic. It is the question as to whether or not an American citizen has a right to work at a job upon which he and his employer agree without being forced to join a union and pay tribute to union bosses to whom he is morally opposed."

As noted previously, NRTWC board member Frederick C. Fowler has been a featured member of the Hargis "faculty" on at least two occasions this year. In addition, Hargis' National Advisory Committee includes F. Gano Chance, Fred Koch and former Rep. Wint Smith, all mentioned earlier in connection with NRTWC's ties to the John Birch Society.

Christian Freedom Foundation: Howard Kershner's organization, which publishes Christian Economics, counts two current NRTWC board members and one former board member among its directors. At least two more of Christian Freedom Foundation's directors are affiliated with state right-to-work organizations: Rev. Vernelle Dyer of Maine Citizens for Right to Work and Rev. William S. Wise of Pennsylvanians for the Right to Work.

Committee for Constitutional Government: A 1961 issue of CCG's Spotlight carried an article by Reed Larson, NRTWC executive VP, urging support of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act, which authorizes state scab laws. (See Political Memo Dec. 17, 1962.)

Kent and Phoebe Courtney: The Courtneys, who publish the extremist The Independent American and run the way-out Conservative Society of America, have featured NRTWC leadership at their national meeting in both 1959 (President William T. Harrison) and 1961 (Vice-President L. A. Hooser). At the 1959 meeting, Kent Courtney presided over a panel discussion made up of Harrison, J. C. Laney, Wells T. Lovett and Robert Love, all representing NRTWC. The tape recording of the discussion ran to two hours in length and was offered for sale by The Independent American for $14. David Molthrop, who has been extremely active in the open shop movement at the state level, has been a regular feature of Courtney meetings.

De Mille Foundation for Political Freedom: Operations of this organization in "support of state right-to-work campaigns" have been referred to by NRTWC's former President Harrison in his book. Cecil B. De Mille, late film producer, was an active RTW promoter.

Heritage Foundation: In addition to publishing The Case for Right-to-Work Laws, by former NRTWC board member Fr. Edward Keller, Heritage Foundation in Chicago has published three pamphlets by Birch Society endorser Fr. Ferdinand Falque, one titled "The True Purpose of Right-to-Work Laws." The Heritage Foundation is now located in Independence Hall of Chicago, the office building of Cook County Federal Savings, the president of which, Sidney L. DeLove, is author of The Quiet Betrayal, an attack on our schools as having "forced Americanism out of the classroom to make way for temporary trivialities" and having accepted "the pagan philosophy of an all-powerful State whose citizens . . . are mere chattels. . . ."

Human Events: NRTWC board member Fr. John E. Coogan is a frequent contributor to Human Events, including a full-page article in their recent special issue on "The Labor Monopoly." Another NRTWC staff member who has written for Human Events is former associate counsel Warren Richardson. NRTWC President Duke Cadwallader and Executive Vice-President Reed Larson were both "early registrants" for this year's Human Events Political Action Conference.

Labor Policy Association: Organized in 1957 to "make and to encourage researches and studies pertaining to government policies affecting labor and labor relations." Labor Policy Association is headed by William Ingles, who was previously associated with the Organization for the Repeal of Federal Income Taxes. The Labor Policy Association published (1958) Ingles' book, "The Right-to-Work Handbook," which cites various NRTWC publications with approval.

Manion Forum: While NRTWC and Manion Forum are to some extent "competitors" in the open shop movement—each seeking financial support to carry on the battle—they sometimes cooperate. NRTWC figures who have appeared on the Manion Forum broadcasts include Donald R. Richberg (1957), Rev. Edward Greenfield (1958), Edwin S. Dillard (1959) and Reed Larson (1962). Other "right-to-work" figures who have appeared include former Senator William F. Knowland, former Indiana Governor Harold W. Handley, Wisconsin manufacturer Herbert Kohler and Fr. Ferdinand Falque. As indicated earlier, two NRTWC directors—Edwin Dillard and Eugene Germany—are also endorsers of the Manion Forum.

National Labor-Management Foundation: Its founder, Maurice Franks, is a former director of NRTWC. In addition, eight other directors or former directors of NRTWC have been affiliated with the Franks organization, including former President William T. Harrison.

National Right-to-Work Federation: Organized in 1946 by a group which included Florida Attorney-General Tom Watson and Norman Zolezzi of Indianapolis, Ind., editor and publisher since 1927 of a monthly called Labor Digest. After Watson's death, national headquarters of the Federation was moved to Indianapolis and Labor Digest became its official publication. After Norman Zolezzi's death in February 1959, editorship of Labor Digest was taken over by the former associate editor, Allston Calhoun.

In addition to the monthly newspaper, a radio program titled "Americanism Preferred" features Mr. Calhoun and is evidently carried primarily in southern states. Despite the close similarity in names there is no readily apparent connection between NRTWC and the Federation. However, a recent issue of Labor Digest does carry two items—one on the survey by Opinion Research Corp. for NRTWC and one on the activities of Pennsylvanians for the Right to Work—which are taken verbatim from the NRTWC Newsletter (but without credit).

Young Americans for Freedom: In addition to former NRTWC board member Fr. Edward Keller, YAF, the Goldwater "student" group organized by William Buckley and Marvin Liebman, has on its national advisory board such "right-to-work" proponents as V. Raymond Edman, Herbert V. Kohler, Reginald Lang, and E. Merrill Root. It is also noteworthy that an article in YAF's magazine, New Guard, by its managing editor, Carol Bauman, utilized information provided by NRTWC.

THAT OLD GANG OF MINE

Defeated ultra-conservative Rep. John Rousselot (Calif.) found a job right away. From just plain representative, he's jumped to governor now . . . district governor, that is, for the John Birch Society in six western states.

Citizens Councils' Simmons Plays Much Discussed Role In Politics Of Mississippi

Boosters Feel He Is Best Hope Of Preserving 'Southern Way Of Life'—Detractors Are Ready With Criticism

By WILLIAM B. STREET
Staff Writer

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 12.—From his office window on the third floor of the Plaza Building, William J. Simmons has an excellent view of the Governor's mansion directly across the street.

This, says Mr. Simmons, has no significance. Others say differently.

The 46-year-old Jacksonian has managed in a relatively short time to blossom into one of Mississippi's most talked about figures.

As administrator of the Citizens Councils of America, his domain extends over 11 states where the private segregationist organizations has chapters.

As secretary of the Jackson Citizens Council, he is a powerful figure in the 6,000-member chapter to which Gov. Ross Barnett and several other state officials pay dues.

As editor of the Citizen, official journal of the Citizens' Councils of America, he selects articles for consumption of an undetermined number of council members over the South.

His boosters—and he has a loyal following—look on him as the man who is the best hope of preserving the "Southern way of life."

His detractors—and there are many—describe him as a powerful behind-the-scenes influence in Mississippi politics, and say the tag of "intergrationist" is applied to those who don't agree with him. He has even been referred to in print by another ardent segregationist as the "Rajah of Race."

Mr. Simmons, now observing his eighth anniversary as a Citizen Council man, says he doesn't believe these descriptions have a direct application to him. "I think they're referring to the issue," he says.

The issue is this case is integration versus segregation and Mr. Simmons' avowed aim is to "get the issue in the open for a clear cut public decision."

sonnel at council headquarters and "they didn't make the call."

He noted you can hear almost anything these days. "I even hear I'm supposed to have made a lot of phone calls at Ole Miss," he said.

The council leader was referring to the time he spent on the university campus in late September before admission of Negro James H. Meredith as a student. He said he was serving in no official capacity and that he was on the telephone no more than five or six times and one of these conversations was a 30-minute talk with a newspaperman.

He indicated he was aware agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation are asking questions about his activities in the Ole Miss case. The questions were being asked while agents took statements in preparation for Federal criminal contempt proceedings against Governor Barnett and Lt. Gov. Paul B. Johnson.

Mr. Simmons expressed the opinion the task of integrating Mississippi State University and the University of Southern Mississippi will be more difficult than at Ole Miss. He said he felt the administrations at State and Southern "will be firmer" and that Ole Miss, as a liberal arts school, probably has a larger share of students with liberal tendencies.

He did not make any prediction as to violence in connection with other integration attempts.

fluence with the Governor the way he has been pictured.

There was a strange happening during the last special session of the Legislature.

Mr. Simmons gets $2,000 a month in public funds from the Sovereignty Commission, official watchdog of segregation in the state, to help operate the Citizens Councils' radio and television forum. This is a reduction from the $5,000 he originally received.

Near the end of the December special session, called to deal chiefly with reapportionment, teacher pay and welfare raises, Senator George Yarbrough of Red Banks presented a bill calling for an additional $75,000 in biennial appropriations for the Sovereignty Commission.

Several days before the bill was introduced, Mr. Simmons spent some time at the Capitol and reports were that the added funds were to be used for purchase of a film on the Ole Miss riot with the film to be turned over to the Citizens Council for distribution. It was also said an effort would be made to use part of the funds to increase the monthly donation of tax funds to the council.

The bill was reported favorably by the Senate Finance Committee and called to the floor during the waning hours of the session.

attacks from Mr. Simmons and some other Council members.

The memory of Mr. Johnston's biting comments obviously still rankles the Citizens Council leader, although he once again declined to discuss personalities. "It was pretty personal," he says, referring to Mr. Johnston's editorial.

He did say, however, he considers Mr. Johnston a sincere segregationist.

Last May, Mr. Johnston made an address at Grenada in which he described himself as a "practical segregationist, who believes in recognition, co-operation and consideration of the colored race."

Mr. Simmons expressed the opinion that Mr. Johnston seemed ready to surrender.

Mr. Johnston was quick to reply:

"When a man can get branded as 'inviting integration' after making a talk urging racial harmony and deploring the threats, intimidations and violence in both races, it emphasizes the tragic fact that Mississippians can hardly make a move or say a word without approval of the Rajah of Race, William J. Simmons, who is Mr. Citizens Council."

The editorial hit at Mr. Simmons' influence on state legislation and quoted a legislator as saying a bill with integration implications was hard to consider on its merits.

"For instance," Mr. Johnston quoted the legislator," a resolution was introduced in the House to urge a boycott of Memphis stores because some of them have desegregated. I know it was ridiculous and would merely amuse North Mississippians who habitually shop in Memphis. The resolution came in the same week that four Negroes were fined in court for boycotting Clarksdale stores.

"Yet, the hot eyes of Bill Simmons were watching. If we had voted against the resolution he would have branded us. So there we were, approving a resolution urging a boycott while a Mississippi court was convicting Negroes for doing what we lawmakers were advocating."

The Simmons wing of the council sought to have Mr.

The issue, says a Simmons critic, is why it's hard for a politician to tangle in public with the council leader.

"The Citizens Council was established on a sound basis and for good reasons. Now, Simmons and his coterie have gained control and we're going to have to fight it but somewhere along the line. But, if I say anything against them in public, I'll be called a moderate, an integrationist, even a communist," said a Jackson businessman.

For several months a number of Citizens Council members as well as some segregationists who are not members—have been working to strip Mr. Simmons of some of the unofficial power they say he possesses. Part of their plan is to separate Governor Barnett from his influence.

Mr. Simmons said the other day he hasn't been very much aware of the efforts against him, although he's sure a lot of persons disagree with him. "We've got to try to keep moving in the same directions," he says with a decided stress on unification.

The public—even in Mississippi — is largely unaware of the struggle. Despite Mr. Simmons' position in the Citizens Council, he has been little known except among politicians and council members until the past few months. He does not seek the spotlight and there are probably a great many council members who wouldn't know him if they met him on the street.

He's tall — six feet three inches — and rather heavily built. His dark hair is beginning to thin, a well-trimmed mustache is a trademark. A smile comes readily to his lips, seldom to his eyes.

He was born in Utica, Miss., near Jackson, one of three children of a wealthy banker, now retired. He has a country home north of Jackson, close to Highway 51 where he lives with his attractive wife, a duaghter, 15, and a son, 9. His speech is measured, deliberate and carefully enunciated.

His suite of offices is well-decorated, but not pretentious. On a shelf at the entrance to the reception room are stacks of routine council literature and auto bumper stickers with the plea, "Help Ross Keep Mississippi Sovereign."

Mr. Simmons' opponents contend his group is trying to extend its influence from political fields into all other phases of Mississippi life, particularly the economic area.

A Jackson executive said last week someone in Mr. Simmons' office phoned a large Jackson industry recently and instructed the firm to fire all its Negro employes. He said the firm did not do so.

Mr. Simmons quickly denied any such call was made. He did say that he had heard a similar report from another source, but checked with per-

Did his statement imply criticism of Chancellor J. D. Williams and the Ole Miss administration? Mr. Simmons said he didn't want to discuss personalities, finally allowing he might not see eye-to-eye with the chancellor and that Dr. Williams "probably feels the same about me."

A poem published in the December issue of the Citizen takes a dig at Chancellor Williams and the 13-member Board of Trustees of Institutions of Higher Learning.

The 27-stanza poem — not composed by Mr. Simmons—is a takeoff on Christmas at the Kennedys and includes:

"At Oxford, the marshals were snug in their beds,
While visions of cherry bombs danced through their heads;
"And the Chancellor, with all of his faithful trustees,
Had received absolution from the AAUPs."

The AAUP is the American Association of University Professors, noted somewhat for its opposition to Mr. Simmons.

Another verse has President Kennedy saying to his "elegant spouse":

"Let's shackle Ole Ross
By the chimney with care,
In hopes that Nick (Katzenbach) soon will be there."

The reference is, of course, to Governor Barnett and the deputy United States attorney general who has been active in the Ole Miss case.

Articles in Mr. Simmons' journal in December deal mostly with Africa, including a Robert Ruark piece and another entitled, "Violence In The Congo Is Reminiscent Of Tragedy Of Reconstruction In The South."

A sampling of ads in the issue discloses literature and records which can be obtained—for a nominal fee—through council headquarters in Jackson.

These offers include a phonograph record by former Army Maj. Gen. Edwin Walker, speeches by Mr. Simmons and Richard Morphew, managing editor of the Citizen, and "On The Morning Of March 15," in which "photographic evidence of black savagery in Angola!" is promised. There is a warning it is not a book "for the squeamish!"

Among better known books offered are "Race and Reason—A Yankee View" by Carleton Putnam and "The Case of the Sleeping Peonle" by former United States Representative and Mrs. Dale Alford of Little Rock.

Mr. Simmons has been frequently described as Governor Barnett's chief adviser on racial matters, particularly in the early days of the Meredith case. Some of the Governor's friends complained privately Mr. Simmons had the chief executive "surrounded."

The council leader says these reports are in error, that he is not the man of high in-

Senator Flavous Lambert of Belmont raised the question that the appropriation had not been submitted by Governor Barnett. Only matters submitted by the Governor may be considered at special sessions.

Senator Yarbrough, the Governor's Senate floor leader, challenged the challenge, but then was advised there was no record showing the matter had been submitted by Governor Barnett.

As it developed, the Governor submitted the proposal to the House and Senate at Senator Yarbrough's request. Then, the Governor—without the floor leader's knowledge—pulled the submission messages back after they had lain on the clerk's desk during overnight adjournment of the Legislature. The reason has not yet been explained.

Senator Yarbrough had no choice but to set the bill aside.

The state money, says Mr. Simmons, doesn't go very far in defraying the cost of the council's radio and television forum.

There has been considerable criticism of the grant of state money to the private organization. Some feel that the Sovereignty Commission's own program, which generally features a constitutional government rather than a racial approach, is more effective outside the South.

And in the absence of public records, many have questioned just how many stations are using the Citizens Council forum. Mr. Simmons said about 400 radio stations and 25 or 30 television stations are now receiving the forum. He said a pretty close check is kept by the council on whether the programs are being used.

A survey by a Jackson newsman failed to show any programs being shown on television stations above the Mason-Dixon line.

The Sovereignty Commission's program is headed by Director Albert Jones and Erle Johnston Jr. of Forest, newspaperman and campaigner for Governor Barnett.

It was Mr. Johnston who pinned the "Rajah of Race" tag on Mr. Simmons last summer.

The mention came in an editorial in Mr. Johnston's newspaper, the Scott County Times, as he defended himself against Johnston fired. They couldn't pull it off and the commission wound up praising both Mr. Johnston and Mr. Simmons as dedicated segregationists.

Mr. Simmons says his interest in the racial question first developed during the late 1930s when he became aware of efforts to "socially integrate" this country. He particularly watched the activities of the late Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt.

He said he had seen effects of social integration in other countries during his travels and was disturbed at the idea of his country "turned into something like that."

After his graduation from Mississippi College at Clinton, Mr. Simmons traveled extensively. He worked for the British Royal Engineers in Trinidad until 1942, when he returned to Jackson and enlisted in the Naval Reserve. He was discharged later the same year for medical reasons. After World War II, he was in various businesses until the Citizens Council movement claimed his full attention.

No. 2-63 January 28, 1963

STATE LEGISLATORS' GROUP LAUNCHES ALL-OUT WAR ON U.S. SUPREME COURT

With little fanfare to alert the public, a major national organization of state legislators has declared war on the U.S. Supreme Court. It has launched a three-pronged campaign to:

1. Create a super court, or "Court of the Union," made up of chief justices of state supreme courts, with power to over-rule U.S. Supreme Court decisions involving states' rights;

2. Reverse the Supreme Court decision in the Tennessee reapportionment case by declaring federal courts have no authority to rule on arguments concerning apportionment of seats in a state legislature; and

3. Give state legislatures more power in amending the U.S. Constitution.

The campaign was formulated, and is being waged, by the potent General Assembly of States, comprised of legislators from the 50 states. The organization apparently is under ultra-conservative domination.

Already, senates in at least two states have approved one or more of the three resolutions. Goal of the General Assembly is to have them introduced in all 50 states.

Each of the three proposals is loaded with dynamite. The first would sabotage the authority of the Supreme Court in almost all controversial issues, notably school desegregation. The second would destroy whatever potential gains may result from the historic reapportionment decision of last spring, and would commit most state governments to eternal horse-and-buggy status by perpetuating rural domination.

The third would practically assure state control of constitutional amendments. Presently, amendments must be proposed either by a two-thirds vote of Congress or by a national convention called by Congress at request of two-thirds of the states. Amendments then must be approved for final adoption by three-fourths of the states either through state legislatures or state conventions. (Continued on Page 2)

The General Assembly of the States wants to change this to by-pass Congress or a national convention any time two-thirds of the states propose the same amendment.

This all sounds very technical, but in practice it could create havoc. One example of what could happen: several years ago two-thirds of the state legislatures approved a resolution to amend the U.S. Constitution by clamping a 25 percent limit on taxable income, obviously a windfall for the well-to-do.

Fortunately, they were rebuffed on a legal technicality. But that proposal, or something equally bizarre, could well become law before anyone knew what was happening if the present resolution to by-pass Congress or a national convention ever received approval.

The fact that some state legislatures already have swallowed part of the bait, that others probably will, and that most will at least consider the proposals indicates they can't be laughed off as too far-out to get anywhere. They're already getting somewhere.

Alert your state legislator to these resolutions and let him know how you feel about them.

MALICE IN BLUNDERLAND — THE RIGHT WING CONVENES

The Paul Reveres of the right wing, more than 500 of them from every corner of the country, rode their white chargers into Washington recently, rallying to a call to arms by Human Events, an ultra-conservative weekly newsletter. The occasion: a conference on political action.

AMA LINES UP WITH RIGHT WING

Right there with the rest of the ultra-conservative groups at the Human Events conference was the American Medical Association. AMA President Edward Annis addressed the meeting. His speech could have been interchangeable with speeches by almost any of the other right wing leaders who were there.

Annis went far afield from health care under social security, saying: "Medicare is not an isolated issue. Whatever form these welfare schemes assume, the aim is the same —complete centralization of authority in Washington . . . and the end of domestic government in this country."

He pledged "no compromise" in AMA opposition to the health care plan.

It was called a homecoming conference, but it might well have been titled: One If By Land, Two If By Sea — The Reds Are Coming.

The speeches, according to one who attended the meetings, ran from the fanciful to the fantastic. It was like Alice walking through the looking glass into Wonderland.

To a chorus of huzzahs from delegates, demagogues of the right peppered their favorite villains with verbal heavy artillery. They attacked "welfare staters," "labor bosses," COPE, the "no-win foreign policy crowd" and sundry other dangerous elements. "Big government" and "big labor" drew most of the fire. Curiously, they didn't mention "big business."

But behind the bluster and tub-thumping was some solid planning for future political action, with emphasis on trick-titled "right to work" drives. The long-standing alliance between the right wing and open shop crowds was further cemented.

Addressing the meeting were Glenn Green, director of information for the National Right to Work Committee (and a John Birch Society big-wig), and Reed Larson, NRTWC executive vice president.

Their position: union leaders are socialists and are parading the government down the road to socialism.

Their solution: scab laws in all 50 states, or a nationwide open shop law.

The heart of the conference was in panel discussions conducted by ultra-conservative Congressmen who won last November, some of them unexpected victors over good liberal candidates. Their successful tactics and campaigns were explained in detail. Delegates were urged to go back to the hinterlands and gird for the 1964 campaign along successfully tested lines.

Reflected in the panel meetings was the fact that the ultras are learning to use the political process, and it was in these meetings that Alice climbed back through the looking glass into a reality that could create serious problems for liberals in the years ahead.

NATIONAL OPEN SHOP LAW IN GOLDWATER BLUEPRINT

Sen. Barry Goldwater's blueprint for turning back the clock includes a fancy new twist on phony right to work laws.

His latest proposal: enact a national scab law and permit individual states to supersede it with laws allowing the union shop. This is a 180 degree turn-about on the present federal law under which the union shop is legal but which encourages states to pass harsher legislation in the form of so-called "right to work."

Maybe the Arizona Republican's next brainstorm will be to repeal the federal Bill of Rights, then let states pass them individually if they choose. States' rights, you know.

I CANNOT AGREE with those ardent well-wishers to Mr. James Meredith, and proper patriots who want the United States to prevail over insurrectionists, that Mr. Meredith's threatened withdrawal from the University of Mississippi would have been a severe setback to civil rights in the South, a waste of Mr. Meredith's heroism and a defeat for federal government.

It would have been a pity if Mr. Meredith couldn't make it, for himself, for other Negroes for whom he blazes the way and for many benighted white Mississippians to whom he is demonstrating Negro equality and, indeed, superiority.

But I doubt if there are any 10 of us, black or white, who could come up with a composite man or woman who could have endured the constant danger, the idiot hatred and the incessant humiliations of the Meredith ordeal this long. So, we could scarcely have summoned the impudence to complain that Mr. Meredith ought to stick it out, make C grades and affirm us all, from friendly professors and students at Oxford to the federal government and devotees in Ghana. We can rejoice, however, that this uncommonly honest and stalwart young man did choose to resume the fearful and outlandish trial of desegregating Ole Miss.

It seems a tremendous victory of federal law, personal manliness and emerging Deep South decency over the wildest southern insanity.

But I can by no means see that Mr. Meredith's departure would have meant that this international scandal and southern shame has raged in vain.

Foremost in his accomplishment is that his courage occasioned a federal victory in war with the State of Mississippi and sundry hoodlums, psychotics

Extremist Attitudes in The Black Muslim Movement

By C. Eric Lincoln

ON SUNDAY the third of June, a hundred and thirty white persons met their deaths in an airplane crash outside of Paris, France. All but ten of the victims were from Atlanta, Georgia.

When news of the tragedy was received in this country the typical American experienced some sense of loss and identification with the bereaved relatives and friends of those who perished. In Atlanta, as the news came in over the radio, church services were interrupted to offer special prayers for the repose of the dead and the comfort of their survivors.

No members of any of the families of any of the victims of the crash were worshipping in any Negro churches in Atlanta, for the churches in that city are segregated. But in the Negro churches, too, services were interrupted and prayers were said on behalf of the dead and bereaved.

In a Los Angeles church, the announcement of the plane crash was received as a beatific revelation of the avenging spirit of Allah. Minister Malcolm X, peripatetic internuncio of the Black Muslim Movement, interrupted his recitation of the white man's abuses against non-white Americans to share the good news with some 1,500 Negroes who had gathered to hear him:

> I would like to announce a very beautiful thing that has happened . . . . I got a wire from God today (laughter). Wait, all right, well somebody came and told me that he really had answered our prayers in France.
> He dropped an airplane out of the sky with over 120 white people on it because the Muslims believe in an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. But thanks to God, or Jehovah or Allah, we will continue to pray and we hope that every day another plane falls out of the sky.
> We call on our God — He gets rid of 120 of them at one whop.

Such attitudes of racial extremism have a long history in the Muslim Movement. They are part of the psychological paraphernalia which nurture and sustain the movement and which provide the peculiar attractiveness for the social dissidents who fall under the hypnotic spell of Black Islam in the midst of a white Christian culture.

As is true of most social movements the Black Muslims are not entirely dysfunctional. Some of their behavior contributes directly or indirectly to the improvement of the membership, and thus to the community at large. For example, the rehabilitation of narcotic addicts and alcoholics is certainly socially functional, as is the teaching of thrift, obedience to the law, and employment skills and techniques. The organization's commitment to high standards of personal and group morality commend it to its most severe critics. Yet, it is probably inevitable that a discourse addressed to the "extremist attitudes" of the movement cannot avoid some distortion. A more balanced account is offered in my book, The Black Muslims in America (Boston: Beacon Press, 1961).

To the Black Muslims, every white man is a devil—the personification of evil. The white man is the genesis of evil and its sole beneficiary. In Muslim mythology, Black Man—"the Original Man," was created by Allah, the one true God. The white man, however, is a "made thing," a beast, a synthetic man called into being by Yakub, the evil principle which is everywhere in opposition to peace, justice and equality. Sometimes Yakub is personalized as the Prince of Devils, the eternal adversary to Allah.

Since the white man is the son of the devil, the white man himself is a devil by nature and is incapable of doing good. Ultimately, the blue-eyed devils must be destroyed. Such is the will of Allah.

Malcolm X's jubilation over the deaths of the white Georgians is as honest as it is bizarre. The Black Muslims have never pretended to love the white man nor to wish him well. During World War II, the Muslims openly applauded American losses in the Pacific because: (1) There would be fewer whites to confront at the final Battle of Armageddon (to be fought "here in the wilderness of North America"); and (2) Japanese victories were proof that a white civilization can be defeated by a non-white power.

In the early days of World War II a number of black nationalist cults came under the influence of the Japanese Black Dragon Society—a fifth column organization which sought to exploit racial bitterness in the United States in the interest of the Japanese. The society was founded by Major Satakata Takahashi of the Japanese Imperial Intelligence in 1930, and was estimated by the F.B.I. to have a membership of 100,000 by 1942. Major units were in Chicago, St. Louis, Detroit and other cities in the mid-West.

One of the Negro cults most responsive to the Japanese racial propaganda was the Black Muslims, then known as the Temple of Islam. A Chicago newspaper reports that "Japanese organizers frequently told the hundred of followers of the Allah Temple of Islam . . . of which Elijah Muhammad was high priest: 'Be prepared for the day of reckoning with the pale faces. When the day comes Japan will supply you all with guns.'"

The F.B.I. conducted a series of raids on the Chicago South Side on September 22, 1942 and arrested 12 leaders and 80 members of three black nationalist cults including the Temple of Islam. The nationalists were charged with conspiring to promote the success of the enemy; making false statements to prospective draftees, and disrupting morale causing mutiny.

A month later the twelve leaders (including Elijah Muhammad) were named in an eight-count indictment charging sedition and seditious conspiracy. The indictments centered around the black nationalists' alleged teaching that the Japanese and the "black men" in America were brothers; that Negroes should not permit themselves to be drafted to fight a war in which they had no stake; that if drafted against their wills, Negroes should ask for duty in the Pacific arena where they could defect to the Japanese; that if sent to Europe they should "shoot everything white—in front and behind" to reduce the number of whites it would be necessary to kill later.

J. Albert Woll, U. S. District Attorney who argued the case for the government, charged that the defendants "made statements as vicious as any ever uncovered by a grand jury."

Elijah Muhammad was sentenced to three years in the federal prison at Milan, Michigan. In prison, he promptly organized a Muslim Temple among the Negro inmates, a practice since continued, and which has resulted in increasing perplexity for prison officials.

Perhaps the most bizarre extremism attributed to the Muslims came in Detroit in the 1930's, the formative years of the movement. This was the teaching that Allah required each Muslim brother to sacrifice four "Caucasian devils" as a condition of escape from the white man's oppression. It appears that the welfare workers in charge of the distribution of food during the depression years, were especially hated.

The accumulated resentments from having to stand in line for hours in order to receive handouts (frequently accompanied by insults) from the hated whites, focused the Muslims' hostility upon the welfare workers as symbolic of the white man's total amorality. Had the devils not stolen the Black Men from their homes and families, enslaved them, humiliated them with a pseudo-citizenship, and then finally reduced them to begging for the very bread they had worked without pay to produce?

The Detroit Times of November 22, 1932 reports the following incident:

> An Asiatic trend among the Negro dole recipients of the Elmwood district, noted at the time as a passing whim, today came back with horror to two women welfare workers on learning that the fanatical Robert Harris had intended them for human sacrifices as infidels. . . . Harris stated to the police that each of these was a "no good christian," and that they would have been sacrificed if he knew [sic] where he could have found them.

Human sacrifice was not restricted to the Caucasian devils. Every Muslim was required to swear under oath that he would sacrifice himself or any of his family in obedience to the will of Allah as interpreted by the "Messenger" or leader of the cult. In this tradition Minister Malcolm X admonishes his Muslim brothers who are seeking respect and dignity:

> Never be the aggressor;
> Never look for trouble.
> But if any man molests you,
> May Allah bless you!

Indeed, the fiery Malcolm X insists that "if anyone comes to take advantage of you . . . lay down your life!"

The theme of self-sacrifice and retributive violence is recurrent in the teaching of Elijah Muhammad. For example he chides the Negro male for his passivity toward the white man's pursuit of Negro women. "If we are too cowardly to protect her against the human beasts," he declares, "we should kill ourselves and our women."

He is also impatient with the white man's notion of justice: "We must take things into our own hands," the Muslim Messenger insists. "We must return to the Mosaic law of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. What does it matter if 10 million of us die? There will be seven million of us left."

The Black Muslim attitude toward the state, as presently constituted, is one of extreme negativity. In the first place, all Black Men are Asiatics, and Asia embraces all of the civilized world with the exception of Europe. Asia and Africa constitute a single continent. America is a part of "West Asia," as is illustrated by the fact that the native populations of North and South America were all non-white prior to the coming of the Europeans. Black Men from Africa founded civilizations in America long before the coming of Leif Erickson or Christopher Columbus.

The Muslims deny that they are citizens of the United States. Rather they insist that as Muslims they are citizens of Asia. The white man in America is an intruder. He slaughtered the Indians who are the rightful owners of the country, and set up a spurious democracy which included neither the Indians who were dispossessed of their land, nor the "so-called Negroes" whose labor made America "the richest nation on earth."

Since the Muslims are not citizens they do not vote or otherwise participate in the responsibilities of citizenship. They refuse to bear arms for a country in which they are not citizens "except at tax time and when the white man's enemies have got his back to the wall." To be born in America is not a guarantee of citizenship Malcolm X declares: "A cat can have kittens in an oven but that doesn't make them biscuits . . . You are either a citizen or you are not a citizen. No country has citizenship by degrees."

A citizen is described as "one who can do what any other citizen can do." Negroes are excluded by this definition for "they are the only people in the world whose so-called 'citizenship' is qualified by geography, custom, tradition, the time of day and 'local sentiment!' "

In 1961, Wallace Delancey Muhammah, one of Elijah's six sons and minister of his Philadelphia temple, was sentenced to three years in prison for draft evasion. In permitting his son to go to jail rather than to answer his draft call or accept alternative service in the Elgin State Hospital as a conscientious objector, Muhammad sought to dramatize his insistence that the Muslims not only will no longer fight the white man's battles, but they will not accept his alternatives. The American Negro has been trained like a faithful dog, says Malcolm X. "You tell him to bite the Germans, the Koreans. He will bite anyone you say bite . . . Now when he comes back from biting the Germans and the Japanese, you can hang his mother on a tree and have his wife before his eyes and he will stand there whimpering with his knees knocking and his tail between his legs . . . that's what he's been trained to do."

The Muslims want a national state of their own. Muhammad states flatly that "there can be no peace in the world until every man is in his own country." The white man's country, he says, is in Europe. Nevertheless, the Muslims are willing to divide the country with the white man, at least on a temporary basis. In a recent address in Chicago the Muslim leader demanded that a separate territory be set aside for American Negroes and that until this is done, Negroes should be exempted from any form of taxation. "We must have separation or death," he has declared again and again.

The Muslims leadership does not make clear how much territory is desired, or where it shall be. The area "west of the Mississippi and south of Denver" has frequently been mentioned. At least one Muslim minister has said that no less than twenty-five states will be enough.

The Black Muslims are bitterly anti-Christian, for Christianity is held to be the white man's most pernicious scheme for enslaving the non-white people of the world, while the white propagators of that religion relax in luxury and ease wherever they have found believing dupes. The Bible was originally a true and holy book, but "it has been tampered with" to serve the vicious interests of the white devils.

Christianity itself, is "a lie of the whole cloth, a 'spook' religion."

Muhammad describes this as "a perfect slave religion." It defers the so-called Negro's just aspirations for freedom, justice and a share of the wealth he has helped to produce, to some mythical heaven "over Jordan." Meanwhile, "the white man has made his heaven right here on earth." The Negro Christian minister is called the greatest enemy of his black brothers, for "he delivers his own people chained and bound to the tender mercies of the slavemaster—demanding that they love those who murder them wholesale."

The most prominent feature in the typical Muslim Temple is a large pulpit mural featuring the Muslim interpretation of the relative merits of Christianity and Islam. On the right-hand side of the mural are depicted the Star-and-Crescent of Islam with the legend "Peace, Justice, Equality—Islam!" On the sinister side are shown the American flag, the Christian cross and the swollen, mutilated body of a Negro hanging from a tree. Between these alleged symbols of Islam and Christianity, the question: "Which do you choose? Which will survive the War of Armageddon?"

The Muslims repudiate their "European slave names" (or surnames) and prefer to be known as "X"—James X, John 2X, Mary X, etc., the X in lieu of the family name which was lost when their fore-parents were enslaved and given "property titles" by the slavemaster. The X is also a symbol: it is a question mark, an unknown quantity directed to the attention of the white man. The time will come, says Muhammad, when "we will treat the white man the way he ought to be treated." As a farmer kills the worms and insects which spoil his crops, so much the Black Man be on the alert for the depredations of the Caucasian beast.

Bill Stout of Los Angeles CBS-TV quotes a Muslim leader as promising the whites "No torture—just annihilation . . . . We will not antagonize the while people. Some morning they will just wake up dead."

Traditional Negro leaders too have experienced a liberal measure of vituperation from the Muslims. Dr. Martin Luther King, referred to by the Muslims as "Martin Luther Queen," was ridiculed for "retreating from the portals of death in Alabama (for) the more lucrative haven of Atlanta," after setting the stage for a "bloody racial struggle soon to erupt in Alabama." Denounced as "the Darling of the South and Honey Boy of the North" King is challenged to "clear his conscience" by telling "the Negroes in America the truth—that they will never get . . . anything here on earth . . . until they are ready and willing to shed blood . . ."

To the Muslims, Ralph Bunche is known as "the George Washington of Israel." They condemn him for arranging the Arab-Israeli Armistice which "saved the Jews for annihilation."

Judge Thurgood Marshall is called the "Ugly American—the Negro man dedicated to serving his white masters." When he was with the NAACP, the Muslim press criticized Marshall for being "the American Negro who has made a career of being an Uncle Tom," and who "has consciously or unconsciously accepted Zionism as a philosophy."

The NAACP and the non-violent movements do not satisfy the Muslim concept of Justice. They want the past to be rectified, and the enslavement of their forefathers reimbursed in land and money. "We are not looking for crumbs," warns Malcolm X. "The black man in America is due not charity, but reparations," echoes the Muslim press. But Elijah Muhammad takes the final step:

"Today is the day of our separation from our slavemasters and NOTHING will stop it; for it is time," is Muhammad's warning to America. "Our hearts are glad and we weep with joy to know that it is OUR TIME to rule the world . . ."

In 1924, a faceless ragged fanatic with a Charlie Chaplin moustache sat in a prison cell in Landsberg, Germany and dictated a blueprint for the Third Reich. In Mein Kampf, Adolph Hitler told the world his ambitions for the restoration of the German empire, and how it would be accomplished. The world ignored Adolph—to its sorrow. Adolph Hitler did accomplish the establishment of the Third Reich. Further, it required the combined armies of the western world, and an incalculable quantity of human blood to disestablish Hitler's monument to racistic nationalism and his own awareness of a personal manifest destiny.

It is not necessary to argue the possibility of a black nationalist putsch in America, but it is fruitful to look at the facts. The world is in social revolution and the Negroes in America are part of that revolution. The student movement, Martin Luther King's movement, the new militancy in the churches (and paradoxically in art forms such as jazz), the mushrooming cults of black nationalism which keep springing up in the Black Ghettos of our great industrial cities, are all shades of protest in a revolutionary spectrum. In New York City alone, at least twenty organizations operate under the aegis of black nationalism. Most of them are small. Some of them are noisy. But all of them accept as viable the possibility that black solidarity can and will reverse the existing political order.

Black nationalism is, in part, the Negro's counter offensive against white nationalism. It is in part, the fruit of oppression—the hate that hate produced. It is the glorification of Negro specificity, the transvaluation of the hated symbols of rejection. Blackness becomes a virtue. Whiteness becomes a symbol of weakness and depravity, political and social decadence.

This mood ebony stems in part from the Negro's felt need to identify with the newly emerging Afro-Asian states —people who are going somewhere, whose destiny it is to surpass and supplant the civilization of the white man. Negroes are resentful that here in democratic America, where they are alleged to be citizens by right of birth and contribution, they are begrudged and frequently denied the dignity and benefits of citizenship. They resent the cruel game of having to go into court or take to the side-walks to prove again and again that their citizenship implies the most elemental human rights. They resent the white man's arrogant expectation that they should love him and be grateful for every belated, piddling concession to human dignity they can force from his iron fist. The feeling is widespread, though seldom articulated, that in spite of the fact that American Negroes more nearly approximate the white man's stated ideals, in greater numbers than any other "subject people" on earth, this class of Americans may yet be the last people on earth to become truly free.

Elijah Muhammad has been shrewd enough to capitalize upon the anxiety and frustration of the masses. A man of intense hatreds and an uncanny ability to uncover the latent and carefully sublimated hostilities of the black masses, he is convinced of his personal messiahship. Further, Muhammad is a man of the most extraordinary charisma. It is probable that no one in the recent history of America has been able to attract such an all-encompassing loyalty from his followers as has this self-styled "Messenger of Allah." Cults like those of Father Divine and Daddy Grace are sometimes suggested as sociological parallels of the Muslim Movement, but such suggestions are naive, and their inferences premature. The cultists are not required to lay down their lives for their leader or his teachings. Theirs is an escapist philosophy—a withdrawal from a world they find hostile and unrewarding to make-believe world of peace and joy.

The Muslims plan to live in the world, reform the black race, survive the Armageddon and establish a black theocracy. Elijah Muhammad's mission is to "cut and clear." He has come to tell the Black Man the truth about himself, his history and Allah's plans for his future. He has come to expose the white man as a charlatan and a devil, and to proclaim the "New Order."

> The root cause of today's confusion is that the time of the end of our enemies' (the devils') power to rule and deceive our Nation has arrived . . . . NOW that ruling power is being interfered with by a Superior Power and Force, which will create a "New World," a New People, a New Order and a New Government.

In the process of bringing about the New Order, retribution must be demanded from the white man. Muhammad charges that "The white race . . . will never agree to divide America with us, though our blood is spilled on this soil . . . ." Hence the Black man is enjoined to "put your brains to thinking for self; . . . your hands to working for self and your children; and fight like 'hell' with those who fight like 'hell' against you." He reminds his followers that "The white race is known to God and his prophets as Satan, the devil, the great enemy of Good, God and his people . . . . We now number seventeen million here in America . . . . The wicked must be punished for their wickedness poured out upon us . . . ."

It is clear that the social policies of the Muslims are directed toward a racial contest between black men and white men. The overtones may be religious, for all is being done in the name of Allah—but the goals are patently social. Again and again Muhammad has stirred his followers to frenzy with the cry "We must have some of this good earth! We must have land of our own!"

As the Muslim Movement has consolidated its strength in the Black Ghettos, the Muslims have become increasingly restive. In the past year the Muslims have figured in incidents of violence in a dozen cities across the country: New York; Monroe, Louisiana; Atlanta; Saint Louis; Folsom, California; Washington, D. C.; Los Angeles and other places. Recent incidents seem to become increasingly serious.

On March 5th, of 1935, two hundred Muslims rioted in a Chicago courtroom, and one policeman was killed and eleven others injured. Two Muslims were shot and forty were sent to prison. The struggle with constituted authority has continued in the streets, and especially in the prisons, ever since.

On April 27th of 1962, a riot involving seventy-five policemen and several score Black Muslims left one Muslim shot to death, and seven others injured by gunfire. Three policemen were hurt, one of whom was shot with his own gun. Since then the Black Muslims have been involved in a riot in the Lorton Reformatory outside of Washington, D. C.

The Muslims themselves are not always to blame, but their public image alone is often the precipitating spark which incites conflict. Their existence is a challenge to the existing order, and an indictment of its inadequacies.

The Muslim Movement is a part of the sound and fury of social unrest. It has all of the symptoms of neurotic social anxiety. It is a reaction to a perceived threat—a threat of political and social meaninglessness; but it is an extreme and bizarre reaction, a reaction which is disproportionate to any obective danger.

If we look carefully, we can see in the Black Muslim Movement a microcasm of social behavior which has often characterized other segments of our culture. In the Muslim's intolerance, and in the pre-emptive place he has reserved for himself in the New Order, we catch a vision of the Existing Order. In seeing the Muslims for what they want to be, we see ourselves for what we ourselves have sometimes been. In the words of Voltaire:

> People will continue to commit atrocities as long as they believe in absurdities.

We can best understand and cope with the Black Muslims Movement and its social implications, when the larger society has abandoned the absurdities the Black Muslims have so recently adopted.

and race-savers who rallied from far and wide. I could believe with many despairing friends of civil rights that Meredith's leaving would encourage Mississippi to fight the Union again, or discourage the United States from protecting another Negro who enrolls at this excruciating university.

Rather, the President and Attorney-General undoubtedly have picked up an enlightening lesson about the futility of negotiating with and trusting a segregationist demagogue who is running what we call a "hard core Deep South state," a lesson which should have been amply clear from President Eisenhower's dismaying difficulty with the demagogue, Governor Faubus, at Little Rock. So, surely the two Kennedys would be astute enough to send a new Negro hero in with sufficient troops, the first time he approached those magnolia-shaded halls, to enforce federal law and suppress insurrection—unless, that is, they are vastly more slow-witted than I take them to be. So, Mr. Meredith's trial has provided our well-meaning young Yankee leaders with interesting and, we hope, indelible, insights into the behavior of fanatic white supremacists in Dixie.

Even if Meredith had left Oxford, civil rights in the South are advanced by his sojourn there much further than they would have been set back by his retreat, or temporary surrender. Hundreds of Mississippi students have witnessed his valor and composure, and many of them must have been moved and changed by the spectacle. Respectable, if silently irresponsible, Mississippians have been stirred at last to speak for "law and order," business peace and progress and the good name of good people in that distressed state. These moderate voices sound the rise of a new, if timid, tide, and support the lonely and spirited bravery of a handful of sane and liberty-loving Mississippians, like Attorney Williams Higgs, Rabbi Charles Mantinband, P. D. East, Hazel Brannon Smith and others.

New Law Against Tokenism

By Tom Dent

TOKENISM IN SOUTHERN school desegregation, doomed by five 1962 court decisions and attacked in recent federal rulings in Tennessee and North Carolina, can be done to death in most Deep South states in the next few years.

The five-year frustration of placements, assignments, tests and other "plans" to admit a token few Negroes to white schools and exclude all others, is pronounced discriminatory and "burdensome," "an exercise in futility," and "segregation in its rawest form" in federal rulings which legally open white school doors to Negro students. And the United States Supreme Court next spring will consider Tennessee's Davidson County and Knoxville "racial option" transfers which the NAACP contends work to restore former segregation in those systems.

The decisions certainly are no guarantee of real and rapid school integration in all Deep South states, where new "pupil placement," "free choice" and other procedures to admit a token few Negroes must be combatted in toilsome and time-consuming court action, one by one. Such cases also depend on Negro parents and children willing to endure the trial and tedium of suits and the ordeal of lonely and often persecuted token attendance at white schools.

But the law is here, the breakthrough has come, to overthrow the dodges and deceits of tokenism, where Negroes will take up the burden of invoking it, and where courts compel good faith in desegregation in cities of the South.

In the last year, six federal Court of Appeals decisions have increasingly encouraged all who want to see the South get on with the business of integrated and equal education.

It is well known that local school boards have adopted policies of desegregating at the slowest pace the courts would accept. Only in "fringe" states like Maryland and West Virginia and in the District of Columbia have school boards taken the initiative since 1955 in desegregating without being hauled into court. In other areas where there has been even token desegregation, it has come through about 60 suits filed by the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund, subsequently drawn out and almost incomprehensibly complex litigation, and the all too frequent bad faith of local school boards in carrying out court decisions.

The first of the important decisions was made by the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit in its March 23 ruling involving the Memphis, Tenn., school system. When the case was argued in 1961 the Memphis board operated dual school zone lines—separate zones for Negroes and white schools. The Board plan approved by the District Court in Memphis in 1960 allowed Negro students to apply for transfers if they were dissatisfied with their intitial assignments. The terms on which transfer applications of Negro children were judged included residence and aptitude. Under this system, 13 Negro children were admitted to all white schools in 1961. Those who were denied admittance took their case to the Court of Appeals.

The Appeals Court's three judges first noted that by first assigning Negroes and whites to separate schools, Memphis was operating a system not essentially different from the pre-1954 segregated schools. It found equally reprehensible the Memphis transfer procedure requirements that Negro students pass certain tests and run the gauntlet of academic, residential and often other vaguely defined criteria not applied to white students who sought transfers where racial mixing was not a factor. The Appeals Court maintained that the Brown decision of 1954 required some positive action by school boards to set up a "non-racial" system. The Appeals Court rejected the Tennessee Pupil Assignment law as an adequate remedy in a discriminatory assignment system, and remanded the case to the District Court with instructions for Memphis to produce a plan which would be non-racial in all its aspects.

The Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, in a May 22nd decision, examined closely procedures of the Roanoke, Va., school board. The court noted that legal authority for controlling transfers rested with the state Pupil Placement Board in Richmond. In reality, however, city school officials made initial assignments, and these assignments were rarely considered by the State Board. The court also discovered that Roanoke is divided into six school sections, and all Negroes, regardless of where they live, are assigned to Section 2. White children are assigned to districts according to their neighborhood.

When the first 39 Negro students applied for transfers from District 2 in 1960, the applications went to the State Board which replied to local officials with the following revealing questions, as reported by the local superintendent.

> Are there Negro pupils who cannot be excluded from attending white schools except for race? That is number one. Number two: Would the superintendent and School Board so certify the Pupil Placement Board? Number three: And in our judgment, what would happen in the local communities if some Negro pupils were assigned to white schools? Those were the three questions.

Nine Negro students were granted transfers in 1960. The other 30 were denied for a variety of reasons, all amounting to (in the words of city officials before the Court of Appeals) "ruling out those Negro students who would be failures." Those denied were rejected because they lived closed to the nearest Negro school, or because after special testing their aptitude showed below or above the median at the white schools they wished to attend, or because they had brothers or sisters whose aptitude was below the median of comparable white classes.

Chief Judge Sobeloff in his opinion for the unanimous court, categorically rejected such discriminatory transfer criteria. He observed that:

> The Negro child, if he desires a desegregated education must run the gauntlet of numerous transfer criteria in order to extricate himself, if he can, from the Section Two Schools.

The court also ruled unconstitutional Roanoke's initial racial assignment system, and characterized the Board's approach toward Negro transfers as preoccupied with finding "some excuse for denying the Negroes' applications for transfer."

The Fourth Circuit's ruling on June 12 in the Roanoke County school case was similar, but for minor details. In Roanoke County all Negroes go to separate schools. The two requirements for transfer are that the applying Negro child must live nearer a white school and that he must be above the white class aptitude median.

All seven Negro children who applied for transfers in 1960 were denied because of "overcrowding" in the white schools, even though later testimony showed that 12 white students were admitted in September of 1960 to the "overcrowded" school.

> In view of the initial assignment system, the administrative procedures for transfer are, for the most part, applied to Negroes seeking a desegregated education and not to whites similarly situated. To insist, as prerequisite to granting relief against discriminatory practices, that the plaintiffs first pass through the very procedures that are discriminatory would be to require an exercise in futility.

In New Orleans, on April 9, Judge J. Skelley Wright had reached strikingly similar conclusions:

(1) New Orleans maintained "Negro" and "white" schools.

(2) New Orleans maintained racial school zones.

(3) New Orleans maintained under the state pupil placement law certain standards by which Negro students applying for transfers must be measured, such as scholastic aptitude, personal acceptability, and the probable reaction of white pupils and the community to the proposed transfer.

If the child, after these factors, could qualify and was actually transferred to an all white school, state law required separation of sexes in the class to which he was assigned.

Under this system four out of 134 Negroes received transfer in 1960, and eight out of 66 in 1961. Of this transfer procedure Judge Wright observed:

> The Board makes no explanation for its failure to test all children seeking to enter the first grade, or any other grade, in an effort to determine whether or not they were intellectually and psychologically acceptable in the segregated schools to which they were automatically assigned. This failure to test all pupils is the constitutional vice in the Board's testing program.

Judge Wright said that the pupil placement law was acceptable on its face, but when applied in a racially discriminatory manner to Negro pupils asking transfer from an initially segregated school system it becomes "segregation in its rawest form." Judge Wright ordered desegregation of the first six grades by September, 1962, that transfers for these grades be allowed on a non-racial basis, and the abolishment of dual racial zones.

Judge Wright left the New Orleans District Court in April to go to the Court of Appeals in Washington, and was replaced by Judge Frank B. Ellis.

Judge Ellis granted a school board motion for a new trial, and later modified Judge Wright's decision, to include mandatory desegregation of only the first grade in September, 1962. Judge Ellis did agree with Judge Wright's findings on the discriminatory character of initial assignments in New Orleans, and he continued the invalidation of the Louisiana Pupil Placement Law when applied in a discriminatory fashion.

NAACP attorneys, and the School Board, appealed the Ellis opinion to the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. This court ordered in 1962 desegregation of the first three grades and provided for abolition of dual racial zones in subsequent years.

But, again, Judge John Minor Wisdom, who wrote the Fifth Circuit decision, pronounced the same opinion about discriminating transfer procedures in New Orleans as the Sixth Circuit had decided about Memphis and the Fourth Circuit about Roanoke:

> When, purportedly as a vehicle for desegregating, the Board applied the [Pupil Placement] Act to first graders only after they had already been assigned to segregated schools in a dual school system, the Board used the Act discriminatorily . . .
> This court, like the district court, condemns the Pupil Placement Act, when, with a fanfare of trumpets, it is hailed as the instrument for carrying out a desegregation plan while all the time the entire public knows that in part it is being used to maintain segregation by allowing a little token desegregation.

Last October 12 the U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals enjoined the Durham, N. C. School Board from "refusing admission to any school of any pupil because of his race," and said transfers must not subject pupils to "futile, burdensome or discriminatory procedures." The court also ordered the school board to quit "applying the North Carolina Pupil Assignment Law in an unconstitutional manner."

This case — Wheeler and others vs. the Durham City Board of Education, filed in 1959, and Spaulding and others vs. the same board, filed in 1960 — came before Judge Edwin M. Stanley of the North Carolina Middle District Court in July of 1961, and Judge Stanley sent back to the school board 133 Negro pupils who had been refused transfers. The board then assigned eight of them to white schools. Judge Stanley denied further relief to the others and the NAACP appealed to the Fourth Circuit court, which enjoined the board from this racial discrimination.

The Durham board has taken no action on the Appeals court decision.

Meanwhile four Negroes at Reidsville, N. C., sued the school board on behalf of four children, citing the Fourth Circuit's October ruling on administering the Pupil Assignment Act unconstitutionally. One Negro girl did not seek reassignment; her suit claims Reidsville procedures made it "useless and futile."

On October 8 the Supreme Court agreed to review pupil transfers in Davidson County and Knoxville, Tenn., an action momentous for desegregation because it is the first case involving the "deliberate speed" doctrine to come before the Supreme Court since the Brown case of 1955.

Here, the high court will rule on the NAACP contention that the Tennessee "racial option transfer" actually operates to re-segregate desegregated schools. "Racial option" in Davidson and Knoxville permits a child of a minority race in a school or class where the other race predominates to move to a school where his race is in the majority.

This case, appealed from the Sixth Circuit Court, which upheld the Davidson plan of "racial option transfer," brings up the question whether the procedure expressly recognizes race as a grounds for transfer, and whether it restricts Negroes living in Negro neighborhoods to all-Negro schools, while permitting white children to transfer because of race.

We can see in these important recent cases that the Fourth, Fifth and Sixth circuits, which blanket almost the entire South, reject discriminating remedies and transfer procedures of southern school "plans." And it is precisely this type of catch-all device, under the guise of a "desegregation plan," which enables local boards to impede and prevent desegregation by permitting a few transfers of Negro children.

The courts are ruling out school board administrative schemes which slow desegregation to a standstill, and are judging school board devices by the spirit of the law enunciated in the Brown decisions of 1954 and 1955.

Judge Wisdom, in his New Orleans decision of August 6, made plain the path which school boards must sooner or later follow:

> The key to the problem is the elimination of dual or bi-racial school zones. The limiting principle is clear: the [Pupil Placement] Act may not be used discriminatorily. The touchstone is good faith.

Of course, real progress in school desegregation depends on increased initiative of Negro parents willing to undergo the trials of test cases invoking the rights set forth in these recent rulings. A legal right means nothing if that right is not exercised by people, and realized through effective, if sacrificial, social action.

But Judge Wisdom put his finger on the more important barrier, the bad faith and outright lying of so many school boards about their discriminatory practices, when he said "the touchstone (of real progress) is good faith."

So, Mr. Meredith's patriotic adventure and the state's disaster obviously have wrought considerable change in this slave-minded state.

Perhaps the most impressive achievement of the Meredith stay at Oxford is the spectacle of the man himself, inviolate in his convictions of public right and wrong and in his conception of his personal privilege and opinions.

Surely no hero of southern civil rights has ever behaved with such offbeat fidelity to himself, his ideas and his rights. Without benefit of any of the familiar cliches and noble stances with which most Negroes properly support themselves in the dangers, pains and frustrations of the Movement, Mr. Meredith repeatedly surprises and confuses his admirers by assuming the attitudes of an individual absolutely entitled to his own judgments, feelings and actions.

To begin with, he dispensed with the popular fiction of most desegregators of white schools that they are simply seeking an education. Mr. Meredith firmly declared that he prepared for eight years to desegregate the University of Mississippi and begin the long labor of making his native heath a fit place to live in. When Army troops on the campus were, as he put it, "re-segregated" to protect Negro soldiers removed from open patrol to garbage-tipping in deference to local sentiment, he issued an outraged statement protesting this demeaning of colored soldiers. He was quite unmoved apparently by complaints that he was "ungrateful" for protection of federal troops which were in Mississippi to uphold federal law.

For reasons not clear to me, he has since protested the 300 soldiers and additional marshals still stationed with him on the campus, maintaining this policing is a state job, which is quite true; but it is a job that the state is unlikely to undertake, as the Kennedys have learned, leaving Mr. Meredith at the mercy of a number of nearby Mississippians who have threatened him with murder. When rifle shots were fired into his parents' home at Kosciusko, he demanded protection of the Justice Department, which declined to usurp this local obligation; so Mr. Meredith complained, quite naturally, that his 71-year-old father, having lived an exemplary life and reared 10 children, was entitled to peaceful sleep at night.

Meredith also disputed with the NAACP, which sued him into the university, to the effect that he was on his own in his desegregation project. Most recently he has made the point that his grades are not important, that the importance lies in his presence at the university. He has also proclaimed his right as a student to succeed or fail, his demand to be treated personally and publicly like any other American and his faith that all Mississippi Negroes will some day be accorded such equal consideration—thus for a time flouting the hopes of maybe millions of friends who expected him not only to desegregate Ole Miss, but to stay there and affirm people of good will and show segregationists that a Negro can prevail, even academically, over riots, hatred, peril, notoriety and ostracism.

I don't fathom all of Mr. Meredith's notions, whims and judgments. But I am awed at his implacable resolve to be the man he is, against all pressures of friends, foes and comrades. He demands perhaps the rarest recognition a famous Negro ever receives, the acceptance of himself as he is.

WASHINGTON 6, D. C.

No. 3—63 February 11, 1963

JOHN BIRCH SOCIETY BURROWS INTO POLITICS . . .

Like a mole, the extremist John Birch Society is burrowing deep into the political soil. According to the president of California's Young Republicans, JBS is "engaged in a large-scale organizing and infiltration effort" to take over the group. His statement coincides with appointment of right-wing ex-Rep. John Rousselot as western states director for JBS.

The Young Republican leader charged the Birch Society has told its members "to join Young Republican clubs and county organizations just before their elections to pack election meetings and gain control of these groups."

. . . AND AN EXPERT WARNS ITS POWER IS GROWING

John Birch Society strength and influence are growing, and in future elections it will exert "real political muscle," according to one expert. Lawrence Peirez of the Anti-Defamation League contends that JBS impact on the 1962 elections "was far out of proportion" to the group's numerical strength.

In a detailed report, Peirez made these points:

Birch Society fuehrer Robert Welch apparently is "seeking to unify all radical right forces under his banner."

JBS is quietly organizing for more political activity.

Membership of the society has doubled since 1961. Areas of its most spectacular growth are the Washington, D. C., area; Long Island, N. Y.; Arizona, Idaho, Washington, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana.

The society now has chapters in all states except Alaska and Hawaii, has members in all 50. Members are being recruited by 38 paid full-time organizers and 70 part-timers. Nearly 50 JBS public "reading rooms," stuffed with extremist literature, are now in operation in major cities.

Peirez reported that towns throughout the nation "have been split down the middle" by Birch Society campaigns of smear and slander against school and church groups, the Supreme Court and against merchants selling goods imported from Iron Curtain countries.

(Following is part of a series of descriptions of major legislation pending before the 88th Congress, prepared by the AFL-CIO Department of Legislation. Fact sheets on the measures discussed can be obtained by writing to: AFL-CIO Department of Legislation, 815 16th St., N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

YOUTH EMPLOYMENT—SOLUTION NEEDED FOR A NAGGING PROBLEM

In order to open up new job opportunities for America's young people, Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D.-Minn.), Rep. John Blatnik (D.-Minn.), Rep. Carl Perkins (D.-Ky.), and many other members of Congress have sponsored legislation to set up a Youth Conservation Corps and to encourage programs of local area community service employment for young people. The Humphrey bill, S. 1, and the Perkins bill, H.R. 1890, have Kennedy Administration approval and support.

More youth employment opportunities are urgently needed because:

- 700,000 young people aged 16 through 21 were not in school and were not employed in December, 1962.
- Unemployment rates in the 16-21 age group are about three times as high as unemployment in the adult population.
- 18 out of every 100 high school graduates in June, 1961 who did not go on to college still were unemployed in October, 1961.
- 28 out of every 100 school dropouts were unemployed in October, 1961.
- 26 million young people will enter the labor market during the 1960's — about 2½ million new young jobseekers every year.
- To employ these young people, the American economy must create 25,000 new jobs every week for the next 10 years.

The purpose of the proposed legislation is twofold — (1) to provide jobs, job training, and work experience for youngsters who are otherwise unemployed, and (2) to stimulate development and conservation of America's outdoor natural resources as well as development of local community service activities.

AMPAC LOADING FOR BEAR IN 1964

The American Medical Political Action Committee, satisfied with its efforts in 1962 election campaigns, is loading up for bear in 1964. An AMPAC newsletter boasts the organization pitted itself against COPE-supported candidates in 30 Congressional Districts and won in 25 of them.

It's readying for the 1964 campaign now by offering basic political education courses to physicians, their wives and friends. The courses will be given by pros who will travel anywhere an audience can be gathered.

AMPAC, thus, is in business and means business. It is mobilizing physicians throughout the country for 1964.

How about you? Are you preparing for 1964?

The Youth Conservation Corps (YCC) and the community service program should not be confused with proposals for a "domestic peace corps" or "national service corps" which would recruit more highly trained volunteer workers.

The Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee, reporting on the YCC bill in the 87th Congress, stated clearly that work performed by YCC members should not take jobs away from adult workers. The AFL-CIO insists on protection of existing jobs held by adult workers.

The Humphrey-Perkins legislation — identical bills in the Senate and in the House of Representatives — is divided into two sections. One sets up a Youth Conservation Corps; the other, a program of local area and community public service activities. Both programs are for unemployed youngsters between 16 and 22 years of age.

1. The YCC, like the Civilian Conservation Corps of the 1930's, would enroll young men for outdoor conservation work in both national and state parks and forests, wildlife refuges, soil and water conservation projects. Minimum enrollment is six months; maximum, two years. Compensation would be $60 a month, plus board, lodging, and clothing. State employment services would select enrollees, with half to come from areas of substantial labor surplus.

2. Appropriations would depend on the size of the program Congress authorizes. Maximum enrollment is 15,000 the first year and 60,000 thereafter. Cost of the program is expected to average about $4,000 a year per YCC member. One-third of the YCC would be reserved for work on state forests and parks on a 50-50 cost-matching basis.

Following is the program proposed for local area youth employment in community service:

1. To stimulate state and local community service activities by public and non-profit agencies and thus to increase job opportunities and employability of young men and women, the Secretary of Labor is authorized to make 50-50 matching grants to these agencies. The program is designed to encourage local initiative in preparing and submitting plans for approval by the Secretary of Labor.

2. Community service jobs approved under this program must increase employability of those enrolled, must contribute extra public service, must not displace regular workers, and must provide wages and working conditions "appropriate and reasonably consistent with the rates and conditions applicable with respect to comparable work in the locality."

3. No specific appropriation is requested, but the number of enrollees is limited to 50,000 the first year and to such number as Congress may determine the following two years. Community service authorized under this program might include employment in schools, hospitals, welfare agencies, playgrounds, and migrant farm workers' camps.

Write to your Senators and your Congressman urging them to support and to vote for enactment of the Humphrey-Perkins youth employment bills, S. 1 and H. R. 1890.

ANTI-UNION MESSAGE ECHOS THROUGH THE CIGAR SMOKE

About a thousand businessmen and a lot of cigar smoke were collected together in a big hotel ballroom in Washington recently by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce for a two-day legislative and political conference. You can probably guess the major topic of discussion: "union power."

Speech-makers were Sen. Barry Goldwater and Sen. John McClellan, whose views on "union power" were already fairly well-known before they addressed the delegates. While paying tribute to "good, honest unions," both men managed to leave the impression the nation is at the mercy of "bad, dishonest unions."

The Chamber of Commerce gentlemen shared this sentiment and warmly applauded their Senate friends.

The Chamber itself, ever keen for opportunity, had set up a long table blossoming with literature for delegates to take home and digest. Some of the leaflet titles: "The Davis-Bacon Act: Shotgun Law;" "The Walsh-Healey Act: Horse and Buggy Law;" "The Anti-Trust Approach to Union Monopoly;" "Why Employers Should Work for the Right to Work."

Funny thing about all that literature: someone forgot to put the union bug on it.

URGE STATE LEGISLATURES TO BURY THE POLL TAX

The opportunity is here this year to bury, once and for all, the poll tax. Still effective in five states, the tax forces payment by a citizen for the right to vote.

Congress passed an anti-poll tax bill as a proposed constitutional amendment last year. It must be ratified by 38 state legislatures to become law. All but three state legislatures—Kentucky, Mississippi and Virginia—are in session this year.

Write to your state senator and/or representative urging his support of the anti-poll tax amendment.

Paper Reports Revival Of S. C. Klan Movement

GREENVILLE (AP) — In an editorial for publication Wednesday morning, The Greenville News reports a statewide movement to revive the Ku Klux Klan behind a front organization known as the "Majority Citizens League."

In part the editorial says:

"The Ku Klux Klan, largely dormant and completely discredited in South Carolina since its temporary resurgence a decade or so ago, is attempting to don a cloak of respectability.

"It is still in its beginning stages, but it is a statewide movement headed by remnants of the South Carolina Association of Ku-Klux Klans with its roots in Columbia and the central part of the state.

"So far as can be ascertained, no sizeable organizational meetings of the 'league' have as yet been held, but it has been discussed at gatherings of Klaverns in various parts of the state, including the Piedmont section. And it has been frankly described as a front organization which may attract people who would have nothing to do with the Klan as such but who could be used for its purposes just the same.

"However, efforts are being made to hold an organizational rally in the upstate this week. Leaders have tried to obtain a meeting site in Anderson; one mentioned was the courthouse.

"There has been talk of a similar meeting next month in Greenville, perhaps at Memorial Auditorium, with Gov. Ross Barnett of Mississippi being invited to speak."

The Greenville News editorial said instigators of the "Majority Citizens League" were "known to be active members and leaders of the Klan" and that what membership remains in the Klan today "can be numbered in the low hundreds" in South Carolina.

The editorial expressed concern that the organization might be mistaken for other segregationist movements.

"BLACK HAND" OF RIGHT WING STIRRED WYOMING RTW DRIVE

After several decades of dedicated practice at mud-slinging, backers of phony right-to-work laws long ago should have perfected the art. Not so. In Wyoming last month, they surpassed themselves.

An outfit calling itself the "Freedom Committee," whose individual members are yet unidentified, placed an advertisement (left) in the Sheridan (Wyo.) Press that reached a new low. It not only linked unions by implication to the Mafia (Black Hand), hoodlum Al Capone's gang and Nikita Khrushchev, for some reason it linked Young Democrats to them as well.

The ad reflected the gutter thinking of the extreme right wing, the only "black hand" involved in so-called right-to-work campaigns. And, of course, "Freedom Committee" has that unmistakable odor of the far right.

Two days later, Wyoming Citizens for Right-to-Work Inc. placed an ad in the same paper (below left) disclaiming any connection with "Freedom Committee." But WCRTW Inc. couldn't resist the opportunity to suggest "Freedom Committee" may actually be AFL-CIO.

Then, one day later, to wind up the farce, the pages of the Sheri-

WHY?

Why Is the Mafia (Black Hand) against the RIGHT-TO-WORK LAW?

Why Are Capone Gangsters against the RIGHT-TO-WORK LAW?

Why Is Khrushchev and his gang against the RIGHT-TO-WORK LAW?

Why Are the Young Democrats against the RIGHT-TO-WORK LAW?

Could there be some Connection?

THINK THIS OVER

(This adv. sponsored by Freedom Committee.)

Who Are They?

The advertisement in the Sheridan Press implying those opposing Right-to-Work are Communists or hoodlums was NOT paid for by the . . .

Wyoming Citizens for Right-to-Work, Inc.

Who is the Freedom Committee? The AFL-CIO? Ask the Sheridan Press.

Wyoming Citizens for Right-to-Work Inc.

I wish to state that the Advertisement which appeared in the Tuesday, January 29th Sheridan Press has no connection with our Right-to-Work Committee. We have no knowledge of who the "Freedom Committee" is. We believe every person is entitled to express their opinion but we do not believe in the assassination of character of people or organizations.

Alex Kaufmann

dan Press blossomed with another ad (Page 1 below center) signed by Alex Kaufmann of Sheridan, administrator of Wyoming Citizens for RTW. He again disassociated his organization from "Freedom Committee" and wound up proclaiming ". . . we do not believe in the assassination of character of people or organizations." (Where's he been?)

The ads, of course, are sidelights—but important ones—to the main fact: the GOP-controlled Wyoming legislature passed an open shop law and the GOP governor signed it. Wyoming became the 20th state and the first in more than four years to approve RTW.

As usual, the proposal had the support of business leaders and the ultra-conservative Farm Bureau. One of the founders of the state RTW committee was Wyoming Farm Bureau President Herbert Livingston, a board member of the National Right-to-Work Committee. The fight for the law was led by Lloyd Taggart, a member of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce Special Committee on Voluntary Unionism.

The victory was a key one for the open-shoppers, giving impetus to their efforts to build sentiment for a federal RTW law. More immediately, it may well encourage other conservative-dominated state legislatures to act.

GOP PRESIDENTIAL TICKET FOR '64?

Maybe the Republicans will nominate New York's Gov. Nelson Rockefeller for the presidency in 1964 with Gov. James A. Rhodes of Ohio as his vice presidential runningmate, giving us the "Rocky-Rhodes" ticket.

TURN RIGHT ON OHIO RHODES

Speaking of Ohio's Rhodes, he's a Rhodes turning right. Not that this comes as any surprise. Ohio labor expected it.

Rhodes appointed as administrator of the Ohio Bureau of Unemployment Compensation Willard Dudley, a man who was an active, outspoken campaigner for the 1958 attempt to pass a so-called "right-to-work" law in the state. Dudley also was a leader in the ultra-conservative Ohio Information Committee, which battled against approval of supplemental unemployment benefits in union-management contracts, and against unemployment benefits.

A fine choice for his new post.

CONSERVATIVE POLITICAL GROUPS MULTIPLY

New conservative political groups are sprouting and spreading like crab-grass in the suburbs. The most recent examples are in the Dakotas.

In South Dakota, a group of businessmen, angered by the election of liberal George McGovern to the Senate, formed the Conservative Voters Association. It already has touched base in Washington with ultra-conservative Congressmen and Senators seeking guidelines for voter appeal.

In North Dakota, the Christian Coalition Party has been organized, avowedly to speak as the conservative wing of the state Republican Party, perhaps in future to grab control of it.

The North Dakota group is doing a grass-roots building job among high-schoolers in the state. The junior class president of every high school has received the organization's statement of policy and has been urged to introduce it as a basis of class discussion.

AMA TAKES NEW TACK IN ANTI-HEALTH CARE CAMPAIGN

The American Medical Association is carrying its campaign against health care for the elderly under social security into the state legislatures. It has been reported the AMA is trying to wangle invitations for its president, Dr. Edward Annis, to address state bodies. Annis already has spoken before both houses of the Arkansas General Assembly.

The AMA pitch: a plea for states to implement the inadequate Kerr-Mills law to stave off "federal intervention" in the medical field.

BIRCHERS CAPTURE CALIFORNIA YOUNG GOP

Warnings that John Birchers were trying to capture the California Young Republicans (Political Memo, Feb. 11,1963) hit the bulls-eye. Apparently, they've taken over completely.

Robert Gaston, newly-elected president of the Young GOP claims he is not a JBS member. Yet, he had the backing of John Rousselot, former Congressman and now JBS western states director.

Ultra-conservatives also grabbed other key posts in the organization.

WCG Warned Of 'Evil Force' Here

One of the founders of the Women For Constitutional Government movement said Wednesday that "some evil hidden force is at work in our society, and unless we do something immediately we are destined to become a land of bondage."

Mrs. Florence Sillers Ogden of Rosedale, a member of the advisory board of the national organization which formed late last year, warned that the foundations of this country's freedom are being threatened. She called for action on the part of Washington County women to fight "increasing socialism and violations of the Constitution."

SPEAKING to approximately 100 mid-Deltans here she listed the platform of the "spontaneous movement of which I'm proud to be a part."

"We love our Constitution; we love our sovereign state; we are for restoration of constitutional government; defeat of communism; support of free enterprise; reorganization of basic responsibilities and integrities of the people; establishment of a foreign policy that recognizes it is not possible to buy a nation; an economically and militarily strong America that can survive without the United Nations; a return to God."

Mrs. Ogden pointed out that the race issue was a part of this movement. "We believe in separation of the races, but this is not our main issue," she said.

To accomplish the goals set forth at the first national meeting of the WCG in Montgomery, Ala., in January this year, Mrs. Ogden outlined the following steps that must be taken:

(1) A defeat of the liberals in political parties. She said that only conservatives must be elected to Congress and other public offices to stand guard on America.

"A good friend of mine told me that another good name for liberals is socialists," she said. She said that "moderates were even more dangerous than liberals."

(2) Know your candidates and issues. (3) Exercise the power of the vote.

"WE must also work to get the United States out of the United Nations," she continued. "You saw what the UN did in Katanga. Do you want this to happen in America?"

"Now is the time to unite and fight those who would destroy our way of government as it was originally formed," she concluded.

Mrs. Robert Neal of Leland listed ten instances which she felt were violations of the Constitution, concluding the meeting.

U.S. CHAMBER LOADS 'LABOR SPEAKERS' BUREAU WITH ACTIVE RIGHT-WINGERS

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce publishes a little brochure listing the names of 76 gentlemen from various parts of the country, describing them as "qualified speakers on labor legislation, personnel practices, and activities of organized labor."

The Chamber distributes the brochure, "Let's Talk About Labor," to its members, urging them to draw on the speakers bureau for conventions, meetings or special programs.

Of the 76, at least 10 have known right-wing affiliations and at least 10 more skirt the fringes. Unquestionably, closer study would reveal others who habitually hob-nob with the extreme right.

Listed below are some of the persons, and their affiliations, the Chamber presents to its members as likely speakers:

Raymond A. Armstrong, managing director, Oklahomans for Right to Work; participant, 1961 National Right to Work Seminar; active leader in successful right to work campaign in Kansas, 1958.

Dr. James O. Baird, president, Oklahoma Christian College; president, Oklahomans for Right to Work. Oklahoma Christian College is a kissing cousin of Dr. George Benson's Harding College, Searcy, Ark., which produces mountains of right-wing propaganda. O.C.C. conducts a similar program of seminars, is also a major right-wing propaganda outlet.

Leonard F. Banowetz, attorney, Coleman Company Inc., Wichita, Kansas; field coordinator, John Birch Society; chairman, Kansas State Chamber of Commerce Labor Relations Committee; speaker, 1961 National Right to Work Seminar.

Desmond A. Barry, president, Galveston Truck Lines, Houston, Texas; speaker, right-wing Human Events Political Action Conference, March 1962.

Elden R. Carl, general manager, California Association of Employers, San Francisco; 1960 board member, National Right to Work Committee; former employee of National Association of Manufacturers; chairman, National Advisory Committee for rightist Council for Individual Freedom.

Edward W. Greenfield, pastor, Church of Reflections, Buena Park, Calif.; former editorial and program director of James Fifield's extremist Spiritual Mobilization.

Howard Jensen, vice president and general counsel, Lone Star Steel Co., Dallas, Texas. Lone Star Steel president E. B. Germany is one of the right-wing's big financial "angels." The Texas AFL-CIO describes the company as "probably the leading union-busting company in Texas."

Rev. Edward A. Keller, University of Notre Dame; member, National Advisory Board, extremist Young Americans for Freedom; member of board, National Right to Work Committee: board of advisors, ultra-conservative National Labor-Management Foundation.

William L. McGrath, chairman, The Williamson Company, Cincinnati, Ohio; member, national policy committee, ultra-right For America; national committee member, Citizens Foreign Aid Committee; national board, Committee Against Summit Entanglements; endorser, Manion Forum; trustee, American Enterprise Association.

Herbert M. Ramel, chairman, executive committee, Precision Automotive Components Co., University City, Mo.; trustee, rightist America's Future.

COPE LAUNCHES 1964 REGISTER-AND-VOTE CAMPAIGN

More liberal and more modern state registration laws, and registration committees in every local union in the country—these are the goals of COPE's 1964 register-and-vote drive, launched recently by the COPE administrative committee.

In many states, the committee noted, complicated, restrictive and out-dated laws are designed to limit, rather than increase, the number of people who go to the polls. Changes in state laws will be sought this year by appealing to state legislatures, 47 of which are in session.

In addition to the legislative approach, the committee recommended all international unions amend their constitutions to require a registrar or registration committee in every local, charged with the task of registering members, wives and children of voting age.

More than 25 percent of all union members move every year, the committee pointed out. Making sure they are all properly registered is a major undertaking. Part of the 1964 effort will be concentrated on getting workers who move to register as quickly as possible in their new locations.

AS MAINE GOES . . .

It used to be said, "In politics, as Maine goes, so goes the nation." But like so many slogans, it just didn't prove out. Often Maine would go one way and the nation another.

In one recent situation, though, let's hope the old slogan holds up. Maine citizens rebuffed an open shop drive by declining to sign petitions in sufficient numbers to put a phony right-to-work proposal on the ballot.

Ordinarily, RTW promoters can buy all the signatures they need to get a spot on the ballot. But in Maine, they found they were as welcome as a cold wave in Miami.

THE SNEER THAT'S MADE MILWAUKEE FAMOUS

Most people always thought the more citizens who vote in an election, the truer will be the consensus, and the fuller will be our practice of democracy. Not so the Milwaukee Sentinel. It sneered at the idea in a recent editorial noteworthy only for its rich flavor of 18th Century thinking which judged that only property-owners should have the right to vote. Oh, yes—Milwaukee is in Wisconsin, which sent a man named Joe McCarthy to the Senate. The Sentinel was one of his most devoted supporters. Its editorial on good citizenship is printed in full below:

There is a bill before the state senate to permit door to door registration of voters in Milwaukee.

To a degree, this puts a Milwaukee newspaper on the spot.

Get out the vote campaigns have become almost as traditional as campaigns for traffic safety. Being in favor of a big vote is almost like being in favor of motherhood or honesty in government.

And yet, in good conscience, we cannot favor this proposal.

Door to door registration undoubtedly would lead to an increase of registered voters in Milwaukee. That, in turn, would lead to an increase in the number of votes cast, although probably not in the same ratio as the increased registrations.

But do we want those votes? Would they be informed, intelligent votes? Would they improve our chance of electing qualified candidates?

We doubt it.

We have already made registration extremely easy, with convenient hours and neighborhood registration centers. Anyone with genuine interest in his government and desire to participate in it through his own ballot has ample opportunity now.

To go further than we have gone, to have election officials seek registrations from door to door, would, in a sense, be stuffing the ballot box with the votes of our least interested, least intelligent and least informed citizens. We would be sacrificing quality for quantity.

We might better say: If you don't WANT to vote, please don't.

(An interesting sidelight: the same law being proposed in Milwaukee was in effect in Wassau, Wisc., in 1956, and 99.9 percent of that city's eligible voters registered. For this record, the city received an American Heritage Foundation Award. The Sentinel aims to see that Milwaukee gets no such recognition.)

IN OTHER WORDS, LOOK BEFORE YOU LEAP!

"It often happens that Washington pushes into areas . . . simply because private initiative has failed to do the job. Those of us who look upon self-reliance as a cardinal virtue had better look to our own performance before we criticize government intervention too loudly."—John T. Connor, president, Merck & Co., drug firm, addressing Texas Medical Association conference.

MORE PROOF: BUSINESS BUCKS BACK RIGHT WING

One of the well-springs of right-wing economic propaganda is the Foundation for Economic Education. Its ultra-conservatism would have embarrassed even old Adam Smith, who made the scene a couple of centuries ago as the first of the profits-above-all political economists.

Among its leaders over the years have been many of the union-hating busy-bees of ultra-conservatism: Adm. Ben Morreel, industrialist Roger Milliken, right-wing publisher Eugene Pulliam, oil magnate J. Howard Pew.

The Foundation has been around for years, outlasting many other rightist groups. It's easy to see why by looking at the money behind it. Figures taken from hearings by a committee of the House of Representatives show that in the period 1946-50 a total of more than $1,100,000 was poured into the Foundation by 40 king-sized industries and wealthy individuals.

General Motors gave $50,000. Chrysler, Consolidated Edison, U.S. Gypsum, DuPont, Gulf Oil, Montgomery Ward, Sun Oil and U.S. Steel all turned over $40,000. Republic Steel gave $37,500; B. F. Goodrich, $35,000; National Steel, $22,500.

Among other big doners were Armour, International Nickel, Libby-Owens Ford Glass Co., Standard Oil of New Jersey, Monsanto Chemical, Sears-Roebuck, Detroit Edison, Westinghouse, Humble Oil, Nash-Kelvinator, Pittsburgh Plate Glass, Owens Illinois Glass, Electric Auto Lite, Champion Spark Plug, S.S. Kresge, Ford Motor Co., General Electric, Eli Lilly.

Biggest chunk, $170,000, came from the William Volker Fund, a sometimes philanthropic fund which often donates large sums to right-wing groups.

Desegregation Grps. WCC

Citizens Council Leader Flays School Mix Plan

Doesn't Consider What's Best for N.O.—Irwin

The chairman of the Citizens Council of Greater New Orleans charged Tuesday that a desegregation plan adopted by the Orleans Parish School Board Monday night neglects to consider what is best for the city.

"This plan disregards the fact that some school buildings could be closed and disposed of due to small attendance, thereby sparing some neighborhoods from complete destruction as far as property values are concerned," said Dr. Emmett L. Irwin.

Dr. Irwin said that Dr. Shirley Fitzpatrick, director of research, census and planning for schools, failed to face up to the fact that thousands of white students will not attend the desegregated schools in September, 1963.

"To save tax money, the schools which are under-populated should be closed," said Dr. Irwin. "This he has not seen fit to recommend. Instead, he has recommended the construction of approximately a dozen new schools ranging in cost from a quarter of a million to over a million dollars each, when we might very well have empty schools when the Fitzpatrick desegregation plan goes into effect in September, 1963."

Dr. Irwin said "we must work to secure modifications which could possibly save some of the real estate values of some of the neighborhoods surrounding the elementary schools."

He said the school board cannot remain aloof and detached when the welfare of so many property owners is at stake. The board must cooperate with the city and state agencies charged with the responsibility to protect its citizens and their property, he said.

Wise Mississippi Move

The word from Mississippi is that appointment of weekly newspaper editor Erle Johnston, Jr., of Forest, as director of the State Sovereignty Commission is judged a body block at the Citizens Councils.

Reports for some time have indicated struggle in connection with the commission, and there has been rather hot debate about the course of the Citizens Council in Mississippi. The council has been strong; it has been the kind of organization, it seemed at times, which was sacrosanct.

Then, last summer Editor Johnston took some rather incisive shots at council policies and leadership. He said of the council's "national administrator," William J. Simmons, that he "doesn't want harmony. He wants strife, confusion and violence." Mr. Johnston wrote same in his paper.

The editor has reportedly wanted no praise for this position. He stands as a staunch Mississippian who believes in segregation. But it can only be concluded he thinks that, in serving the Southern cause, level-headedness and restraint in policy can pay off. Of course it can. Trying to put across the argument that the South is not altogether without some experience in delicate racial relationships requires finesse—not the broad ax, the hot word, the counter-charge.

These may comfort some aggrieved Southerners, but they don't sell anyone any merchandise. The South's principal objective ought to be to convince all people, everywhere, that common sense can prevail here—but that just by writing orders, issuing edicts, etc., you do-not change deeply-rooted convictions, practices, or relations.

The Mississippi decision to make Erle Johnston, Jr., head of the Sovereignty Commission, obviously is a sound move and it deserves wide recognition as a step toward balance.

Signs Displayed At Session Of Citizens Council

Four Negro men picketed a meeting of the Memphis Citizens Council at the Memphis Public Library at 258 South McLean last night.

The Negroes apparently were protesting a resolution adopted unanimously by the 25 council members calling for an independent investigation of the local welfare office.

One sign read "Citizens Council Unfair to the Welfare Department" and another said "We Protest Memphis Citizens Council Meetings." The picketing began at 7:30 and lasted an hour and a half.

Integrated Social Tabbed 'New Trend'

GREENVILLE (AP) — William Lowndes of Greenville, chairman of the South Carolina Association of Citizens Councils, issued this prepared statement Thursday on a barbecue staged for members of the state legislature near Columbia Wednesday night by a labor group:

"Those who are familiar with the contrivances of the professional politician realize full well that politics does indeed make strange bedfellows.

"The fact that the recent barbecue social sponsored by the CIO-AFL Labor Council, which was reportedly attended by both whites and Negroes, including a large number of South Carolina legislators should make it quite clear that a new trend is being developed in the social and political affairs of South Carolina."

WON'T YOU DO YOUR PART, DEAR CITIZEN?

Red Rights Bar

As a citizen, it is your duty to learn more about WOMEN FOR CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT. Come to the New National Guard Armory in Selma, Friday morning April 19th at 10:30 sharp, and hear Mrs. Mary Cain Editor of the Summit Sun and other informed speakers. They will tell you why women must come to the rescue of our nation and how they can do it.

WOMEN FOR CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT was founded in Jackson Miss. by almost 2000 indignant women meeting spontaneously after the Federal Government had violated numerous provisions of our Constitution of the United States. Women came from seven states to this meeting on October 30th, 1962.

On January 17th, 1963 1100 women met and organized with thirteen states represented. Several were northern states. They are just as alarmed as those in the southern states because their constitutional rights are being violated too.

WOMEN FOR CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT is conservative. It is not politically affiliated with any party and is not denominational. It is opposed to liberals of both parties. Members of this organization vote for the man and not the party! Our organization is opposed to communism. We believe in a return to God and morality in the affairs and functions of America, regardless of the beliefs of other nations. We ask the guidance and understanding of God, our Father, in all we do.

PLACE: NATIONAL GUARD ARMORY AT SELMA

TIME: APRIL 19, 10:30 AM (SHARP!)

This is a women's organization but men are welcomed in order that they better understand what women plan to do. They should never underestimate the power of a woman.

Many 'Reverse Freedom Riders' Pay Dearly-

NEW YORK, April 18—(AP)—Nearly a year has passed since the first Negro left the South for the North on a one-way bus ticket supplied by Southern segregationists. He was followed by more than 100 others, many of them children accompanying their parents.

What has become of them?

To all, one truism has emerged:

The living isn't easy, North or South.

A dreary picture emerges, for the most part, from surveys in the cities to which the voluntary exiles went in search of a better life—Hyannis, Mass., near the summer home of President Kennedy; New York, Detroit, Philadelphia, Dayton, Ohio and Chicago.

Any other result would have been astonishing, for the "reverse freedom riders"—the South's answer to the "freedom riders" — were ill prepared to cope with a high-cost area alien to them.

Not all can be traced, but it was ascertained that many had returned home, disillusioned and homesick. Some went on relief and are still receiving assistance. But some found jobs and are working out new lives for themselves and their families.

One of the first to come North was Louis Boyd, 41-year-old unemployed New Orleans longshoreman. With him on his arrival in New York on April 21, 1962, were his wife and eight children, ranging in age from 3 to 12 years.

"My wife and children were needing," Boyd said in explaining why he had accepted an offer by the Citizens Council of New Orleans to send North any Negro who thought he might fare better there than in the South.

Things looked good at first for the Boyd family. The Travelers Aid Society placed them in a three-room, $25-a-day suite in the Wolcott Hotel in mid-Manhattan for a week end, and he promptly got a job.

But the firm which had employed him as a $100-a-week handyman was out of business within a month.

Boyd finally got another job at a small steel mill in Jersey City. He and his family live in a federal housing project, the children are in school and two of them sing in the choir at St. John's Episcopal Church.

"Yes, I suppose they're getting along all right," said the Rev. Robert Castle, rector of St. John's. "About as well as 10 people can get along on $75 a week."

Of six others who followed Boyd to New York City at least two — Junius [illegible], 21, and Morris Price, 20, returned to New Orleans less than two weeks after their arrival.

Another, Shelva Williams, 36, found a job in a grocery. There is no record of what happened to the others.

Ninety-six went to Cape Cod. Of these, a mother and her family of 11 remain on public relief in Hyannis. She occasionally earns a little money when older children relieve her of family tasks on non-school days. One boy has a newspaper route.

Two young women and four children remain in Newburyport, Mass., to which they were sent from the Cape for housing and public care. The women are working and virtually self-sustaining.

Of the remainder sent to Cape Cod, the majority have wound up in Boston jobs.

It is known that at least four others have returned South and that five left seeking jobs outside New England.

A few others found summer work in hostelries and went South last autumn with employers who maintained winter establishments in Florida.

Massachusetts law bars disclosures of identities of persons on relief.

Archie Campbell of Macon, Ga., arrived in Detroit May 18 but returned to Georgia two days later on a bus ticket supplied by Ronnie Thompson, a jeweler in his home town.

Three Louisiana Negroes chose Chicago, but one, Rezzie Moffett, 45, of New Orleans, returned there after nine days because he failed to find a job.

And the latest case of the "reverse freedom riders" is proceeding on a happy note. It's that of Joseph Parker, his wife and their five daughters.

They arrived in Dayton, March 24 from New Orleans, and Parker soon got a job as a carwasher with a meat packing firm. His employer, Hy Feinstein, said "He seems to be doing a good job and everything is going along very smoothly."

Dayton civic groups paid two months rent on a house for Parker and furnished it.

"We'd just like to live a normal life," said Mrs. Parker. "We were only half living down there." Parker had been unemployed since September.

Citizens To Hear Miss. Segregationist

By LEVERNE PROSSER
Roving Reporter

FLORENCE—One of the nation's best known proponents of recouping dwindling state's rights from the mushrooming federal government—Lt. Governor Paul B. Johnson Jr., of Mississippi—will address a giant rally of South Carolina's Citizens Council members and others here tonight.

An outspoken defender of segregation, Mr. Johnson is expected to unwrap plans designed to obtain "a better bargaining position for the south in national politics" during his speech at McClenaghan High School beginning at 8 p.m.

Here under the sponsorship of the Florence County Citizens Council, Mr. Johnson contends "the South, by sticking together and withholding electoral votes" can garner a greater voice in the operation of the federal government.

Mr. Johnson became a prime target for Northern political figures, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) and the Northern press last September when he and Gov. Ross Barnett refused to admit Negro James Meredith to the University of Mississippi at Oxford.

Mr. Johnson is expected to reveal "many unpublished facts" about the riots that broke out when U. S. marshalls forced the admission of Meredith to Ole Miss. The fiery Lt. Governor was incapacitated by nausea gas during the riots that left two dead and scores injujred.

Florence Council Chairman George L. Ivey said yesterday Mr. Johnson would dwell at length on how, by sticking together, the Southern states can play a leading role offsetting the action of "left wing" and "centralized government" groups.

Advanced comment from Mr Johnson contends "organization is the key to victory for the South." He will seek support for presidential - elector primaries adopted by the Mississippi legislature.

An announced candidate for the seat now held by Gov. Barnett, Mr. Johnson says the leaders of seven other states are already considering adopting a presidential elector primary and similar plans.

A host of South Carolina Citizens Council executives including Executive Secretary Donald [illegible] teat of Charleston, President William Loundes of Greenville, Steve Gentry of Sumter and Farris Smith of Lynchburg are expected to turn up for the rally.

Lt. Gov. Johnson and Mississippi Citizens Council President Leon Hillis will be guests of honor at a special 6 p.m. luncheon scheduled for Hornes Restaurant at 6:30 p.m.

A press conference will be held one-half hour earlier.

The two will be met at the Florence Municipal Airport at 2 p.m. by a group of Florence governmental officials and members of the local citizens council board including Hugh Willcox, E. Morgan, Tim Miller and [illegible] Newton.

Tonight's meeting at McClenaghan High School will be open to the public.

Mr. Johnson will be introduced at the rally by peppery Rep. A. W. (Red) Bethea of Dillon—a key spokesman against integration in South Carolina.

OXFORD, Miss. (AP)—A Citizens Council leader told an Oxford unit of the organization Monday night that continued economic and political pressure would be applied to preserve racial segregation in Mississippi.

Robert Patterson of Greenwood, state secretary of the Citizens Council, spoke to the Lafayette County Council. He discussed the overall integration-segregation situation.

About 35 persons attended the session, including several students from the University of Mississippi, which was desegregated last fall.

It was announced that State Sen. John McLaurin of Brandon would address the group's next meeting. McLaurin is an announced candidate for state attorney general.

Barnett Reported Cooling Toward Citizens Councils

JACKSON, Miss. (UPI) — The Citizens Councils' professional leadership no longer wields the power it once enjoyed under the administration of Gov. Ross Barnett.

During the administration's first two years, it appeared that the council leadership was helping to run the state.

Barnett delivered speeches prepared at council headquarters. The professionals accompanied him on out-of-state trips. And the administration's Sovereignty Commission voted to give the councils' radio-television department $5,000 per month.

The first indication of change in the power structure came last summer when Erle Johnston Jr., public relations director of the Sovereignty Commission, became involved in a dispute with Willaim J. Simmons, the council's administrator.

Barnett stuck by Johnston, who had accused Simmons of stirring hate, and the Sovereignty Commission ignored a move by some council members to have Johnston fired.

CUTS CONTRIBUTION

Shortly thereafter, the commission voted to reduce its monthly contribution to the "Citizens Council Forum" to $2,000. And Thursday, Johnston, with Barnett's support, was promoted to commission director despite strenuous opposition from some council elements.

Barnett also bucked the council leadership during the Ole Miss integration crisis. Over heated objections from council sources, the governor conceded defeat in his effort to keep James Meredith out of Ole Miss after rioting erupted on the campus.

Same old slap at Dixie, says Wallace

BY HUGH W. SPARROW
News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, May 18—Gov. George C. Wallace told an enthusiastic crowd attending a Citizens Council dinner here last night that the fight that is being waged against the South on racial issues "is nothing new."

"It's the same old fight that in former years sought to keep the South in bonds through unfair freight rates and other forms of discrimination," Wallace declared.

ALSO ON THE PROGRAM was Birmingham Police Commissioner Eugene (Bull) Connor, who, after a standing ovation, urged citizens to please let the law enforcement officers handle any racial trouble. This is the reason we got along so well in Birmingham. You have got to keep them (white and Negro) separate when you are having trouble."

Connor said he was not so afraid of the Negro "as I am the white man."

"We are sitting on our hands. They are working; they are organized."

WALLACE CHARGED that economic interests in the North are exploiting the racial question to keep the South under attack.

"They know we are making great strides and they are trying to block us."

"Certain business interests and groups in the North know that the South is making great strides today and they are seeking to block us by attacking the South on the racial question.

"On the slightest racial provocation, magazines and newspapers of the North and East, entirely unmindful of their own obvious defects and shortcomings, send their writers and photographers to the South who come back with stories and articles that are not only deliberately and grossly unfair but in most cases strongly libelous."

Gov. Wallace declared, however, that he was not implying that the South has no friends in other parts of the nation.

"BETWEEN THE ATLANTIC and Pacific and from the Canadian border to Mexico there are millions of people outside the South who look upon the South not only as able to take care of itself but as the nation's last bastion of freedom and liberty," he declared.

Wallace said that if someone says to you, "I'm for segregation but," put him down for what he is, namely, that he not.

The governor declared also that the South—Alabama in particular—is gaining millions and millions in new industry "even though there are some who try to tell you that the way to get new industry is to integrate."

Wallace said that about this time last year "the cry went up that Alabama couldn't get a $20 million rubber plant, but we did."

The governor said that he and others who have been working to get industry to come to Alabama are providing prosperity and more jobs for whites and Negroes.

"By way of contrast, I ask what is this Negro King doing? "He comes in for his own ends and leaves his own fellow Negroes upset and almost friendless.

"I ASK YOU, HAS HE done anything to help create jobs for his own race that will mean happiness and a better way of life for them?"

Wallace declared that politically the outlook is not dark for the South.

"The big political parties are realizing more and more," he said, "that a presidential candidate will have to carry at least seven Southern states to win. Even now we are beginning to get better consideration from them."

Political Memo from COPE

COMMITTEE ON POLITICAL EDUCATION, AFL-CIO
815 16th STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON 6, D. C.

NO. 10-63 May 20, 1963

what an understatement

PROGRESS-BLOCKING AMENDMENTS MAKE HEADWAY IN STATES

Three proposals to curb the U.S. Supreme Court and bolster "states' rights" (Political Memo, Jan. 28, 1963) have cut a swath through some state legislatures with little opposition and a minimum of public attention. The resolutions were dreamed up in December by the General Assembly of the States, a conservative-controlled organization of state legislators. They would:

1. Change the process of amending the U.S. Constitution to give states greater power in the procedure—approved in 11 states.

2. Prohibit the Supreme Court from deciding reapportionment cases—approved in 12 states.

3. Establish a "Court of the Union" made up of the chief justices of the 50 state supreme courts, which could over-rule the U.S. Supreme Court—approved in four states.

In all, 20 states have dealt affirmatively with or have taken steps to approve, one or more of the proposals: Alaska, Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Utah, Washington, Wyoming.

GIVE US "LIBERTY" OR GIVE US DEBT

And speaking of bizarre proposals the shopworn "Liberty Amendment" is still making the rounds, vigorously pushed by rightists who feel taxation is the root of all evil. The amendment would wipe out the federal income tax and would require the government to hand over to private industry whatever enterprises it conducts. This would involve more than 700 operations, among them TVA, rural electrification, and atomic energy projects.

Biggest feature of the amendment would be scrapping of the personal income tax. This would cut at least $45 billion from federal intake. Where money for defense and needed welfare programs would come from is anybody's guess, unless the right-wingers want more debt. It has been estimated a 10 percent federal sales tax would be necessary to make up the loss.

Six state legislatures already have approved the "Liberty Amendment," Wyoming, Texas, Nevada, Georgia, South Carolina.

FOUR-YEAR RIGHT WING COLLEGE IN THE WORKS

Colorado Springs, Colo., is a lovely community at the foot of towering Pikes Peak. It enjoys an ideal climate. Its charms are many, its attractions varied.

Unhappily, it also is a hot-bed of right wing activity stemming from the presence of one of the most horrible examples of a daily newspaper this side of Pravda. The paper, the Gazette Telegraph, is owned by R. C. Hoiles, whose publishing empire stretches from California through New Mexico, Texas, Colorado, and Ohio.

Hoiles, 84 and rich, thinks the National Association of Manufacturers is too left wing, hates the public school system, opposes taxes of any kind. He is a right-winger's right-winger, an all-American arch-conservative.

He puts his money where his mouth is. He has underwritten an academic sewer called Freedom School which offers short courses in right wing theory and practice. He now wants to expand this into a full four-year school called Rampart College.

A lot of folks in Colorado Springs are up in arms over this, and understandably. Rampart College would be like Freedom School, only more so. A tip-off on what it might be like is available by studying a roster of the phony "faculty" now at Freedom School. Among the "faculty" are William Grede, John Birch Society endorser and former NAM president; writer Frank Chodorov, leader of several rightist groups; James Doenges of We, The People; Percy Greaves, Christian Freedom Foundation, and about a dozen other extremist big-wigs.

The titles of some of the courses have a flavor all their own: "A Comprehensive Course for People Willing to Work and Apply Themselves in the Pursuit of Philosophic and Economic Truths" (the course is over before the title has been memorized) and "Explorations in Human Action" (for business executives).

Hoiles plans to put up $5 million to launch Rampart, just another indication that rightist leaders have money and are willing to use it.

GOP HEARTS FOR GOLDWATER, HEADS FOR ROCKEFELLER

Among Republicans, there's a huge gap between "whom do you think" and "whom do you want" for President.

Polled by Congressional Quarterly, delegates to the 1960 GOP convention by a solid 46 to 34 percent margin expressed a personal preference for Arizona Sen. Barry Goldwater over New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller. But by an even wider margin, 64.4 to 26.4 percent, they admitted Rockefeller more likely would be the presidential candidate. Polling was done before Rockefeller's remarriage. Any effect this might have therefore was not reflected in the poll.

Michigan Gov. George Romney was named most likely candidate by three percent of the delegates and was preferred by 4.3 percent. Dragging along behind were Richard Nixon, Sen. Thruston Morton (Ky.), Gov. William Scranton (Pa.) and Gov. Mark Hatfield (Ore.).

EXTREMIST ACA LAUNCHES 1964 POLITICAL DRIVE

The militant right wing isn't waiting for 1964 to start its 1964 political push. It's beginning now, in 1963.

This week, Americans for Constitutional Action will dash out of the starting gate with a reception in Washington honoring 153 members of Congress who fit ACA's description of "constitutional conservatives." Translated, this means reactionaries.

ACA vows to enter more races than it did in the 1962 elections, when, it boasts, 135 of 184 "assisted" candidates were successful. It's counting, too, on increasing the number of field men—18—it had operating in 1962.

The early ACA drive dovetails, perhaps coincidentally, with announcement by the National Association of Manufacturers that it's kicking in $100,000 to launch BIPAC, the Business-Industry Political Action Committee.

ATTENTION ALL CARS, BE ON THE LOOKOUT FOR...

The above-mentioned ACA claims membership is growing and that it has penetrated more communities than ever. Presently, it has chapters in the following 29 cities. If you live in, or near, one of them, watch for evidence of ACA activity.

NEWS FOR BYRD-WATCHERS

One of the most interesting specimens for American Byrd-watchers is the Virginia Budget-Slashing Harrybyrd (known also as the Dixie Apple-Growing Money-Making Harrybyrd). The habitat of the Harrybyrd is Capitol Hill, Washington, D. C. He is found most commonly perched at tables in committee rooms, but often wings his way around the Senate floor during federal budget season chirping his famous Byrd call, "Cut 'n slash, cut 'n slash."

Besides apples, his diet consists of gobbling up programs for public health, education and welfare. He chews vigorously and has a voracious appetite. For dessert, he usually eats jobless pay bills.

It has been reported that he's particularly hungry this year.

GOP "LOYAL OPPOSITION" IMAGE TARNISHED

The picture of congressional Republicans as a constructive, loyal opposition group doesn't go over with the public at large. The obstructionism of the Hallecks and Dirksens and their party pals instead seems to have created the image of old-fogey, stand-pat, Katie-bar-the-door politics conducted by a crowd of nay-sayers.

A recent Gallup poll found that only 19 percent of all those questioned felt the GOP is working harder than the Democrats for the nation's welfare. Forty percent believed the Democrats are trying more earnestly to solve the country's problems, and 41 percent saw no difference or had no opinion.

Of Republicans polled, one out of every two admitted the Democrats are working harder to find solutions than are GOP congressmen and senators.

AH, THOSE SUBVERSIVE LITTLE WICKER BASKETS

Nothing is too small for right-wingers to notice—not even wicker baskets. In Columbus, Ohio, prompted by ultra-conservatives, the city government passed an ordinance requiring merchants to purchase a license for the sale of goods manufactured in Iron Curtain countries.

The law smacks heavily of an outgrowth of John Birch Society activity. JBS members have made a habit lately of touring stores and putting nasty little greeting cards on Iron Curtain country products.

The first arrest recently was made under this law. A merchant was caught selling Yugoslavian-made wicker baskets without a license. Maximum penalty is $500 fine and six months in jail.

Now that we've exposed Red wicker baskets, let's go after those pin-cushions next.

New Surplus?

Although the economy grows, the number of people in the job market also increases and technology displaces others more rapidly than new jobs are developed.

This June, there will be a test of the current business upswing's ability to provide jobs. The first big postwar baby crop will enter the labor market.

The year 1947 saw the first big crop of postwar babies born. Those babies turn 16 this year and in most states 16 is the age when compulsory schooling ends.

Seymour Wolfbein, director of the Labor Dep't's Office of Manpower, Automation and Training, looks for more than a million more youth to "hit the labor force."

The implications of the labor force growth are explosive. Unless there are jobs for the overwhelming majority of new workers, a fuse may be lit under a social H-bomb of delinquency and unrest.

Even if unemployed young workers remain relatively passive, there's trouble ahead unless there are jobs. Prof. Philip M. Hauser, chairman of the University of Chicago's sociology department, recently explained what could happen.

The bulge in new workers coming at a time of automation and high unemployment, may constitute a major challenge to the stability of the U. S. economy which has been seen as a major beneficiary of population growth.

Young workers without jobs may not marry but may double up with their parents. Instead of providing stimulus to the economy, they may become a drag upon further growth.

The answer, of course, is to provide wealth-creating jobs. The age of automation must not be permitted to produce surpluses of people as well as goods and foodstuffs.

Conway Named

President Kennedy has named Jack Conway, executive assistant to IUD Pres. Reuther, and Roland M. Sawyer, housing consultant to the United Steelworkers of America, as two of the eight public members on his Committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing. The eight public members will join seven Kennedy Administration officials and former Gov. David Lawrence of Pennsylvania. The Committee is charged with helping to implement last November's executive order barring discrimination in federally financed housing.

Radical Right Organization Calls Tune for Congressmen

The far right called the tune last month and 147 members of Congress joined the dance. Seven more who were honored refused to take part in festivities.

Honors were conferred by Americans for Constitutional Action, headed by Ben Moreell, a retired admiral. Awards were based upon an ACA voting record and anybody who voted for anything truly humanitarian was automatically excluded.

Awards were presented to the 147 for preserving "the integrity" of the Constitution. Winning 100 percent in the ACA voting record were: Sens. A. Willis Robertson (D., Va.), Strom Thurmond (D., S. C.), Barry Goldwater (R., Ariz.) and Reps. Paul Findley (R., Ill.), Ralph Beerman (R., Nebr.), Glenard P. Lipscomb (R., Calif.), Clarence E. Kilburn (R., N. Y.), John Bell Williams (D., Miss.), Donald C. Bruce (R., Ind.), John M. Ashbrook (R., Ohio), Joe D. Waggoner, Jr. (D., La.), August E. Johansen (R., Mich.), H. Allen Smith (R., Calif.), Elmer J. Hoffman (R., Ill.), Bruce Alger (R., Texas).

Others rating over 90 percent in the ACA scale included such solons as Sens. Harry C. Byrd (D., Va.), Wallace F. Bennett (R., Utah), Norris Cotton (R., N. H.), John J. Williams (R., Del.), Karl E. Mundt (R., Nebr.), Reps. Charles M. Teague (R., Calif.), Frank T. Bow (R., Ohio), James B. Utt (R., Calif), and at least a dozen others.

Seven conservatives declining ACA awards were: Sen. Frank Lausche (D., Ohio), and Republican Reps. Leon H. Gavin (Pa.), John Kyl (Iowa), Charles A. Mosher (Ohio), Richard Schweiker (Pa.), Robert P. Griffin (Mich.), and Fred Schwengel (Iowa).

ACA was blasted on the House floor by Reps. Ronald Cameron (D., Calif.), and John Brademas (D., Ind.). Cameron, who defeated John Bircher John H. Rousselot, denounced ACA and other rightist groups for spreading hate and fear. He pointed out that half of top ACA officers are also leaders of the John Birch Society and that a fifth of its financial support comes from Birchites.

Brademas quoted from a book, The Far Right, which found that the Birch Society is "more effectively subversive" than the Communist Party.

Earlier, Sen. Thomas Kuchel (R., Calif.) had denounced the radical right as "fright peddlers" in a Senate speech which has won wide praise and notice.

Kuchel blasted the outpouring of "fright" mail he has received charging that the nation is being sold out to the Communists, that Red Chinese troops are in Mexico, that the United Nations stands poised to take over the U. S. by force, and other related nonsense.

"It is disgusting," Sen. Kuchel said, "to find self-appointed saviors whether infantile or cunning, preying profitably on the fears of Americans in the name of anti-Communism."

Rightists Drive to Change Shape of U.S. Democracy

Right-wing elements are driving hard to change the shape of the American democracy with three proposed constitutional amendments being pushed in state legislatures.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council has alerted all unions and AFL-CIO central bodies to the danger. It has urged maximum opposition wherever the proposed amendments are put forth.

The amendments are being pushed by the General Assembly of the States, a rural dominated group. Its chairman is W. Stewart Helm, speaker of the Pennsylvania House and an employee of Sun Oil. Spark-plug of the group, which is acting through the Council of State Governments, is William V. Chappell, Jr., a former speaker of the Florida House of Representatives.

The St. Petersburg Times recently reported that $12,500 of state money had been used in the drive under authorization of Mallory Horne, the current House speaker.

Last December, the General Assembly of the States began to push its three amendments. They have since been introduced in 32 state legislatures. The AFL-CIO Council has asserted that their purpose is to establish rural minority control over the nation "to implement the political and economic program of reactionary big business."

A first amendment would change the method of amending the U. S. Constitution. It would provide for amendment by the legislatures of three-fourths of the states without approval by Congress or a national convention as now required. As little as 15 percent of the population could, in effect, change the Constitution because of rural dominated legislatures.

The second amendment would deprive the federal courts of the right to require the states to reapportion. This would permit flagrant gerrymandering, and rural control to be foisted on the nation forever.

The third amendment would permit the Supreme Court to be overruled by a so-called "Court of the Union," consisting of the 50 State Supreme Court Chief Justices. The AFL-CIO has termed this a "Court of Disunion."

The court amendment has been approved by Florida, Alabama, Arkansas, and Wyoming. The reapportionment amendment has had approval in Arkansas, Idaho, Kansas, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming. The method of amending the Constitution has been approved in Arkansas, Florida, Idaho, Illinois, Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, South Dakota, and Wyoming.

Chief Justice Warren has spoken out against this current madness from the right. The Bar Association has finally condemned two of the proposed amendments. In New Jersey, Gov. Richard J. Hughes and Sen. Clifford Case have warned that the amendments could be used to disenfranchise Negroes, and the State Senate has just canceled its previous approval of two of the amendments.

Sudden publicity on the amendments plus leadership against them from responsible officials and labor has resulted in a new setback in Ohio where the apportionment amendment was turned back by the defection of a GOP state senator whose vote was needed to get it out of committee. In Pennsylvania, Gov. Scranton has indicated his opposition.

Approval of 34 states is required to force the calling of a Constitutional Convention. This is the objective of the rightists in the present drive. Even W. Stewart Helm has expressed doubt that approval will be achieved in more than 25 states now that the nation is alerted.

Teachers Press For Bargaining

Detroit teachers, members of Local 231, American Federation of Teachers, are seeking collective bargaining rights.

The teachers' local is circulating petitions in the schools which are expected to gain tremendous support. The local expects to present the petitions to the school board in the near future. They ask a collective bargaining election similar to that conducted in New York City

Meanwhile, in Illinois, the state House of Representatives has enacted a bill which would permit collective bargaining for teachers and other public employes. The bill now awaits action in the state Senate where it has been reported out of committee by a 13-8 vote, despite school administrator opposition.

The Chicago Federation of Teachers is already pressing for collective bargaining. Dr. Benjamin Willis, city school superintendent, is fighting the proposal. The Chicago teachers will rebut Willis in a new appearance before the Board of Education shortly.

HEADS LABEL DEPARTMENT. Mrs. Min Mathieson, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., was recently named by Ladies Garment Worker Pres. David Dubinsky to head the ILGWU Union Label Department. Mrs. Mathieson has worked in the field of organization, has a Scottish husband, two college student daughters, and a "professional background like a Hitchcock thriller."

UAW Local Rejects Wage Reduction

United Auto Workers Local 137 and officials of the Gibson Refrigerator Division of the Hupp Company renewed talks late last month in a dispute over company wage cut demands bolstered by a threat to move from its Greenville, Mich., location to Mississippi.

The company arbitrarily demanded that UAW members take a 29-cent an hour cut in pay if they wanted to keep their jobs. Nearly all the 1,300 members of the local turned out and voted 1,294 to nothing to reject Gibson's "final offer."

The company "offer" came after a year of talks. Hupp is in excellent financial condition and made $4 million last year against $2.3 million the year before.

Following the union rejection of the company "offer," Mich. Gov. Romney called upon both sides to meet in private for a one-week cooling-off period. Finally, after a series of meetings, "some progress" was reported by the press.

The company originally demanded cuts in wages and fringes of 47 cents an hour. It then scaled down its demand to 29 cents. Gibson wages are already well below those paid by Kelvinator.

UAW Regional Dir. Ken Robinson had recommended that the local turn down the cut. He said that the company's position "boils down" to a demand for low wages because it can make even higher profits in low-wage Mississippi.

SPECIAL ATLANTA

TO ATLANTA BUSINESS AND CIVIC LEADERS:

The "People's Association For Selective Shopping" (organized less than six months and now operating with active members in ten states) urges that there be no further surrender to the Communist inspired lawless racial agitators, within the Atlanta area business community.

Very soon our organization will be operating effectively in most of the United States; and with our largest membership in Georgia-we want to assure Atlanta business and civic leaders that we will concentrate our efforts on Atlanta business concerns that surrender to the racial agitators. We are fed up with the business leader and the public official who for the sake of a dollar would destroy the "American Free Enterprise System" and representative government.

Our rapidly expanding Georgia membership will be fully informed of those business houses such as Stouffer's Restaurants in The Atlanta Trading Mart Building, The Peachtree Manor Hotel, Hilton Inn, Rich's Department Store, Colonial Bread Company, and other concerns that are leaders in the surrender to racial integration, and racial amalgamation that is sure to follow.

Let all who read this understand that if there is a general break through of integration in the hotels, motels, restaurants and other business concerns in Atlanta--"PASS" will immediately activate a massive and never ending campaign to keep all "PASS" members and supporters from doing any shopping, whatsoever, in downtown Atlanta. In addition to our purpose to protect and preserve racial identity, our fight is to help preserve the "American Free Enterprise System", that we may as a free people continue to enjoy freedom and liberty generated from this system.

We have provided you with information concerning "PASS" that you might be fully informed and in a better position to determine the policies of your company.

KLAN CHIEF URGES SAVANNAH RALLY

Georgians Told 'Antidote for Poison Is Poison'

By CLAUDE SITTON
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, Ga., July 7 — The leader of Georgia's Ku Klux Klan has called for a mass demonstration by 50,000 whites at Savannah on July 20 and a return to "fighting" principles.

Calvin F. Craig of Atlanta, grand dragon of the Georgia Realm of the United Klan of America, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, spoke here last night to a rally of 300 persons on the city's outskirts.

In a reference to the current racial crisis in Savannah over mass Negro protest marches, he said:

"The antidote for poison is poison."

Mr. Craig said Klan members from Georgia, South Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama and Florida would participate in the Savannah rally. It will be followed by a march downtown.

"Why don't you good people get a motorcade and come down to Savannah?" he urged his audience.

Some responded with shouts of "We'll be there."

'Self-Preservation' Matter

"Let's make Savannah, Georgia, the biggest, the gigantic-est rally that's ever been held," Mr. Craig said.

"I do not believe in violence but I do believe in self-preservation," he declared.

"Now is the time to get back in the race and get this fight back on the road," he continued. "It's always been a fighting organization—you can check on the history of the Klan."

Mr. Craig attacked the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, a Negro civil rights organization.

"Martin Luther King says he's willing to violate any law that he doesn't think is just," he said.

"Well, I look at it this way: It's about time to start violating some of these rules these communities have passed to protect these niggers."

Expects Protection

"We are going to demonstrate in any city that we take a notion to demonstrate in and we're going to expect the full protection of the laws," he asserted.

Mr. Craig told his listeners they should not allow the presence of Negro demonstrators to discourage them from patronizing businesses.

"If these niggers here in Dougherty County lays down in front of a store, don't walk around them," he said. "Step on 'em and go on in there and trade with that man!"

Judge Clayton Jones of the Albany City court spoke before Mr. Craig. The jurist contended that anti-segregation demonstrations were Communist-inspired.

"Don't think that those people there in the North are not aroused equally with you in Georgia," he said.

"This is a nationwide matter that is being fostered by the Communists in Russia. Russia! The Machiavellian hand of Khrushchev is behind this agitation."

Judge Jones called on the audience to "hurl back that black tide that's trying to engulf you and take over this country."

He said that the Negroes' objective was intermarriage.

'White Faces' to Trust

The judge said he did not have long to live.

"But I hope that God will grant me the power to come back," he went on. "And when I do, may I still see white faces in the positions of trust, not black faces."

"Understand, my fellow hearers," Judge Jones said in conclusion, "this is your country here. And if it is worth living in, it's worth fighting for, and if it's worth fighting for, it's worth dying for."

The rally here, one of many held across the South in recent weeks by the Klan, took place in a clearing of a vacant field.

A red pick-up truck stood by the roadside at the entrance. On its side was the message, "K.K.K. Ralley Johnson Rd. Tonight 8:00 p'clock."

Other signs read, "Positively 'no' alcoholic beverage. K.K.K."

Most of the audience arrived in farm trucks and old model automobiles. However, there also were a number of foreign cars and new American models. Several women held children in their arms.

Fifty members in sheets formed a circle around a cross, which was made of 8-inch steel pipes shrouded in oil - soaked burlap and hoisted into place by a farm tractor.

As a Klansman lighted a torch to it, the public address system carried a recording of "The Old Rugged Cross."

Klan Chieftains Order Fight on Desegregation

Resist Imp. of KKK

By Don McKee

ATLANTA, July 9 (AP)—Ku Klux Klan leaders today said the robed order is launching a large-scale campaign of white resistance to desegregation throughout the South and in other parts of the Nation.

The credo of the new Klan move will be one of nonviolence, but self-protection.

Klan leaders said their methods would include marching demonstrations, rallies, economic reprisals and white voter registration drives. In recent months, the Klan has been generally inactive.

"The thing we've got to do is shock people into reality," said Imperial Wizard Robert M. Shelton Jr. of Tuscaloosa, Ala.

Georgia's grand dragon, Calvin F. Craig of Atlanta, voiced a more ominous assessment of the racial conflict:

"The Negroes are not going to be satisfied until we have open racial war in this country . . . One race will have to dominate."

Savannah March Set

Shelton and Craig belong to the United Klans of America, Inc., Knights of the Ku Klux Klan. They say their order is the only authentic Klan.

Craig, 35, tall and heavy set, said the Klan would stage a street march July 20 in Savannah, Ga., where Negroes have been conducting demonstrations against segregation.

"I certainly hope no Negroes throw rocks," Craig said.

"I don't necessarily mean we'll take a violent stand, but if the State can't protect citizens, we'll band together to protect ourselves."

Craig said he would not encourage violence, "but I'm going to encourage self-protection. The white people have been trampled on — a man can't even operate his own business in an orderly manner."

Throughout Georgia, he said, he found the majority of white men "almost ready to take up arms."

Craig, formerly in the dry-cleaning business, declined to say what his occupation is for fear of reprisals against his family.

50,000 a Week Is Aim

Shelton, also 35, a mild-mannered and slightly built man, said the Klan would try to reach at least 50,000 persons a week in public rallies.

Three rallies were held Saturday night in Gadsden, Ala.; Albany, Ga., and Jacksonville, Fla. Shelton said three to five rallies a week were planned during the next two months in Georgia, Florida, North Carolina, Alabama, Louisiana, Texas and Tennessee.

Giant rallies are planned July 27 in Jacksonville, and Aug. 17 in Spartanburg, S. C., Shelton said.

The imperial wizard said the Klan was expanding its activities in the North and the Midwest.

"They're not in the open in the North because of economic reprisals," Shelton said. "They are not identified as Klan organizations, but are operating on the same principles.

"We have pretty broad coverage now in 34 states."

Shelton, a former rubber plant worker, now devotes full time to the Klan.

Give Broad Goal

Both Klan officials said their fight was not confined to segregation but was aimed also at preserving "the constitutional form of government and keeping it from buckling under to a military dictatorship of the Kennedys."

Shelton said Georgia State officials have done nothing to stop Negro demonstrations and desegregation. He said he hoped the march planned at Savannah would "encourage white people all over the country."

"We're almost in a revolution," he said.

"All you need is a spark."

Maddox and 33 Businessmen Set Up Anti-Integration Group

By JOHN HERITAGE

Some 34 Atlanta businessmen met twenty-nine Wednesday night at the Henry Grady Hotel to form what was described by restaurateur Lester Maddox as a conservative "Independent Business Association."

The group will represent businessmen ranging from barbers to doctors who aren't being given a "voice" in Atlanta civic organizations and city hall, Maddox said in his remarks to the meeting.

The gathering was apparently in reaction to a recent decision by some Atlanta hotels, motels and restaurants to integrate.

Maddox said the group that its members "don't have to be publicly known . . . they don't even have to join a membership if they want to support it otherwise." Shortly after Maddox made that remark, one man handed another some paper money and left.

Henry Grady manager Emory Crenshaw, who has said his hotel would maintain a policy of segregation, and Pickrick owner Maddox were at the head table at the meeting.

Maddox said he hoped the group would "pull together" and lend its support to other organizations who want to publicize their side of the integration debate.

The Pickrick owner said it was reported to him that four businesses had decided Wednesday to withdraw themselves from the recent integration agreement. He did not name them.

Maddox said the integration agreement had brought a 30-day truce on Negro demonstrations, but that "it won't be but a few weeks" before the demonstrations resume—asking for more integration.

Shortly after Maddox had finished speaking, a man in the audience suggested that everyone at the meeting introduce themselves. A Southwest Atlanta dentist and a druggist gave their names. Then Crenshaw interrupted to tell if any reporters were in the audience. A Constitution reporter identified himself, but Henry Grady manager Crenshaw asked him to "leave the premises."

White Group Sets Up A 'NAAWP' Chapter

Cin. Coust. 7/15/63

CINCINNATI (AP)—The first chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of White People was formed here Sunday.

William E. Miller, president of the organization, said its purpose is "to promote, to aid, to sustain and defend our American form of government; to keep the general public aware of the elements which seek to impair and destroy their government; to promote the social, educational and general welfare of the Caucasian race."

Miller said the organization's name was chosen for psychological reasons. He said Negroes can join the NAAWP "if they are for constitutional government."

About 15 persons attended the meeting.

Miller said the NAAWP will apply for an official charter from the Ohio secretary of state and then will ask President John F. Kennedy to call on the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People "to stop civil disobedience."

Virginia Court Gets Charges Against 3 American Nazis

EMPORIA, Va., July 22 (AP)—Charges against George Lincoln Rockwell and two of his American Nazi followers of conspiring to incite racial violence were certified to the Greensville County Circuit Court Monday.

The next grand jury is scheduled to convene Oct. 1.

"When I think of Nazism," said County Court Judge Ralph Slagle, "I think of storm troopers . . . concentration camps."

Mr. Rockwell, Roy James, 25 years old, and Dedalus Wiley, 21, all of Arlington, are charged with "conspiring to incite the white population to acts of violence and war against the colored population."

The self-styled Nazi leader and his followers were arrested here Friday night as he was preparing to speak in front of the Emporia Town Hall.

Mr. Rockwell has been on a speaking tour of Virginia, attempting to enlist support in a counter protest to the planned march of civil rights groups on Washington Aug. 28.

Tremor in Mississippi

WHEN THE dust settled at the University of Mississippi, most eyes turned elsewhere. Accordingly, not many eyes were looking when the Mississippi Sovereignty Commission elected a new director a few days ago.

The man chosen is Erle Johnston Jr., a weekly newspaper editor whose views on segregation are about the same as those of most Mississippians.

The important thing about Johnston, however, is that recently he has been a troublesome opponent of the Citizens Councils leadership, which for two years had seemed invincible. The councils' leaders strongly opposed Johnston's election by the Sovereignty Commission.

Under Gov. J. P. Coleman, the Sovereignty Commission was the usually calm state agency which had the primary mission of saving segregation. The noisier and more irresponsible Citizens Councils organization, at its peak in statewide membership, was permitted no direct voice in state affairs.

The councils chafed under this restraint, and they turned the tables when Ross Barnett, a strong supporter of the councils, succeeded Coleman. Barnett for two years seemed to rely uncritically upon the judgment of Citizens Councils Administrator William J. Simmons, his traveling companion and adviser. The Citizens Councils even received a state subsidy of $5,000 a month.

One of the first major voices to speak against the extremist approach was Erle Johnston. It was like a thunderclap in Mississippi when, last year, Johnston rebuked the Citizens Councils and said the state must keep order and establish cooperation between whites and Negroes.

Now Johnston is director of the state's official segregation agency. In other states agencies similar to this commission have helped to make token integration eventually "respectable" to the politicians.

Mississippi is a long, long way from that, but even a small step away from violent irresponsibility is an important step.

It's Always a Good Show When These Happy Folks Get Together

Resist. Imp. WCC

By PAT WATTERS

SOMETIMES IT is better to laugh than to cry. At the meeting the other night of the Atlanta Citizens Council to hear Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett, there was much of tragedy and pathos.

The solemn preacher, Dr. John R. Richardson, Westminister Presbyterian Church, praying ("Engrave thy moral law in our hearts"), the fair-faced, fine Boy Scout leading the pledge of allegiance ("with liberty and justice for all"), the cruel humor (from Lester Maddox): "Even if you're on one of Kennedy's welfare programs, you can squeeze out a dollar a week" for the Citizens Council . . . from James Gray: "They (Negroes) asked why they could not go swimming. I said you can—just go out and buy your own swimming pool . . ."), all require ability to stop tears and anger.

MONEY

The two old men with rose buds in their lapels, out of the country, middle-class of gentle, aged gentility every neighborhood and business knows, avidly drinking it all in. . . . The money givers, including the bland-faced, doom-blocking man pledging $100 . . . the air of gleefulness, of communion . . .

It is bad to turn from these quickly to the show aspects, including the virtuoso performance of Barnett in a speech art form almost extinct, full of finger pointings and hand wigglings and bursts of words run together (the people of Mississippi) rising in a war cry.

Sociological Note: The crowd that heard General Walker earlier this year in this same room was about the same size (3,000), but more sophisticated, well-heeled. . .

Mr. Gray introduced the governor (after Mr. Maddox had started things with a fervent, eyes-bulging appeal for money for the organization), presenting Barnett as one "possessed of a keen, well-disciplined mind." Barnett began loud, a slow wind-up, fast delivery speaker, and soon he was deep in revelations of ancient history, of how Egypt was an old-time white civilization of highest order until black folk came slipping treacherously down the Nile to go to school with, dance with the Egyptian children.

He hailed the Savannah lower court ruling against school desegregation as a "real landmark," failing to say the decision was slapped down and the judge fussed at in less than a month. He deplored 25 per cent illiteracy in parts of Washington, failing to mention Negro illiteracy in his own state, or how many of the Washington illiterates might be from there.

"Mississippi has a new law this year," he cried. "Let me tell you how it works. . . ."

"Let us put our talent together," he said to this crowd of old and sprinkled very young whose chief platform claim to community leadership was Fulton County Attorney Harold Sheats . . . "put our heads together, join hands, and we can win victory."

He went on at rather great length about the "rights expressly reserved to the states by the tenth amendment," and other tenets of the 1860's. He spoke of "old Gunnar Myrdal who admits he's a socialist."

"Due process of law," cried a woman excitedly, irrelevantly, in one of his pauses. He blinked a moment, then said gravely, "You're right."

He gave the new battle cry: "Friends, a man has a right to run his business as he sees fit," and this they cheered loudest. He told of how Hitler got to power pretending to protect minorities, a startling revelation.

GOLDWATER

He wouldn't speak of Goldwater, harping instead on his unpledged elector scheme, and the crowd's cries of "Goldwater, Goldwater" seemed to indicate a split in the seeming solidarity. This was confounded by the hiss of one of the faithful at the mention of Goldwater: ". . . That damned Jew."

It was best to attend to these entertainment aspects of the meeting, and not think too much about the shoving of Negro-movement pickets on the sidewalk beforehand, or of the Atlanta cop yelling at the white crowd, "I don't care what you do as long as you keep moving. I don't do this because I want to . . ." or of the terrible irony of Barnett charging that normal America has a controlled press and police rule. Keep smiling. Mississippi can't happen here.

Viva Barnett, Segregationist Tells Meeting Told

Resist. Imp. WCC

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 10 (AP)—The chairman of Louisiana's joint legislative committee on segregation says the country needs people like Gov. Ross Barnett of Mississippi and Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas.

State Rep. John Garrett, addressing a citizens council meeting last night, criticized the Kennedy administration for displaying "a great deal more enthusiasm in sending troops to Mississippi than stopping communism.

"If this train of federal thought is not changed," Garrett said, "there will be no state government within five years. And if America is to survive, state sovereignty must be preserved."

ANOTHER SPEAKER, Melvin Bruce, a 35-year-old Georgia trucker arrested after the University of Mississippi campus riot, told of his 54 days of imprisonment.

"Since 1948, I have been a self-informed student of communism," said Bruce, a World War II disabled war veteran from Decatur. "I have read many books on the subject and what I experienced at Oxford, Miss., was communism at work."

Bruce said sometime after he was arrested on Oct. 1, he was taken to an open compound enclosed with wire without sanitary facilities and practically no food. He said it was freezing weather and said no measures were taken to protect those held.

HE SAID he was taken to the Memphis, Tenn., jail where all visitors were refused except his wife. He was released on $35,000 bond the day after Thanksgiving.

"Many of the marshals," he said, "were federal prison guards accustomed to dealing with hardened criminals instead of young college boys and girls."

Bruce is charged with interference with federal officers in performance of their duties, conspiracy to impede officers, rebellion and insurrection, and conspiracy to oppose the authority of the United States.

A MASSIVE SOL...

Mr. Cook and the KKK

Resist. Orgs.

ALTHOUGH THE courts have held that no state may usurp federal prerogatives in dealing with subversive activity against the United States government, some states continue to dabble opportunistically in this field.

We consequently cannot avoid a sense of doubt about a new action by Georgia's attorney general. Mr. Eugene Cook says he is investigating the Dorchester Center, a foundation-financed, church-related voter registration school operated by Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

The explanation of Mr. Cook's inquiry suggests he expects to find evidence of Communist activity. That is the job of the federal government, and it is doing the job.

The record in witch-hunting by state officials is already bleak. It undoubtedly has worried responsible people concerned with the delicate business of national security.

But there is one other aspect of the Cook undertaking that really confounds us. It is the disclosure that the attorney general has sent a telegram to the leader of the Ku Klux Klan saying this:

"Have tried several times to reach you by phone. . . . Two agents and I are leaving today for on-the-spot investigation of Dorchester College, Liberty County, operations. Will advise upon completion of investigation."

Since when does the attorney general of Georgia tell the Klan that he has been laboring to get in touch with it and will "advise upon completion of investigation"?

The Ku Klux Klan's sudden apparent respectability in Mr. Cook's eyes belies the fact that, in one form or another, it repeatedly has been on official lists of subversive organizations.

Do subversive organizations, sick and ineffective though their remnants may be, tell our attorney general who is subversive these days?

This constant and quite often violent agitation for integration is quite definitely backed by the communists and socialists. They are dedicated to a classless Society, and this classless society can not be attained until there is complete and total integration to the point of intermarriage (amalgamation).

The integration of all public accomadations are merely steps toward the final goal of amalgamation of the races resulting in a nation of mulattoes.

Integrating the restaurants is another move forward toward this satonic goal.

Integration of the schools was the first step toward this end. This was followed by integrating public transportation, rest rooms, public parks, golf courses, public libraries, theatres, swimming pools, housing, hotels, integration of work forces resulting in the displacement of white people in favor of negroes is fast being pushed. The integration of barber shops and beauty salons will probably be next.

William Z. Foster, former national chairman of the communist party of the United States of America, in his book "Toward a Soviet America" had the following to say about integration:

"The party lays the utmost stress upon its demands for the negroes. It demands full economic, political and social equality for them; it fights to eliminate the entire system of discrimination to which negroes are subjected in industry, in the distribution of unemployment relief, in segregated dwelling districts, in hotels and restaurants, in trade unions, in the courts, in political activities:"

"Communist action is based upon the slogan of "Class Against Class:"

"The communist party, alone of all the political parties, fights for the liberation of the negro --"

"In a Soviet system, the negro will have the most complete equality - economically, politically, socially. The doors to every occupation, to every social activity will be wide open for him. He will have ample land confiscated from the great white landlords." Editors Note - It is quite clear that the Democratic Party at the behest of John F. Kennedy and brother Bobby and other ultra-liberals have adopted the principles of the foregoing.

"The American Soviet will, of course, abolish all restrictions upon racial intermarriage."

" --Contact between these two races, bred of modern industrialization, is just as irresistibly breaking down these racial differences and bringing about racial amalgamation."

The communist party is working hard to have repealed all laws forbidding miscegenation (intermarriage).

The N.A.A.C.P. has as one of their objectives the repeal of all laws forbidding miscegenation.

The United Church of Christ held a youth forum at Clark College here in Atlanta in June. According to an article in the June 24, 1963 edition of the Atlanta Journal "Rev." Archie Hargraves of New York spoke to this group and stated: "Marriage without reference to color represents the major breakthrough to the integration problems of the nation."

The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity" of which one "Rev." John B. Morris, a long time member of the N.A.A.C.P. and who has seen the inside of numerous jails, is executive director, distributed a pamphlet stating that commingling between the races had a tendency to cause familiarity. They too would like to see amalgamation of the races.

Interbreeding of the races is the objective! Is this what you want? Do you want your son or daughter, grandson, granddaughter or sisters to marry a negro?

If you do not, then you must do your part in stopping this satonic push for integration now!

Do not eat at any of the restaurants appearing on the attached black list:

Editors Note - It is not implied in any manner that any of these restaurant owners are communists or a conscious part of their conspiracy. Quite to the contrary, they are good Americans misled and/or pushed to this satonic deed.

There are plenty of other restaurants available that have remained segregated, just look for them. Eat at any restaurant not appearing on this black list. If there is not one convenient - then pack your lunch from home.

Do not eat at any of the following restaurants:

Herren's - 24 Luckie St. NW (A ringleader for race-mixing and bragged about it.)

S&W Cafeteria - 189 Peachtree Street

The New Know-Nothings

THE RADICAL RIGHT. Edited by Daniel Bell. Doubleday, $4.95.

✦ LEADING historians, sociologists and political scientists here collaborate to produce what is in this reviewer's judgment the most satisfactory description and explanation so far of our country's radical right in its present phase. The bulk of the book consists of revisions of essays from a 1955 volume, The New American Right, which dealt with the McCarthyite phase of the movement; in this revised version the authors criticize and expand their earlier analyses and interpretations. In addition one new chapter discusses the John Birch Society and another compares the social climates of England and America in relation to rightism. The authors are Daniel Bell, Richard Hofstadter, David Riesman, Nathan Glazer, Peter Viereck, Talcott Parsons, Alan F. Westin, Herbert H. Hyman, Seymour M. Lipset; these men could not produce an inconsequential book if they tried.

The essays provide convincing evidence that confusions and insecurities within conservative ranks concerning the changes taking place in American life are at the root of the new radicalism—a radicalism ready to discard constitutional processes and to suspend civil liberties to "save the American way of life from communism." As Westin points out in regard to the Birchers, what has emerged is a new kind of fundamentalism. Among the new development's characteristics: (1) It assumes that simple solutions to any problem are possible and believes that failure to arrive at solutions must be due to conspiratorial activity. (2) It contends that the conspirators are the accepted leaders of churches, unions, political parties, the press—and even some leaders of the business community. (3) Adherents of the new radicalism reject and distrust our nation's political system, believing it incapable of coping with communism. (4) The new radicals spurn all social and economic programs for dealing with international problems and demand vague apocalyptic solutions on a crash basis. (5) They urge "direct action" to circumvent the conspiracies they imagine —action which generally adds up to hate campaigns.

Several of the book's contributors acknowledge that since 1955 they have discovered how large a part fundamentalism and political revivalism have come to play in the emergence of the radical right. Prof. Hofstadter, for example, admits that while in 1955 he could see only small effects resulting from fundamentalism, he would now insist that its role is "very large indeed." "To understand the Manichaean style of thought, the apocalyptic tendencies, the love of mystification, the intolerance of compromise that are observable in the right-wing mind, we need to understand the history of fundamentalism as well as the contributions of depth psychology." Lack of more careful examination of the factor of fundamentalism is an omission in this otherwise knowledgeable book.

THE WINE IS BITTER: THE UNITED STATES AND LATIN AMERICA. By Milton S. Eisenhower. Doubleday, $4.95.

✦ THIS BOOK is an important addition to the study of inter-American affairs primarily because the sayer validates the saying. Writing out of a lifetime of interest in Latin America and eight years as personal representative of Pres. Dwight Eisenhower, with the rank of special ambassador to Latin America, Milton Eisenhower repeats much that is now well known to informed students of U.S.-Latin American history. In 1953 Pres. Eisenhower asked his brother Milton "to get a broad view of the conditions which affect the total relations of the United States with the republics of Latin America. Keep an open mind and consider what we can do, what policy changes or programs will be necessary, to unify the republics of this hemisphere." The Wine Is Bitter is the first public summary of the eight-year study and of the author's involvement in inter-American events immediately following his official appointment.

What is old in this report—the despair, anger and bitterness of oppressed and humiliated Latin Americans; the contribution United States imperialism made to that condition and that mood; the rising spirit of revolution sweeping through Latin America—gains authenticity from the scholarly objectivity of the reporter. What is new adds substantial data to what is well known. I found Eisenhower's description of the economic complexity of U.S.-Latin American relations illuminating and his narration of the abortive Tractors for Freedom episode both informative and absorbing. Furthermore, the author's compassion, his genuine affection for Latin Americans, his detachment from party-line politics, his refusal to romanticize Latin American reactions to U.S. policy, his understanding of the Latin American spirit and his genuine devotion to policies which will "unify the republics of this hemisphere" make this a book which should be read not only in this country but also south of the border, where Milton Eisenhower won many friends for himself and the United States and where the Alliance for Progress now gives Latin Americans what may be their last free choice.

THE UNITED CHURCH OF CHRIST. By Douglas Horton. Thomas Nelson, $4.00.

✦ THIS STORY of a highly significant ecclesiastical wedding—that between the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church—unfolds dramatically with the new denomination's constitution as guideline. Author Horton, former dean of Harvard Divinity School, describes the constitution of the United Church of Christ as "seasoned wisdom in a courageous mood." With like wisdom he puts spirit of life and breath into the constitution's provisions and describes how the United Church serves humankind.

Never was such a union consummated in all church history, what with several previous mergers on both sides and a diversity of ecclesiastical backgrounds. Congregational roots are deeply embedded in the rich soils of English, colonial and Pilgrim custom and thought; the Evangelical and Reformed Church, presbyterian in form and emerging from continental Europe, reflects the influence of Calvin, Luther and Zwingli. Writes Horton: "The United Church of Christ is Presbyterian in its legislative function, Episcopal in its administrative system, and Congregational in its judicial branch." The two bodies did not unite to stay alive;

No. 15—63 July 29, 1963

DRAFT GOLDWATER LEADER OLD HAND ON THE RIGHT

One of the prime movers in the Draft Goldwater Committee, agitating for the GOP presidential nomination for the Arizona senator, is its chairman, Peter O'Donnell. He carries an impeccable right wing pedigree. O'Donnell is an advisory board member of Young Americans for Freedom, a collection of young Tories who have declared the 20th Century unacceptable. O'Donnell shares advisory board billing with several members of the John Birch Society and other rightist leaders.

He also is a trustee of the Intercollegiate Society of Individualists, an educational rather than political right wing group. Its trustee board and advisory board, too, abound with John Birchers, among them Clarence Manion, Bonner Fellers, J. Bracken Lee and others. O'Donnell is on the contributions policy committee of the American Security Council which provides a blacklisting service for industry; and he is trustee of American Enterprise Association, another dedicated band of rightists.

WAIT NO MORE—ACA VOTING RECORDS ARE OUT

The world has been waiting for it in hushed expectation, and here it is! It's the right-wing Americans for Constitutional Action box score on freshmen congressmen and senators for the first six months of the 88th Congress. ACA gave top ratings to legislators voting against such proposals as additional funds for area redevelopment, mass transportation, youth conservation corps, feed grains program, debt limit increase, among others.

The big home run hitters with perfect ACA batting averages are three GOP senators, Dominick (Colo.), Mechem (N.M.), and Simpson (Wyo.), and 19 representatives, all Republicans.

The villains, with flat zero ratings by ACA, are Senators Gaylord Nelson (Wisc.) and Ted Kennedy (Mass.), both Democrats, and 24 members of the House, all Democrats.

KENNEDY OUTPACES TOP GOP TRIO

The latest Gallup Poll shows President Kennedy running far ahead of any of the three most frequently mentioned GOP presidential nominees. If the election were held today, according to Gallup, JFK would trounce Barry Goldwater, 60 percent to 34, with six percent undecided. It would be the President over Nelson Rockefeller, 63-30-7, and over George Romney, 59-33-8.

HUMAN EVENTS PARLEY MAPS RIGHTIST TAKE-OVER OF GOP

Like humidity and hay-fever, the right-wing Human Events Political Action Conference has become an annual summer irritant. Some 600 ultra-conservatives flocked to the recent parley in Washington to be stirred by a squadron of good patriots, headed by Barry Goldwater, Sen. Strom Thurmond, Adm. Ben Moreell and other rightist leaders and legislators.

Among the patriotic outbursts that roused delegates were: we could run the United Nations "if we could get idiots like Stevenson out"; "We ought to let (Red China into the UN) and they can have our seat"; "The Democrats have become the socialist party of the United States"; "JFK, we shall bury you."

Behind the pep-rally slogans, however, were hard-headed schemes to harness the energies and efforts of rank-and-file right-wingers into political action. An open pitch was made for ultra-conservatives to capture control of the GOP as a stepping-stone to success in presidential and congressional elections.

This came in the form of a blueprint for take-over of party apparatus, and seminars on political tactics conducted by successful rightist candidates.

All in all, the tenor of the conference seemed to bear out the words of New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller when he warned his party: ". . . the vociferous, extremist elements are embarked on a determined and ruthless effort to take over the party, its platform and its candidates on their own terms. . . .

"I am now convinced that . . . the Republican Party is in real danger of subversion by a radical, well-financed and highly-disciplined minority. . . . One must be either for or against these forces. The time for temporizing is over."

VERY NICE OF YOU, SENATOR . . . NOW WILL YOU KINDLY REMOVE THE KNIFE

"The (head of) the American Communist Party is urging the defeat of all Republicans in 1964. . . . He found much that was praiseworthy . . . with the approach of the New Frontier.

"I am not suggesting that Democrats are communists. And I am not suggesting that the Communist Party has captured control of the Democratic Party. I am not saying that anyone on the New Frontier is a communist. I am merely giving you the Communist Party official appraisal of American political parties and its proposals for action in 1964."—Sen. Barry Goldwater, addressing right-wing Human Events political action conference in Washington, July 12, 1963.

AND IN THIS CORNER . . . .

The Christian Science Monitor is reviving Richard Nixon as a potential GOP presidential nominee. Its New York bureau chief, Godfrey Sperling, sees the possibility of Goldwater and Rockefeller knocking off one another, paving the way for a Nixon-Kennedy rematch.

Floyd Patterson had a rematch, too.

BEHIND THE BALMY BIRCH SOCIETY SLOGANS: A PRACTICAL, EFFECTIVE PROGRAM OF ACTION

(The Political Memo of July 1, 1963, carried quotes from the John Birch Society "Blue Book," revealing the mind of the right wing. Below, also taken from the "Blue Book," is the JBS program, revealing the method.)

1. First we would establish reading rooms . . . in just as many of the cities, towns, and villages of this country as we could, just as rapidly as we could.

2. Second . . . we would see that the circulation of the conservative periodicals was expanded as rapidly as it could be done. . .

3. We would do everything we could to support, maintain, increase the number of stations used, and widen the audiences of, such radio programs as those of Fulton Lewis, Clarence Manion, and dozens of more localized broadcasters throughout the country.

4. We would institute . . . full and effectively coordinated use of the powerful letter-writing weapon that lies so ready at hand. There should be a continuous, overwhelming flood of letters, not just to legislators or the executive departments in Washington, but to newspaper editors, television and radio sponsors, educators, lecturers, state legislators and politicians, foundation-heads and everybody else whose opinions, actions, and decisions count for anything.

5. We would organize fronts—little fronts, big fronts, temporary fronts, permanent fronts, all kinds of fronts.

A part of this same operation is the gathering of petitions, local petitions, national petitions, dealing with political matters, economic matters, education matters and everything under the sun.

6. . . . we would start shocking the American people . . . into a realization . . . how far and how completely Communists and Communist influences have crept right into communities, institutions, and activities where the general public does not have the slightest suspicion of such infiltration.

Some really dramatic exposures would be worth a lot . . . We would run in the Birch Society magazine an article consisting entirely of questions to the man singled out for exposure, which would be devastating in their implications. The question technique, when skillfully used in this way, is mean and dirty. But the Communists we are after are meaner and dirtier. . . .

7. . . . . There are now dozens of slimy characters at loose in our midst, whom I'll (JBS chief Robert Welch) call to your attention by describing one who is more or less typical.

(A lengthy section follows explaining how John Birchers can disrupt a meeting of their opponents by attending the meeting, sitting apart from one another and shooting embarrassing questions at the speaker. By doing this, says Welch, ". . . we could silence them with comparative ease.")

8. We would line up a large list of speakers. . . . Then we would go to work putting together the huge lists of church clubs, P.T.A. groups, and others who use such speakers, and start making known to them who was available on what subjects.

9. . . . For many reasons we would start extending our body into other countries. . .

10. Finally, and probably most important of all these courses of action, we would put our weight into the political scales in this country just as fast and far as we could.

BARRY BOOSTS BIRCHERS

Here's Barry Goldwater's analysis of the John Birch Society and its members:

"These are intelligent people who are doing an effective job of calling attention to the dangers of communism."—Milwaukee Journal, June 24, 1962.

"They aren't doing any harm."—Washington Star, Feb. 15, 1962.

"You frightened people amuse me when your knees tremble at the mention of an organization whose major sin is being against communism."—Washington Post, March 3, 1962.

KENNEDY'S SHAMEFUL PROPOSAL

By Silas Moore, Editor

John Fitzgerald Kennedy has recently topped all of his previous efforts to lead, entice, or drag America down the road toward totalitarianism. He has proposed federal legislation which would smash the basic right of a man to determine who may be admitted to his property. The new bill would invent a new "right" alien to the highest concepts of western civilization. It would invent the right to trespass.

A civil right is a right specified by a valid law. Therefore, it is totally incorrect to describe "sit-ins" at private establishments and other demonstrations against property rights as "civil rights demonstrations." Many agitators, politicians, and newsmen flagrantly misuse the term to further their collectivist aims.

Other words which leftists have tried to redefine are "public" and "private." The confusion peddlers would have us believe that when an enterpriser opens his doors for trade, he automatically forfeits property rights, and his private establishment becomes akin to a public city street. Nonsense!

"We reserve the right to refuse service to anyone." This writer once read those familiar words on the menu of a Chinese restaurant in Pasadena, California. And why not? That simple statement succinctly expresses a vital principle of the free, capitalist society.

We are proud that Georgia's senior Senator, Richard B. Russell, is leading the freedom fighters in battle against J.F.K.'s shameful proposal. In a magnificent 900-word reply to the Chief Executive's radio-TV speech Senator Russell said that "the President of the United States has a higher call to leadership than to use threats of mass violence and disregard of reasonable local laws as a means of securing action in the courts and legislatures, however laudatory it may regard his to be."

Senator Russell also made this observation: "The outstanding distinction between a government of free men and a socialistic or communistic state is the fact that free men can own and control property, whereas statism denies property rights."

That the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution has been twisted before does not justify Kennedy's attempt to introduce a far more monstrous distortion. The Challenger supports whatever legal means are necessary to prevent the enactment of his terrible legislation.

GEORGIA YOUNG REPUBLICANS VOTE RIGHT

An outspoken Goldwater supporter has been elected chairman of the Georgia Federation of Young Republican Clubs. Meeting in Atlanta on May 11, the YR convention chose Allen Jones over a self-styled "moderate" opponent.

Mr. Jones told The Challenger that he believes all of Georgia's delegates to the '64 Republican Convention will vote for Goldwater.

ARMS AND THE CITIZEN

By James S. Davis

The United States citizen has been besieged by lawmakers for a large part of two generations. Prongs of the attack have penetrated into almost every area of free choice. One bulwark showing signs of crumbling under the blows of restrictive legislation is "the right of the people to keep and bear arms" (Bill of Rights, article II).

Many states have passed laws designed to discourage--if not prohibit--dealings in firearms by the average citizen. Many more have attempted to pass such laws. Until the last session of its legislature Georgia was free from restrictive and ambiguous gun laws.

Georgia House Bill 622 had been rejected by committees of both the House and the Senate. Nevertheless, it was pushed through both legislative bodies, the Senate passing it at the end of the session when most of its members had already gone home. Then despite great protest from Georgia citizens Governor Carl Sanders signed it into law.

In its original form Bill 622 would have required anyone selling a firearm less than fifteen inches long to purchase a $25 license and post a $1000 bond. Fortunately, protests from arms enthusiasts prompted the legislators to insert a sentence exempting individuals engaged in "casual sales."

But the bill is still ambiguous and vague. It repeatedly uses the words "any person," as well as "dealer" and "pawnbroker." A big chunk of freedom balances on the word "casual." Will the Department of Public Safety make its own interpretation?

Clifford R. Martin, president of the Georgia Arms Collectors Association, wrote the following: "Our main concern is that this bill will set a precedent for more severe laws to follow. This one, in its present ambiguous form, would be very difficult to enforce and for that reason, like the 'fire cracker law,' will be subject to changes. Remember, the 'Do Gooders' will not let up. Look out in the future for clamp-downs on ammunition, permits to buy, and registration laws."

Young Americans for Freedom and other conservatives must stand ready to defend the right to possess and enjoy firearms. As always, the price of liberty is eternal vigilance.

EMORY AND TECH SEE YAF FILM

A Generation Awakes was shown at Emory University and Georgia Tech last month. On May 16 the Emory YAF chapter presented the half-hour sound movie about Young Americans for Freedom. The film includes highlights from the mammoth YAF rally at Madison Square Garden, documents a verbal clash between YAF members and far-left "peace" propagandists, and features speeches by Goldwater, Tower, Thurmond, Buckley, and several YAF leaders.

Newly elected officers for the Emory chapter are as follows: Peery Grant, chairman; Claude Tison, vice-chairman; Spencer Howell, treasurer; Angie Stadler, corresponding secretary; and Alan Quarterman, recording secretary. Dr. Helmut Schoeck, professor of sociology, and Dr. Ralph N. Traxler, associate professor of business administration, have recently accepted positions on the chapter advisory board.

Emory YAF set up a booth on campus where students could sign a "Goldwater for President" petition between classes. Result: 250 signatures!

On May 21 Georgia Tech YAF members sponsored the screening of A Generation Awakes and the old stand-by, Operation Abolition. The audience of seventy was addressed by State Chairman Richard Wilson and Tech Chairman Edward Sullinger.

PATRIOTS--OLD AND NEW

By Richard Wilson, Chairman, Georgia YAF

Let us go back 187 years to the darkest days of the Revolutionary War.

General Washington asks for someone to go behind enemy lines and gather information. A young man volunteers, undertakes the dangerous mission, and is captured. The enemy pronounces the usual sentence for spying--death.

Beyond all hope of rescue he stands surrounded by a jeering foe, the rope already knotted around his neck. He speaks one short sentence, and it echoes down the centuries. "I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country."

Not long ago I saw his statue in a green park in New York City. With arms pinioned and throat bared, the stone likeness captures the pride and defiance of Nathan Hale.

Three years ago a modern American had the opportunity to follow in the same [illegible] tradition. He was being tried as a spy by a Soviet court. But while the world watched and listened, the American said: "I didn't know what I was doing. . . . I know now that I was risking world peace. My superiors were responsible."

Nathan Hale could have blamed George Washington, I suppose. But he did not.

Then there were the turncoats in Korea. Were they the result of years of indifference to our American heritage and apathy toward the insidious methods of Communism?

Through the efforts of Young Americans for Freedom many of our youth are renewing their love for their country, are becoming alert to the enemies we face, and are being inspired to seek victory.

"Civil rights . . . is one of the most badly [illegible] political usage. . . . As often as not, it is simply a name for describing an activity that someone deems politically or socially desirable. A sociologist writes a paper proposing to abolish some inequity, or a politician makes a speech about it--and, behold, a new 'civil right' is born! The Supreme Court has displayed the same creative powers.

"A civil right is a right that is asserted and is therefore protected by some valid law."

HORROR STORY (It can not come true in Georgia--yet.) By Silas Moore

Once upon a time there was a man named Smith. He was employed as a shoe repairman for twenty years, and by saving regularly and living frugally he finally accumulated enough capital to open his own shoe repair shop. This he did after buying a small plot of land, erecting a building, purchasing the necessary machines and materials, and hiring three assistants.

Mr. Smith was a very devout follower of the Brand X Religion. In fact, he believed that his life would be happier if his close friends and associates were fellow believers in the Brand X Religion. Therefore, the three employees in Smith's Shoe Repair Shop were chosen because they were members of Smith's church.

Not long after the grand opening an important-looking gentleman carrying a briefcase strode into the shop. The visitor gave Mr. Smith a perfunctory handshake, flashed a brief smile, and in a detached but well-modulated voice spoke the following:

"I represent the Fair Employment Practices Commission, which was established during the last session of our state legislature to eliminate discrimination in hiring because of race, color, or creed. After receiving a complaint from Mr. Wendell Johnson we made an investigation and found that you refused to hire him simply because he was a member of the Brand Z Religion rather than a believer in the Brand X Religion. Mr. Johnson has had four years of experience in shoe repairing, whereas Mr. Ernest Mills, whom you did hire, has had no previous experience in your trade at all. Clearly, you have violated state law by practicing religious discrimination, not to mention your poor business judgment demonstrated by employing the less qualified applicant. We suggest that you replace Mr. Mills with Mr. Johnson. We remind you that if you insist on not cooperating, we are empowered to bring suit to compel your compliance. What do you say, Mr. Smith?"

The graying, middle-aged enterpriser stroked his chin and stared at the bureaucrat. "Oh, well," drawled Mr. Smith philosophically, "that's the way the Republic crumbles."

"I, the undersigned, a native-born, true and loyal citizen of the United States of America, being a white male Gentile person of temperate habits, sound in mind and a believer in the tenets of the Christian religion, the maintenance of White Supremacy and the principles of a 'pure Americanism,' do most respectively [sic] apply for membership in the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan. . . ."

Almost every Saturday night this summer, somewhere in the lower South, there is a rally in vacant lot or cow pasture, city park or country field, where recruits queue up by the light of the fiery cross to sign an application like that quoted above. Just how many have done so is not known, but estimates of the total strength of the reviving Klan run from 35,000 to 60,000—a disturbing and potentially dangerous manifestation of white reaction to the Negro drive for equality. As in its heyday in the twenties, the Klan draws heavily on Southern society's left-behind status-seekers, who are attracted by the hocus-pocus and regalia of the "Invisible Empire." But for the first time in years, new Klaveliers now also include a sprinkling of men with some slight standing in their communities as farmers, artisans and shopkeepers.

artisans

However, many segregationist groups and leaders in the South, mindful of the Klan's unsavory past, want no part of it. To overcome this distaste, improve its public image and recover its old-time political influence are the Klan's chief—and yet unattained—goals. Therefore, it officially eschews violence; there have been no recent outbreaks of night riding and flogging. Rather, it espouses the ballot—register white voters to counter increasing Negro registration—and the boycott—do not patronize firms that desegregate, but buy from those that don't.

Nevertheless, the very nature of the rallies and the bluntly racist tone of the speeches draw the violence-prone and may inflame them to resort to bomb, lash and torch on their own. This is the danger—and as the Negro becomes more militant, and the last-ditch white more stubborn, it may grow.

Shown here are pictures of recent Klan rallies in Alabama and Georgia.

FIERY WARNING—Ringed by robed Klansmen, a cross burns in a field north of Tuscaloosa, Ala., to signal the beginning of an anti-integration rally. (The burning cross was the call to arms of the Scottish clans, from whom the Klan borrowed it.) This rally was held to protest the admission of two Negroes to the University of Alabama, but Klan rallies have become an almost weekly occurrence in the Deep South. They drew numerous onlookers in addition to the robed celebrants.

WHAT IS THE RADICAL RIGHT?

The following is a transcript of remarks by Senator Jacob K. Javits on "Senate Report", a television program broadcast on WNEW-TV, New York City, and WKBW-TV, Buffalo, New York, on Sunday, August 11.

* * * * *

My colleague and friend, Senator Barry Goldwater, in a statement reported in the New York Times the other day asked me to define what I meant by "the radical right." He thought it would be helpful if I did so, and I'd like to address myself to it now.

By the radical right, I'm not talking about those people who are trying to overthrow the government by force, as the Communists are, and I hope that Senator Goldwater would not be confused on that score. I'm talking about those who proceed within the Constitution, but outside what I call the mainstream of American public life.

Now who does that mean? It means, specifically, those groups who call Dwight D. Eisenhower a crypto-communist, or an associate of Communists, or as being influenced by them --- all of which the radical right does not hesitate to do. It means calling for the impeachment of Earl Warren, Chief Justice of the United States, because the radical right doesn't agree with the decisions of the United States Supreme Court. Indeed, it means seeking to erect a "super court" composed of the chief justices of all state courts and putting the Supreme Court, as it were, out of business. It means not over-hauling the income tax but repealing it. And it also means similar radical moves in respect to labor, in respect to management. It means isolationism in the foreign policy of the United States. For example, the radical right has already started a dedicated campaign against any concept of a test ban treaty or anything remotely approaching it.

This is what I mean by the radical right; and it's a grave danger to our country. Many people have discussed the radical right in more detail. For example, I have here, a couple of recent books on the subject. (The Far Right, Janson and Eismann, McGraw-Hill; and The Sixth Column, Burlingame, Lippincott). There is a recent article in Look Magazine on the radical right invading the Republican Party. There have been a couple of eloquent and important speeches on this subject in the Senate made by my colleague, Senator Tom Kuchel, deputy minority leader. The highly-respected Congressional Quarterly, which digests all of our affairs in Congress has published a list of all these groups. So all this information is available on the radical right.

In addition, it is very interesting -- and perhaps Senator Goldwater has forgotten, although I don't think he has --- that a book called The Great Ideas Today, published by the Encyclopaedia Britannica in 1962, featured a long debate between him and me on this very subject.

I would like to quote from that particular debate between Senator Goldwater and myself, in which I said: "The radical right is attempting to take over the conservative label -- to which it is not entitled -- by exploiting anti-communism and appealing to the normal conservatism of a large segment of our people. But the differences between the radical right and conservatism are clear. The radical right is isolationist in its approach to foreign affairs and negative in its approach to domestic policy. It stresses what it is against. It attacks civil liberties under the guise of anti-communism. It shows mistrust and lack of faith in our governmental institutions and casts suspicion on leading government officials by using the familiar technique of dogmatic and unproved charges, stubornly maintained."

Now that is what the radical right is doing in our country today -- it's very much like the "Know-Nothing" movement in the 1850's and the Ku Klux Klan in the 1920's. And that is why people like myself condemn the radical right and we are against allowing it to infiltrate the Republican Party.

Political Memo from COPE

COMMITTEE ON POLITICAL EDUCATION, AFL-CIO
815 16th STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON 6, D. C.

No. 17—63 August 26, 1963

AL BARKAN NAMED COPE DIRECTOR

Al Barkan has been named director of COPE. He succeeds the late James L. McDevitt, who died March 19. Announcement of the appointment was made by President George Meany at a meeting of the AFL-CIO Executive Council at Unity House, Pa.

Barkan became assistant director of COPE at the time of the AFL-CIO merger in December, 1955. He was named deputy director in February, 1957, and had served as acting director since McDevitt's death.

Barkan is a native of Bayonne, N. J., and taught high school there for four years following his graduation from the University of Chicago in 1933. In 1937, he joined the Textile Workers Organizing Committee. After World War II Navy service aboard a destroyer, he became veterans director for the CIO Community Services Committee, then executive secretary of the New Jersey Industrial Union Council.

He rejoined the Textile Workers staff in 1948 as political action director, a post he held until his appointment to COPE in late 1955.

POLL SHOWS KENNEDY WINS FRIENDS ON FOREIGN POLICY

President Kennedy can rely on his foreign policy and his program to build military strength to win votes in the 1964 elections, according to a Louis Harris poll.

Harris questioned a cross-section of voters on 20 issues, domestic and foreign. He found strong support for the President on 10 of the issues, six of them concerning foreign and military policies, including defense, the Peace Corps, space and dealing firmly with Soviet Premier Khrushchev.

Harris found three issues working in favor of the Republicans: spending, agriculture and the slowness of Congress.

Harris called seven other issues "battleground issues," those which can either help or hurt the President depending on what action is taken between now and the 1964 election. These are health insurance for the elderly, tax cut, civil rights, the economy, foreign aid, Cuba, Alliance for Progress.

FORMATION OF BIPAC FORGES FINAL LINK IN POLITICAL ALLIANCE OF CONSERVATIVES

One more link has been forged to the chain that soon will unite into a functioning political alliance the forces of big business, the medical profession and the right wing.

The link is BIPAC, the Business-Industry Political Action Committee. It is the brainchild of the National Association of Manufacturers which set up a $100,000 fund to get BIPAC started. It now stands shoulder to shoulder with the American Medical Political Action Committee (AMPAC) and rightist groups active in politics, notably Americans for Constitutional Action.

All are dedicated to the same objective: election to Congress of extreme conservatives who reject new, and would weaken or destroy established, social welfare programs.

BIPAC was formed, according to one of its leaflets, to meet the challenge of a "steadily increasing trend toward centralization of our government and domination of the economy and the individual. . . ."

NAM members and other businessmen are being urged to pay $10 to $99 for memberships to build a BIPAC fund which can be poured into support of congressional candidates who would oppose such "domination."

That BIPAC will be ultra-conservative in its approach is indicated by its leadership, as well as its initial propaganda. Executive Director is Laurie Battle, former Democratic congressman from Alabama, 1947-54. As a congressman, his votes, with few exceptions, were against the interests of working people. He once campaigned on a racist platform against Sen. John Sparkman.

The BIPAC board of directors contains a number of men active in, or of financial assistance to, various right wing groups. Among them are: Clifford J. Backstrand, Armstrong Cork Co., a sponsor of Young Americans for Freedom; Kinsey M. Robinson, Washington Water Power Co., member of the American Economic Foundation and contributor to ultra-right Harding College, Searcy, Ark.; R. Downs Poindexter, Superior Iron Works, contributor to Americans for Constitutional Action; Arthur H. Motley, publisher of Parade Publications Inc., contributor to the Intercollegiate Society of Individualists, former president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

TEST BAN: AFL-CIO BOOSTS IT, RIGHT WING BOMBS IT

The AFL-CIO Executive Council has hailed the nuclear test ban treaty as "a first step towards the possible limitation or reduction of nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction" and has urged treaty ratification by the Senate. The Council said the treaty "provides mankind with an opportunity to end the danger of radioactive contamination of the atmosphere by halting those blasts which endanger health and produce genetic damage."

It further stated the treaty can strengthen American efforts "to remove the causes of world tension, to provide a firm foundation for world peace, and to achieve disarmament through strict international inspection and effective control."

At the same time, the Council urged "continued vigilance, national strength and greater Atlantic unity . . . and overwhelming capacity for defense."

Meanwhile, the right wing has unleashed a multi-megaton barrage against the test ban treaty, trying to frighten the country out of its wits. A full page ad in a recent edition of the Washington Post warned in bold headlines: "National Disaster Impending! Senate Ratification of the Test Ban Treaty Will Destroy Our Country."

The ad was sponsored by the Manion Forum, an outfit which habitually drops its own bombs on the labor movement. It was under the signature of Rear Adm. Chester Ward (Ret.), an old Navy hand who sails out of dry-dock regularly to deliver a salty word or two at right wing rallies.

Ward views the test ban—as do other rightists—as something subversive, "engineered by a Washington inner circle of pseudo-sophisticated, pseudo-intellectuals . . ." He ignores the fact that the Joint Chiefs of Staff, our top military leaders, have endorsed the treaty.

HOW BIRCHERS USE THEIR BARK TO DOG MEETINGS

John Birch Society members and leaders always cry they want the nation to return to "good old fundamental Americanism." Here's a story about their brand of Americanism in action.

A human rights meeting in Torrance, Calif., was just beginning when about 40 loud-mouthed hecklers disrupted it. Thereafter, every time a speaker tried to say something, he was hooted down, though the hecklers were only a small minority of the 400 present.

Identified as Birchers and American Nazi Party members, the pop-offs shouted accusations that sponsors of the meeting are communists. When the Birchers weren't shouting, they were coughing loudly, in unison.

One woman dressed in red, white and blue walked all over the auditorium slamming empty seats.

Police on hand, fearing a riot, ordered the meeting adjourned.

This is how the Birchers treat the fundamental American concept of free speech.

BACK TO BEATING THE BUSHES FOR MILLIONAIRES

A Republican Party magazine and newspaper advertising campaign to raise funds has flopped, according to the Wall Street Journal. The GOP ran appeals for $10 individual contributions in seven major publications. Returns failed even to cover costs.

The campaign obviously didn't live up to the fanfare that preceded it. In announcing plans for the Madison Avenue approach to fund collection last June, GOP National Committee Chairman William Miller had forecast ". . . there are millions of Republicans and disillusioned Democrats willing to chip in a few dollars to dislodge the (Kennedy) Administration."

Well, back to the drawing board.

12 MORE LOCALS EARN COPE HONOR AWARDS

Twelve more local unions have earned 1963 COPE Honor awards for contributing one dollar to COPE for every member. They are: Calif.—Richmond, CWA 9401. Ill.—Collinsville, Chemical 22. Md.—Annapolis, CWA 2107. Mass.—Boston, Packinghouse 672. Mich.—Plymouth, Papermakers 1005. Minn.—Cannon Falls, Brewery 174. Neb.—Alliance, CWA 7402; O'Neill, CWA 7403. Ohio—Toronto, CWA 4318. Texas—Austin, Chemical 226; Breckenridge, CWA 6204; Killean, CWA 6174.

AMERICA'S NO. 1 PLOT-SPOTTER SPOTS ANOTHER PLOT

Robert Welch, dictator of the John Birch Society, has advised his followers the current drive to achieve equal rights for all Americans is part of a Communist plot to create a "Soviet Negro Republic" in the southeast. He sees "sinister purposes masquerading as idealism" behind the civil rights drive.

Welch urged Birchers to use opposition to civil rights to advance the JBS objective of impeaching Chief Justice Earl Warren, whose leadership of the Supreme Court has been under constant right wing attack.

• KU KLUX KLAN Regist. Pop. KKK

Button-Down Bed Sheets

"Let's be nonviolent," urged the man in the pulpit, and there was a spatter of applause from the 350 faithful gathered in the clapboard chapel in an oak grove outside Athens, Ga. In this summer of the Negro revolt, the way to win was peaceful protest—marches, sit-ins, boycotts, voter-registration campaigns, and, above all, a good public image.

"Let's be nonviolent," said Calvin Craig, Grand Dragon of the United Klans of America, Inc., Invisible Empire, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan. "We've got to start fighting just like the niggers."

That was the twist the Klan was turning across the South this summer—and selling hard enough to stir a small renvas heady but self-conscience

naissance. The KKK had fallen far from its glory days of the '20s, when its roster numbered 4 million and—so the legend went—there was hardly a bed sheet south of the Mason-Dixon line without eyeholes. Now, according to the B'nai B'rith Anti-Defamation League's Atlanta regional office, the Klan has 40,000 to 55,000 subjects in an increasingly visible empire. But this summer, ADL said, it has enlisted 5,000 new members.

Its reputation tarnished by the flogging and lynching bees of bygone years, its racist thunder stolen by the white-collar white supremacists of the Citizens Councils, the Klan has become acutely conscious of what people might think. It hungers for respectability. It courts the press. "The purpose of this meeting is open to the public," Imperial Wizard

Robert Shelton proclaimed at the Empire's biggest recent pageant, a rally of 3,000 at Savannah, Ga. Later, Shelton—a former rubber worker from Tuscaloosa, Ala., who now travels about "Kluxing full time"—explained to NEWSWEEK's Karl Fleming: "You have got to have public relations. Our program is going to be on more of an informational basis."

Tactician: The new Klan flatters the unlikely likes of Martin Luther King Jr. by imitation. Sit-ins? Singling out the Athens branch of a cafeteria chain that had desegregated in Atlanta, Craig exhorted: "... You good white folks ... just go in there and get you a glass of water and just sit." Mass marches? "If the mayor doesn't stop these niggers from marching and demonstrating in Athens, then we're going to march and demonstrate too." Biracial negotiating committees? "We want the Klan to represent the white folks ... You don't ever have anyone but those left-wing liberals and niggers. The white people have been left out."

Some members find the new look too tepid. At a recent rally at an Augusta, Ga., auto race track, one parboiled Klansman simmered through a long, droning Shelton philippic about the Kennedys and Communist "infilteration" of the civil-rights movement and egalitarian clergymen: "It behooves me to see such large masses of these ministerial associations as they sit back and draft their resolutions . . ." Halfway through, the Klansman boiled over, slipped under the wooden grandstand, and got into a fist fight with a Shelton fan. "I didn't come out here to hear him talk about all this Communist stuff," he bellyached as a Shelton aide intervened. "Why doesn't he talk about the niggers?"

Eulogy: Klan old-timers, indeed, prefer a headier oratorical brew. At the Savannah rally, red-robed Georgia Kleagle Fonnie Miles eulogized the slain NAACP leader, Medgar Evers: "A certain jig down in Mississippi got himself killed—"

"Yeah!" whooped the crowd.

"—for sticking his nose in other people's business ... Why that's just another dead nigger, and that's the only good ones there ever is—the dead ones."

Yet even Miles was a mite image-conscious. "I know some of these press people are gonna say about me being illiterate because I say nigger," he said. "I guess they think I'm self-conscience about it. But I ain't."

The top leaders are self-conscience. Shelton and Craig have been circuit-riding the South in mufti, enlisting new members for a $10 Klektoken (initiation fee) and $1-a-month dues. Most of all, they have tried to wash the Klan image as bright as a freshly laundered bed sheet. "The Klan," Shelton says, "is not as derogative as you might think."

Enterprise Association, Central Press, and the New York Herald Tribune News Service.

¶ Other news services and newsreels which the Wrights said used their films, pictures, or stories without identifying them as propaganda hand-outs were the Associated Press, Columbia Broadcasting System, National Geographic magazine, King Features Syndicate, The New York Times, Metro-Goldwyn Mayer, Paramount, Universal, and 20th Century Fox.

¶ The younger Wright testified he had been "bamboozled" into contributing $3,000 to The New Leader, for publication of a story regarded as friendly to Chiang's Nationalist regime. "I got bamboozled on this one," he explained. "The New Leader came to me and hit me for a little money that this would be a great thing to have and I fell for it. They did the work, not me."

¶ While representing Nationalist China, the Wright organization ghosted articles for members of Congress, including one for Senator Paul H. Douglas, Illinois Democrat, opposing admission of Communist China to the United Nations. (Senator Douglas said he knew the article he signed was prepared by the Wright firm but did not know the Wrights represented the Chiang Kai-shek government.)

The Wrights insisted throughout their testimony that their handouts were properly labeled to show, as required by law, that they were produced by a paid agent of a foreign government. It was the syndicates in some cases and newspapers, magazines, networks, and film exhibitors in others that refused to carry the telltale label.

Senator Fulbright deserves great credit for his patient pursuit of the facts in this long neglected field. Americans now have a somewhat clearer understanding of how propaganda bought by foreign governments is masqueraded as news—or they would have a better understanding if they could only find the Fulbright disclosures in their local paper. Several major metropolitan dailies carried parts of the story, but they were distinguished exceptions to the national rule.

Integration Pays

Proprietors of places of public accommodation in Dixie have long feared that if they admitted Negroes, Southern whites would boycott them and ruin their business. Their fear not only turns out to be largely unfounded, but it appears, at least on the basis of one study, that integration brings such enterprises more patronage than before.

Among hotels, motels, restaurants, taverns, night clubs, and other establishments serving or hiring Negroes, The Wall Street Journal reported after canvassing Southern cities: "Only a few report suffering any lasting economic consequences" and "a sizeable number, in fact, declare that business has been better than ever."

The Journal found that customers have been jamming the Wit's End, a posh Atlanta night club, one of three in town that admits Negroes. Recalling the club's decision to integrate, manager Paul Stickney said: "We were scared to death—we could just see all our white customers walking out the minute the first Negroes walked in. But things couldn't have been any smoother. We know of only one white couple who walked out because we admitted Negroes and they came back within two weeks. As far as stirring things up around here, it's been one big zero."

Herblock in The Washington Post

"All Set, Chief—Three Public Relations Agency News Stories Praising Chiang, and an Editorial Blasting Kennedy for Managing the News"

Virtually zero trouble (about one-fiftieth of one per cent difficulty) was felt by Harvey's Department Store in Nashville. Out of 60,000 customers with charge accounts, only thirteen have closed their accounts because the Tennessee store desegregated its lunch counters in 1960. "The greatest surprise I ever had was the apparent 'so what' attitude of white customers," declared store president Fred Harvey. In Raleigh, North Carolina, a restaurant owner said only eight whites have walked out since learning Negroes were served there, and "We're getting plenty of customers to replace the hard-headed ones." In Atlanta, fourteen hotels recently announced they would begin accepting Negro guests attending conventions. Within a day they had received bookings for conventions with 3,000 delegates who otherwise would have by-passed the city.

This objective exploration by The Wall Street Journal of what happens when Southern proprietors open their doors to Negroes stands as an excellent example of what should be common, but is all too uncommon newspaper initiative. These significant findings by the conservative Journal should be pondered by conservative Congressmen who fear that the Administration proposal to end discrimination in places serving the public will cause the owners financial loss. The reverse may well be true. Now, not only morality and the Constitution call for integration, but the profit motive may join in the chorus.

'Head-on Collision'

The number of Americans now unemployed exceeds the entire population of Chicago by about one million. Unless there is a massive attack on unemployment, the number of jobless within a few years will be greater than the total population of New York City, and soon after that will equal the populace of New York and Chicago combined.

The present hard core of unemployment will double during the remainder of this decade unless members of Congress, and a great many other citizens who have been holding steady jobs for some time, begin paying attention to the urgent warnings sounded by Federal government spokesmen and other sources. It is true that employment has reached the record high of 70,000,000, but this is no great cause for cheers in view of these accompanying facts recently disclosed:

¶ By 1970, the nation will be able to equal its 1960 output with twenty-two million fewer workers than it did then. This shocker, on the extent to which automation and increased productivity are slashing the demand for manpower, was revealed by Seymour L. Wolfbein, director of the Department of Labor's Office of Manpower, in testimony before the Senate Small Business Subcommittee.

During the present decade, Wolfbein estimated, the nation's labor force will increase by thirteen millions. Adding the figures together shows that merely to hold unemployment to its present level will require adding thirty-five million more jobs by 1970 than than there were in 1960.

"We are witnessing a head-on collision," declared Wolfbein, "between advancing automation and technology and a tidal wave of manpower for whom jobs must be available." During the past few years we have been adding about 60,000 jobs a month, he said, only one-fifth of the 300,000 needed monthly to meet the goal of thirty-five million new jobs by 1970.

¶ Among the 4.8 million unemployed, the plight of the uneducated, both white and Negro, is most desperate. Secretary of Labor W. Willard Wirtz told a House Labor Subcommittee that twenty per cent of all unemployed have not finished the eighth grade. Among the unemployed Negro group alone, forty-four per cent have not completed the eighth grade. Seeking approval for a new literacy training program for the uneducated, Secretary Wirtz warned that "an even harder hard core of unemployment" is developing among "this severely disadvantaged group."

¶ On the basis of projections from figures of the Council of Economic Advisers, economists estimate that to reduce the present unemployment rate of 5.7 per cent down to four per cent, the gross national product would have to zoom up by 8.5 per cent. But GNP rose only 3.5 per cent in the past year, a sluggard's pace which explains why unemployment is higher than a year ago.

¶ Some Labor Department experts foresee a seven per cent unemployment rate within a few years. Negroes, youths, the undereducated and unskilled of all ages and races will make up the bulk of the growing ranks of unemployed. Increased racial conflict caused by greater competition for scarce jobs, higher crime rates, mounting relief rolls, and other social and dollar costs, will be but a few of the bitter fruits yielded by the rank growth of unemployment. Touching on one small detail of the grim possibilities, Secretary Wirtz pointed out that training a single worker will cost $1,000 but "If we don't train them, it will cost us $1,000 a year for each of them for the rest of our lives to carry them on our backs."

¶ While most Congressmen show little concern over the need for action to combat unemployment, some of their employed constituents have been watching the trend with anxiety. The University of Michigan Survey Research Center reported that a number of consumers now view the future with pessimism because of the persistence of unemployment. They plan to save more and spend less as a cushion against a possible layoff. Consumer spending is also likely to decline because, as Business Week saw it, "Consumers borrowed $7 billion last year, and just meeting the payments on a total consumer installment debt of nearly $50 billion is bound to inhibit consumer spending in the second half of 1963."

Automation, technology, the rapid rise in job-seekers caused by the population explosion, and our laggard economic growth, constitute the recruiting sergeants for the army of the unemployed. Counter action by Congress is long overdue. As a bare minimum, such action should include passage of the Administration's program with its proposals for a $10 billion tax cut, increased area redevelopment spending, the youth conservation corps, job training, and literacy training. These measures add up to a great deal less than is needed to wipe out the gap between the number of job openings and the manpower available, but they would at least constitute a modest start on which a more comprehensive program could be built.

"We're Doing 70 and He's Still There"

Propaganda, Yes; Peace, No

You may not have been aware of it, but you are helping to pay for propaganda opposing disarmament, foreign aid, the United Nations, the Peace Corps, public housing, urban renewal, school desegregation, the income tax, taxation of industry, the National Council of Churches—well, you name it; if it's a pet peeve of the Radical Right, you are supporting it.

Senator Maurine Neuberger, Oregon Democrat, pointed out recently that "you and I, unwittingly, and certainly involuntarily, as taxpayers, are indirectly financing millions of dollars of Birch-type propaganda put out by less well-known but equally vicious [tax-exempt] organizations."

Our laws, she pointed out, do not grant tax-exempt status to an organization a substantial part of whose activities is "carrying on propaganda."

"Despite this express exclusion of propaganda organs from tax exemption," Mrs. Neuberger said, "There is increasing evidence that dozens of Right-wing groups are today masquerading as educational and religious organizations, and are flooding the country with the partisan, political propaganda of the far Right, financed by tax-free contributions from businessmen. And," continued the Senator, "whenever a businessman has tax-exempt income, somebody else is forced to pay more taxes —and that somebody else is you and I."

Among these organizations are America's Future, Inc., which specializes in attacks on desegregation, the United Nations, and labor unions, and in book-banning; the American Good Government Society, which gives awards to Americans who have contributed to good government—curiously, the recipients invariably turn out to be Southern Democrats or conservative Republicans; H. L. Hunt's various enterprises, which label everyone left of Senator Barry Goldwater "mistaken," a thinly-veiled euphemism for "Communist;" General Electric, which abuses tax-deductible advertising expense to crusade against social security, the income tax, Federal aid to education, and medicare.

In 1961, these and a score of other Right-oriented propaganda organizations took in more than $5.5 million in tax-free contributions.

"How has this been permitted to happen?" asked Mrs. Neuberger. "It is painfully clear that the tax service has simply not done the job Congress gave it: to rout out the propagandists from the bona fide educators."

Senator Clair Engle, California Democrat, recently protested "the shocking misuse and abuse of the tax laws that permit extremist groups, under the cloak of 'educational' or 'religious' activity, to enjoy the privilege of tax-exempt income."

"Contrast this," said Senator Engle, "to Internal Revenue's withdrawal of the tax-exempt privileges of a legitimate, highly respected interfaith organization known as the Fellowship of Reconciliation—an old established peace group. This privilege was revoked on the ground that peace is not a religious purpose but must be achieved through legislation alone."

Herblock in The Washington Post

"I Think He Should Have a Choice of Doctors"

The Federal tax authorities have demonstrated the application of a double standard which cannot be permitted to go unchallenged. Congressional investigation of tax exemption policies of the Internal Revenue Service would throw much needed light—and provide the way for corrective action—in a field where reform is urgently needed.

The Hollow Voice

A year or so ago we commented in these columns that "we sometimes weary of exposing the deceits and distortions" of the leadership of the American Medical Association. Our flagging spirits were revived at the time by Representative Edith Green, Oregon Democrat, who took the AMA apart for its myopic opposition to medical care for the aged, but at the same time made the hopeful observation that the spokesmen for the AMA were "unrepresentative" of its membership.

Our zest for the battle has been renewed again in the past few weeks by three Senators, each of whom recognized, as did Mrs. Green, that the voice of the AMA often does not express the views of the nation's medical doctors.

Senator Stephen M. Young, Ohio Democrat, whose acid wit and candid tongue have skinned many a sacred cow, recently excoriated the hierarchy of the AMA on the floor of the Senate for its stubborn opposition to the inclusion of medical doctors in the social security system.

"For many years," charged Senator Young, "a small group of political doctors have been running the American Medical Association in flagrant disregard of the welfare of its membership . . . Despite the clear and repeated expressions in favor of social security by approximately sixty-five per cent of physicians . . . the dictatorial House of Delegates maintains its opposition to social security . . . The powerful AMA lobby has misrepresented and is misrepresenting [the doctors] and has prevailed on the Congress to deny them this needed coverage."

Senator Young documented his charges with the results of numerous statewide polls and referenda which revealed that a substantial majority of doctors favor coming under social security.

Senator Pat McNamara, Michigan Democrat, presented evidence assembled by the Michigan Medical Society that "an overwhelming majority" of doctors in his home state wanted coverage.

"I think it is important to note," McNamara pointed out, "that doctors of medicine are the only self-employed group in the United States today who are denied the protection of social security for themselves and their families. The reason for this is very simple. The hierarchy of the AMA is opposed to social security for doctors, and we here in the Congress have been listening to the AMA lobby instead of to the physicians themselves."

Senator Ernest Gruening, Alaska Democrat, and himself a former medical doctor, recently accused the AMA of doing its own members a disservice on still another front. The AMA lobby has vigorously opposed all legislation designed to improve evaluation of drugs through the Food and Drug Administration. Yet at the same time it has "starved" its own Council on Drugs for funds and staff, with consequent delays of as long as three years in evaluating new drugs.

"Many observers feel," said Senator Gruening, "if the AMA devoted as much energy and finances to drug

Klan Burns Cross As 2,000 Watch

Racist. Bigs. KKK

By PAUL VALENTINE
and WALTER RUGABER

A 30-foot cross burned brightly Saturday night in a field at the foot of Stone Mountain as some 2,000 persons cheered a Ku Klux Klan exhortation to rid America of "communism, socialism and niggerism."

As the burlap-wrapped metal cross flamed slowly, some 80 robed klansmen stood around it in a circle, their left arms raised stiffly in salute towards it.

Many of them were masked but not in violation of Georgia's anti-mask law, since they were on privale property.

They marched down the low knoll on which the cross blazed and moved towards the speakers' platform, where a record player boomed forth marches and a dramatic reading about the American flag.

The coalition Klan organization obviously had invested more money than usual in promotional advertising. Roads to the meeting site were well marked with signs. Officials claimed Klan members from 41 states were present.

STATE PATROL troopers sealed off all roads leading into Stone Mountain Memorial Park. Detachments of a half dozen patrolmen guarded each entry and turned traffic away.

A sergeant at one post said "several hundred" troopers were stationed at the base of the mountain.

The Klan rally was held on the property of Decatur lawyer James Venable. Repeatedly during the evening of speechmaking, Mr. Venable, clothed in a red robe, told the crowd that the "so-called gestapo police" were blocking rally-bound traffic and interfering with the Klan's freedom of assembly.

During his objection to the highway patrol, voices rose from the crowd: "Let's go get them . . . Let's go to the mountain." The restive atmosphere clung throughout the evening.

A LENGTHY round of speeches opened with remarks by Mr. Venable, who said he is acting chairman of National Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, which he described as a unifying agency of several Klan groups across the nation.

He outlined the history of the Klan, praising its actions since the Civil War.

Speaking in a field on his own estate southwest of Stone Mountain, he told a cheering crowd the Klan is the greatest organization "on God's green earth," and added: "It is the bulwark of the white race, of the Caucasian race."

HE SAID Klan actions had effectively kept Negro, Jewish and Roman Catholic "elements" from entering the national government until President Kennedy arrived on the scene.

"Al Smith was defeated by the Klan" in the 1929 presidential election, he said.

He declared, "We haven't any grudge against the Roman Catholics if they'd stay in the field of religion and not be meddling with the white man's government."

Mr. Venable also said, "Not a nigger nor a Jew was a partner" in the writing of the Constitution and other early documents of the nation. "This is a white man's nation," he declared.

He hinted at the Klan's recent public stance of nonviolence when he said, "We have two great weapons, the boycott and the ballot box."

ANOTHER speaker was Mrs. E. L. Edwards, widow of the former imperial wizard of the Klan and an Atlanta-area resident.

More than a half dozen speakers from as many states spoke during the long evening. Among them were klansmen George Sly of Jonesboro; Raymond Anderson, grand dragon of the Tennessee Klan; Wallace Butterworth, klan member from Pennsylvania who said he now lives in DeKalb County; klansman Charlie Maddox of Savannah; Robert Hodges, a masked speaker from the South Carolina Klan; a masked and unnamed Texas klansman, and others.

Klansman Sly, discussing anti-Semitism, said, "I don't hate Jews. We have one good Jew in Atlanta—Leb." He referred to Charlie Leb, owner of a downtown restaurant which has remained segregated in the face of repeated sit-in demonstrations.

Mr. Sly also said, "This here Communist-inspired nigger movement, I don't think it's in the Bible to be here."

A Florida klansman said, "I'm 48 years old and I may not live to be 50, but when my kids put me in the ground they'll know I died like a white man."

Much grumbling among spectators at Venable's emphasis on anti-communism. They wanted the "nigger-nigger" talk & were restive and resentful over the anti-communist and anti-Jewish & Roman Catholic tirade.

KLAN WAS ACTIVE
Stone Mountain Was Site

By JOHN PENNINGTON

The KKK reveled in the limelight during the past week. With some help from Alabama, its sheeted and occasionally hooded and masked members enjoyed a little victory out at Stone Mountain.

This is to put the week's klan activities in perspective; The dragons and kaliffs, klokards and kludds and rank and file klansmen of the klaverns are better understood when viewed in context.

EXAMPLE:

Robert M. Shelton of Alabama, imperial wizard of the "invisible empire," ruler of the United Klans, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, Inc., rode into Atlanta in his two-tone Cadillac for the big meeting in a pasture out at Stone Mountain a week ago. He said, as quoted by the reputable Southern Education Reporting Service organ, the Southern School News, that the klan is building a new image, a "nonviolent and nonhate" image.

Then on the way home in their bedsheets from the Stone Mountain rumble, a group of klansmen shot up a house with Negroes inside.

At the mountain itself, the klansmen, in their quest for the new image, sought to climb Stone Mountain to hold a "religious" ceremony.

AT THE FOOT of the mountain, confronted with a handful of state officers, they pledged allegiance with a hearty rendition of "Dixie" to a waving Conferedate flag. They hooted and cursed state troppers and DeKalb officers and threw rocks at them.

On another point that has been contested: It was reported and the klan denied that there was a move there at the foot of the mountain to put their women and children out in front when confronted by the troopers. But several reporters and editors were there; they heard what was said and although this couldn't be construed as a klan policy, some among the rank and file did propose women and children first.

Those were among the klan's image-building activities of Saturday a week ago.

Now the klan is taking an active interest in the Georgia governor's race, and the strong-arm Alabama crowd is standing close by, on the Georgia side of the Chattahoochee River, with injections of Alabama-style klanism.

THE KLAN has played an important part in Alabama's last two gubernatorial races—mainly because Alabama has many more klansmen than does Georgia.

The robed night-riders supported winning candidate George Wallace in the latest race there. Mr. Wallace was on the Marvin Griffin political platform when Georgia's big campaign opened in Americus on July 7, the day the Alabama crowd was whooping it up at Stone Mountain.

During the past week the imperial wizard from Alabama was back in Georgia (at Nashville) in his two-tone Cadillac, saying who "we" are for in the Georgia governor's race.

He did not specify which candidate, saying only, "We're for the segregationists."

But at his side the No. 1 man in Georgia klaverns, Grand Dragon Calvin Craig, eliminated Sen. Carl Sanders as the klan's man, saying he (Mr. Sanders) "is in with Vandiver, the NAACP and the rest of the scalawags."

That meant the choice was Marvin Griffin.

Several months ago Imperial Wizard Shelton had a publicity man, a Philadelphian, who once performed smoothly on national radio broadcasts.

The publicity man came to Atlanta, moving into the home of a most prominent klan-linked figure in the Atlanta area and started trying to organize a massive far-right convention in Atlanta for the July 4 week of the NAACP convention in Atlanta.

That big organizational plan failed, but the emissary from Alabama still is in Georgia working in various ways with klan and similar groups.

THERE IS ONE drawback to the klan's activity in Georgia, readily obvious to observers of that group: Georgia has nowhere near as many dues-paying klansmen in the klaverns as does Alabama.

Two men were held Monday for investigation in connection with thefts from parking meters, police said.

They were identified as Robert Bowling, 29, of a Lombardy Way NE address and James Billy Sloan, 25, of Hapeville, both listed as employes of the National States Rights Party.

An information sheet on Bowling in the Police department identification bureau listed him as "activity supervisor" for the National States Rights Party. However, the sheet bore the notation that Bowling had refused to sign it. Sloan was listed as a typist at the National States Rights Party office.

Detective Capt. R. E. Little and Sgt. J. C. McEntire said Sloan and Bowling were apprehended Sunday night by a plant guard who said he saw the two rifling parking meters at Eighth and Spring streets.

Officers said they found Sloan's coat pocket full of change and a search of the area turned up a key for opening meters.

Little said he seized a quantity of metal discs cut into the size of a quarter together with equipment necessary for making the discs. He added the discs worked "perfectly" in coin vending machines.

SAVANNAH, Ga., June 22— Several hundred white men and women gathered this afternoon at Forsythe Park to oppose integration and Negro demonstrations.

"The people of Savannah are facing the darkest days we have seen since the Reconstruction time," he told his cheering audience.

Mr. Brooks asked his audience to boycott those merchants who have hired Negro clerks and to shun integrated lunch counters. He also urged support for the restaurants that are still segregated.

Stickers for automobile windshields bearing the legend "Kah the Kennedy Klan" were distributed and when the supply quickly ran out Mr. Brooks promised additional stickers next week.

enate Aims ig Blow At igh Court

C-LUMBIA (AP) — The South Carolina Senate aimed a three-prong blow Thursday at the U. S. Supreme Court and federal encroachment on states' rights.

the blow will land de- he legislatures of two- the states approving esolutions aimed at he U.S. Constitution. tates, most of them ave already done so. ate legislatures would ition congress for the nstitutional changes. ly, South Carolina has the list of petitioners.

But the House and Senate have now passed identical resolutions and one set or the other will receive legislative approval.

CHANGES NEEDED

Sen. L. Marion Gressette of Calhoun told Senate colleagues Thursday that Constitutional changes are vitally needed to curb "a tendency on the part of the Supreme Court to legislate rather than interpret the laws of congress and the several states."

He said this "tendency is illustrated by recent Supreme Court decisions on school segregation, sedition, prayers in public schools and ownership of offshore oil lands."

One amendment would create a Court of the Union, composed of the chief justices of the 50 state supreme courts. It would hear appeals from decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court.

Another would allow two-thirds of the state legislatures themselves to propose Constitutional amendments. Congress now has to propose Constitutional changes at the request of two-thirds of the states—and three-fourths of the state legislatures then have to ratify the changes.

THIRD AMENDMENT

The third proposed amendment would spell out the right of the individual states to determine the makeup of their legislatures. Federal courts have recently ordered reapportionment of some legislatures.

Sen. John Long of Union expressed fear that the amendments might permit the chief justices of the state supreme courts to amend the Constitution.

He said he was "heartily in sympathy with Gressette's views about the U.S. Supreme Court but was hesitant to vote for the resolutions.

Gressette assurred Long he need have no fear about the chief justices amending the Constitution.

The three resolutions were approved without dissent.

Membership Boost Sought By Group

RALEIGH, Jan. 9 (AP)—The North Carolina Defenders of States' Rights, a segregationist organization affiliated with the White Citizens' Council, has launched a fund-raising campaign aimed at hiring a full-time state membership organizer.

In a letter mailed recently to its members, the organization appeals for "200 men to contribute $100 each."

The letter, signed by the Rev. James P. Dees of Statesville, president of the North Carolina group, said the Defenders are "losing ground here in North Carolina on all fronts, being brainwashed by the "internationalist-socialist stooges and liberals."

He said the group will "go ahead and put a man on the road" when $15,000 is raised.

32 Athens Students Joined, Klan Says

Thirty-two University of Georgia students joined the Ku Klux Klan at a rally in Athens after last Saturday's Georgia-Vanderbilt football game, the Klan's grand dragon said Wednesday.

Grand Dragon Calvin Craig said the Klan in Georgia is conducting an "all-out drive" to attract college students and servicemen in the state.

At Athens, Dean of Students William Tate said Wednesday night that he had no idea who the students are, but added that to be active as an organization on the university campus the Klan would have to file with a university clerk the names of members and purpose of the organization.

Dean Tate said, "I just don't believe college students would have much to do with an organization like the Klan. They would be laughed off the campus. I suggest that Mr. Craig reveal their names."

Craig had said that university students paid a fee of $10 each and were formally inducted into the Invisible Empire. The University of Georgia has an enrollment of about 10,000 students.

"If you don't believe we got those students in, I've got the applications to back me up," Dragon Craig declared.

He said the students and about 20 other prospective members were brought into the Klan after a cross-burning in the rain in a field just outside Athens.

He said Saturday's inducting brings to about 50 the number of college students in the Georgia Klan.

"The white college students are getting to be just like the niggers. They're uniting and working together," he said.

He said he believed the students enlisted in the Klan because they "don't want America to be taken over by the Communists."

Klan Isn't Welcome, Savannah Warns

Racist Orgs. KKK

SAVANNAH—Savannah Mayor Malcolm Maclean Friday advised the Ku Klux Klan that the city does not welcome any outside influence on negotiations aimed at settling the racial situation here.

Maclean also bluntly declined an invitation to speak at a Ku Klux rally here Saturday night at a downtown park.

In a telegram to Calvin Craig, grand dragon of the KKK, Maclean also spelled out to the Klan that the robed body would not be allowed to stage a march in Savannah.

"We call your attention to the fact that all marches, Negro or white, having any connection with the racial situation will be halted," Maclean wired Craig. The mayor added, "This applies equally to the Crusade for Voters (a Negro organization seeking an end to segregation) and to your organization."

said Friday. The men were not seriously injured.

Imperial Wizard Says Klan to Back Wallace

Atl. Jrnl. 9/22/63

Racist Orgs. K.K.K.

by FRED POWLEDGE

The Imperial Wizard of the Ku Klux Klan told an Atlanta audience Saturday night he doesn't "believe the citizenry of Tuscaloosa will stand by" without doing anything when the University of Alabama is desegregated June 10 by federal court order.

Robert Shelton, who holds the top position in the Klan in the Southeast, did not spell out what he thought residents of the college town would do. But he said, "The Ku Klux Klan stands 100 per cent behind Gov. (George) Wallace" of Alabama.

The Klan, he said, will join the governor in his announced intention to "stand in the schoolhouse door" to prevent the Negroes' entry.

MR. SHELTON spoke to about 150 persons gathered on a windy hilltop off Gun Club Road in western Atlanta. Because the rally was held within the city, the customary cross was not burned. A cross made of red light bulbs was substituted.

About 60 of the spectators were Klansmen and Klanswomen in red or white robes. Some children attended the meeting, along with some teen-age couples.

One speaker drew only light applause when he assailed Georgia Sen. Herman Talmadge as a politician who is doing little "to fight the nigger bloc vote." The speaker didn't identify himself.

Mr. Shelton, of Tuscaloosa, drew the best applause when he suggested that ministers quit passing integration resolutions "and get rid of the 7,000 Communist sympathizers" in their ranks.

Although Mr. Shelton attacked Negro and white integrationists, his main theme was that of fighting communism, which he described as the all-inclusive problem in the South and the nation today.

Mr. Shelton said the Klan would participate more in the future in boycotting businesses which lower racial barriers. He said one Birmingham department store lost 5,000 accounts in one day through this means.

A Council to attain the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South

October 16, 1963

Mr. Emory Via
School of Workers
University of Wisconsin
Madison, Wisconsin

Dear Emory:

Paul Anthony asked me to get together some materials for you on "hate groups." Enclosed is copies of news clips (recent), some articles and "pass-out" leaflets of meetings held, and lists of magazine articles and pamphlets (of which we have only one copy in our files). If you are not able to readily obtain copies of any of these latter listings, and find that you particilarly want them, let me know and I will make copies.

If we were not so very rushed in research, I would have compiled some of this information for you; Paul, however, suggested that I send it as is because we are not certain just what you will wish to use. If you have any specific questions not adequately answered, please write and we will try to give you answers.

I think the KKK material is fairly complete, but I give you a quote from a letter written by Staige Blackford which sums up the latest information on the Klan membership:

> In January 1961, the ADL got out an estimate of Klan strength at that time. It concluded: "in sum the total southwide Klan membership is no more than 50,000 and may be about 35,000 or somewhat less." Moreover, my source said that while Klan membership has widely fluctuated since 1954, he is dead certain that Rice's 1958 estimate is way off, way too high. He pointed out that the Klan has a habit of going "way overboard" in claiming membership, habitually counting people who have long since ceased to belong (and in some cases long since gone from this earth). He did say, though, that there were some indications of a slight increase in Klan strength this past year, but nothing significant. In Alabama and Georgia, the two states with the largest Klan membership, he estimated that: 1) KKKhas held its own this year in Alabama; and 2) has shown definite signs of increase in Georgia up to September and October

(but very probably falling off now since the old political order has collapsed). At any rate, whatever increase there has been this year or in the past eight years, there is no indication of the Klan rising anew. Klan meetings in recent years have been shunned by responsible political figures and attended only by the die-hard locals and state has-beens.

You are safe in saying that Klan membership has fluctuated widely in the past decade, but at the most never exceeded 50,000 and is likely to have been considerably less throughout the whole period.

Regarding the White Citizens Councils (called by various names in various states) there is some slight difference of opinion. Paul thinks there is some resurgence because of increase in meetings, especially in Alabama and Georgia. Les Dunbar thinks that although they are presently making more noise, they are not really growing appreciably. They remain strong in Mississippi and may be a little stronger this year, after Oxford and the strong voter registration programs. However, note that funds from the State Sovereignty Commission have been cut and the new head of this commission is Erle Johnson, who last year rebuked the Citizens Councils (see clips). In Alabama is making a lot of shrill noise and having many meetings. But Les thinks they may be slipping there and in Louisiana and Georgia. In all other areas they have lost influence on politicians. At a recent rally in Atlanta (see clips) no state official attended.

Les thinks the most dangerous development is the kind of group Lester Maddox organized to boycot businesses which desegregate (see enclosures). Of the 35 restaurants which desegregated this spring, only 12 (and we are not sure of that number from day to day) remain desegregated after picketing and boycotts. Hotels are desegregated only to the extent of including Negroes in large conventions provided no more than 5% attend. One motel has made an exception for the SRC annual meeting. Only one small hotel will accept Negroes and dark foreign visitors at any time and without any restrictions.

I have included material on the radical right--which we consider a "hate group" too. If you wish, I can give you also a list of the radical right religious groups, leaders, and publications, which I compiled for another purpose.

Clips were not available on Mobile and Selma, so I give you this from Paul's travels: In Mobile the WCC holds weekly meetings in the city auditorium; Wallace was a recent speaker. Attendance runs up to 2,500. When Bull Conner spoke very recently, he lost the crowd completely when he told them it was all right for police to use extreme measures to "keep the peace" but if they did it hurt the cause and lost national sympathy and local support. He urged them to leave all violence to the police! Selma has an active WCC; some 6,500 persons attended a recent meeting when Gov. Wallace spoke.

We have one or two file copies of Paul's 1956 report on prosegregation groups; I could lend you this. I did not include it becuase I thought you would want more recent information.

Emory, I hope I am sending you what you need. If not, do not hesitate to let me know and I'll do another "search".

Regards to your wife.

Sincerely,

Report on the 'Rampageous Right'

By ALAN BARTH

Today's tensions have led to a proliferation of 'conservative extremists.'

FRUSTRATION, which produces tantrums in babies, can lead to equally irrational fits of rage in adults. Unhappily, the contemporary world is, in many respects, a frustrating one. It is rotating not only on its axis but on all its axioms as well. It is involved in profound change — in its international power relationships, in its economic organization, in its social arrangements. And so it confronts many Americans with inevitable alterations in ways of life they cherish and with insurmountable obstacles to ways in which they want their country to move.

In foreign affairs, the United States and the Soviet Union are locked in a classic stalemate which forbids either side to work its will without limit but which affords at least a precarious assurance of continued peace. Colonialism is disappearing, new economic groupings are in process of formation among nations, new developments in weaponry have rendered traditional modes of enforcing national policy altogether obsolete. These are but the most obvious of the conditions in America's relations with the world outside which serve to frustrate American aims and ambitions.

At home, the country is undergoing a tremendous transformation in the pattern of its race relations, involving a long-delayed emancipation of Negroes; for some persons the transformation seems to mean an economic threat and a serious loss of status. In addition, the urbanization and industrialization of American life have brought demands that the Government assume new social-welfare responsibilities — in relation to schools, to slum clearance and housing, to relief of the indigent and the aged; and these are opposed by some members of the community as contrary to traditions of free enterprise and individual initiative.

THESE frustrations are experienced in an atmosphere of continuing international tension and fear. Americans have lived in a steady state of crisis ever since the Second World War. That war was hardly ended before American troops were engaged in a bloody struggle in Korea, to be followed by a prolonged period of "cold war" which produced a harrowing sense of strain and anxiety. Moreover, the terrifying possibility exists that atomic weapons may be launched against American cities at any time in a sudden, surprise attack. Concern about this possibility is exacerbated by confusing and conflicting exhortations from Washington regarding the dangers of radiation and the advantages of fallout shelters. All in all, the future seems an uncertain one. The widespread fear arising out of real and imagined perils is hardly conducive to the rule of reason.

THAT there is a great deal of frustration in the land today is made evident by a proliferation of societies, leagues, committees, councils and crusades which propose to stop the clock—or to turn its hands back to some easier, earlier time when men could move more readily and directly to achieve what they wanted. How to classify these groups politically raises a difficult problem in semantics.

They are commonly called "Rightist" — a term which connotes conservatism. But in sober truth there is nothing conservative about them. They are much more in a rage to destroy than a fervor to conserve. They tend, as Under Secretary of State Chester Bowles remarked of some of them just the other day, to be saying: "Stop the world I want to get off." Clearly, these "Rightists" have nothing in common with such conservatives as, say, Dwight D. Eisenhower or Herbert Hoover. Prof. Richard Hofstadter of Columbia University, in a most insightful essay about the "Rightists" some years ago, called them "pseudo-conservatives."

Sometimes they are referred to as the "radical Right." But the fact is that there is nothing radical about them. They offer no novel solutions to the problems that plague them; indeed, they offer no solutions at all. They are immensely discontented with things as they are and furiously impatient with almost everyone in public office who can in any way be held responsible for their frustrations. But it cannot be said that they hold any clearly stated objectives or have any specific program either in common or individually. They are fundamentally and temperamentally "aginners." And perhaps the commonest characteristic among them is anger. They can fairly been called, if nothing else, the Rampageous Right.

BUT if they defy designation under any simple political label, it is nevertheless possible to find certain lowest common denominators of philosophic outlook which may help to describe them and to set them off from the parties and factions which engage in the traditional pulling and hauling, the compromising and accommodating that are customary in the American political process. Here are some of their identifying traits:

First, they tend to see complex problems simply and to define problems in terms of "either-or" choices. For example, Senator Thomas J. Dodd, addressing a huge rally in the Hollywood Bowl in October under the sponsorship of the Christian Anti-Communist Crusade, said: "The only alternative to total defeat in the struggle with communism is total victory."

Whatever the merits of this formulation as rhetoric, it suffers from the logical fallacy of the excluded middle. Obviously there are a number of possible alternatives. Total annihilation is one of them. So is continued stalemate. So is some sort of temporary accommodation conferring neither victory nor defeat upon either side but providing for reciprocal concessions which might relax tensions while allowing life to go on for a while longer on the planet.

THE "either-or" solution is a formula for frustration. It pits what is unattainable against what is intolerable and precludes all rational and feasible middle courses. In international affairs it makes negotiation impossible and assures for any compromise, no matter what gains or advantages it may embrace, a taunt from the "Rightists" that it amounts to abject surrender. It is hard to escape a conclusion that the essential negativism of the "either-or" approach is designed to frustrate rather than forward any kind of agreement.

This "either-or" approach is adopted by the Right in regard to domestic as well as foreign affairs. It expresses itself in an insistence that there can be no middle ground between pure capitalism and complete communism. In Southern California, automobile bumpers abound with stickers reciting the slogan, "Socialism is Communism." To the people who like to see things so simplistically, blurring the vital distinctions that make free choice possible, socialism is an epithet applied indiscriminately to almost any form of collective endeavor. Thus, any governmentally operated insurance program to provide medical care for the elderly is denounced as Socialist. So are Federal aid to education, Federally financed scholarships for college students and Federal support of scientific research—although there appears to be nothing particularly Socialistic about the same activities when supported by state tax revenues. Public assistance for the indigent, public housing, the Tennessee Valley Authority, even the progressive income tax are all looked upon as satanically inspired deviations from capitalism.

THOSE who support any of these programs as pragmatic ways of dealing with community needs are unsparingly defamed as Communists or as Communist stooges or Communist sympathizers. Robert Welch, organizer and leader of the John Birch Society, has coined the word "Comsymps" to elide any distinction among these categories.

In one other area the Rightist disposition to prohibit any kind of moderation deserves notice. Southern segregationists have joined hands with the professional anti-Communists, ideologically as well as politically. Almost a full century after Abraham Lincoln proclaimed the emancipation of Negroes in the United States, segregationists can present only a solid wall of "massive resistance" to Negro demands for any of the fruits of emancipation.

Their standard defense for this resistance is a stubborn assertion that the Negro demands are merely a product of Communist agitation. In many parts of the Deep South today, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is regarded by ignorant whites as a Communist, or Communist-dominated, agency. The close alliance between the White Citizens Councils on the one hand and the John Birch Society and the Christian Anti-Communist Crusade on the other should not be ignored.

A SECOND common denominator of the Rightist groups is that they subscribe wholeheartedly to the conspiratorial, or devil, theory of history and tend to attribute every frustration to betrayal by traitors. It is out-of-the question for them to acknowledge honest differences of opinion or to consider the possibility that problems may arise in foreign affairs either through some skillful action by the enemy or through innocent error by conscientious, though fallible, public officials at home.

They have no uncertainty, for example, as to why "we lost China"—as though it was ever "ours" to lose. China was lost to communism, these angry Rightists assert unhesitatingly, not by the Chinese but by traitorous Americans who gave it away out of fealty to the Communist conspiracy.

HOW did the United States get into so disadvantageous a situation in Berlin—an island in a Communist sea? Softness toward communism, or worse, at Yalta or Teheran or Potsdam, the Rightists answer with easy assurance. And what more proof of the proposition can be demanded than the fact that Alger Hiss committed perjury before the House Committee on Un-American Activities?

As Professor Hofstadter has put it, "Hiss is the hostage the pseudo-conservatives hold from the New Deal generation. He is a heaven-sent gift. If he did not exist, the pseudo - conservatives would not have been able to invent him." They have made him into a prototype to explain every national misfortune from Laos to outer space.

The Communist conspiracy, to these fixed-focus interpreters, is omnipresent, and very nearly omnipotent. It permeates every American institution and intrudes its poisonous influence into every aspect of American life. They see the Communists exercising power, if not actual control, in religious organizations, especially in the National Council of Churches of Christ which appears to stand convicted of Communist inspiration, in their view, by its very tolerance and humanism.

THE Rightists insist that the Communist conspiracy has infiltrated the leadership of the country's great labor unions, the faculties of its principal universities, even the editorial offices of important newspapers. In a speech just the other day one of the most vehement of the Rightists, T. Coleman Andrews, Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the Eisenhower Administration and, subsequently, an ardent advocate of abolition of the income tax, called The New York Times "the uptown Daily Worker," adding that the nation's capital also had its "Daily Worker — The Washington Post." Tolerance of diversity is not a characteristic of the Right.

The close consanguinity between the segregationist and the anti-Communist strains in the Rightist movement is illustrated by their common attack on the Supreme Court. To the segregationists, the Court's unanimous decision in 1954 that segregated public schools violate the Constitution affords, of itself, proof positive that the Justices were subverted by communism—the all-purpose explanation for every frustration.

The anti-Communists find the same proof in Court decisions upholding the constitutional rights of persons charged with Left-Wing leanings. Robert Welch found it possible, therefore, to say quite flatly that "Communist influences are now in almost complete control of our Federal Government" and that the Supreme Court of the United States "is one of the most important agencies of communism."

THE third of the common denominators characterizing the Right-Wing groups is a deep distrust of democratic institutions and of the democratic process — a distrust, in short, of the people. The Rightists never regard themselves as gullible or susceptible to Communist subversion; but they appear to be convinced that all their countrymen are outright simpletons ripe for a shift of loyalty at any moment from the Capitol to the Kremlin.

Thus, copying the organization of the Communist party, Mr. Welch declared that "the John Birch Society is to be a monolithic body * * *. Democracy is merely a deceptive phrase, a weapon of demagoguery, and a perennial fraud * * *. The John Birch Society will operate under completely authoritative control at all levels." And, with an ominous implication that he might in the future be quite willing to seek overthrow of the Government by force and violence, he asserted that his society could not rely on "politicians, political leadership or even political action."

The anti-democratic character of the extreme Right is perhaps most plainly manifested by its pronounced preference for military over civilian leadership. A most disquieting degree of cooperation has developed between leaders of the extreme Right-Wing groups and high-ranking officers of the American armed services. It was this cooperation that elicited from Senator J. W. Fulbright last summer his celebrated memorandum to the Pentagon asserting that too many military officers were meddling in American domestic politics under the guise of anti-communism and on the pretext of indoctrinating American troops.

The military programs of indoctrination have been aimed, in point of fact, at civilians as well as at men in uniform. The public information officer at the ~~Point Mugu, Calif.~~, Naval Missile Center took it upon himself, for instance, to "indoctrinate" more than sixty groups of civilians over a five-month period. He "taught" them that the nation's schools and churches have been infiltrated by Communists, that American newspapers should not be believed because the press is pro-Communist and he attacked the Governor of California for having criticized the John Birch Society.

IN the summer of 1960 at the Glenview, Ill., Naval Air Station and in February 1961 under military sponsorship in Houston, courses were given with the collaboration of Dr. Fred C. Schwarz for civilians and military personnel, adroitly mingling anti-communism with extreme Right-Wing politics.

Senator Fulbright's memorandum and the subsequent removal of Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker from his command of the Twenty-fourth Division in Germany touched off a major national controversy regarding military programs of indoctrination which impinge on political affairs. That controversy is likely soon to be acted out dramatically in hearings before the Senate Armed Services Committee. General Walker himself has now resigned from the Army —and in a letter to the Senate Committee has flung down a gauntlet which may make him the new champion of the far Right.

General Walker's letter seemed deliberately contrived to drive a wedge between civilian and military authority in the United States. Complaining bitterly about "censorship"—as though civilian officials had no business exercising control over military officers in regard to political activities—and about "the power of little men who, in the name of my country, punish loyal service to it," the General seemed to be trying to convince the country that civilians have been improperly and illegally putting a leash on the military.

He uses the term "censorship" in curious ways, speaking of "censorship of victory on the field of battle" in regard to the Korean War, "censorship of action" that led to the fall of the Chinese Nationalist Government in the Nineteen Forties and "harassment through censorship of execution" during the war in Greece.

ASSERTING that American boys enter on military service without adequate understanding of the enemy or knowledge of communism, General Walker says, "If it is now to be the case that commanders are restricted, or constrained by censorship, to certain limited areas of communication in their indoctrination of their soldiers, then the deficiency in training will go unremedied."

This is astonishing and alarming language for a professional soldier. A paragraph later, the General observes that "our defense is based on the concept of a civilian military establishment with regular Army support" and adds that "to presume a military coup by such an army is patently preposterous." So it has always been in the United States. But when one reflects upon the conduct of General Salan in France, can one feel wholly comfortable about military officers who denounce civilian leaders as corrupt and treasonable and who work hand in hand with Rightist groups which have rejected democracy?

WHAT is the strength of the extreme Right today? The number of its adherents cannot be determined with any accuracy; and, as has been observed with regard to the subversives on the extreme Left, numbers do not afford a satisfactory index to influence. A score or more of Rightist groups are now vying with one another for supremacy.

Most formidable among them in terms of membership, money and notoriety are the John Birch Society and the Christian Anti - Communist Crusade. The sheer extravagance of some of Robert Welch's utterances may have somewhat dimmed the luster of the former and diminished the breadth of its appeal. It takes a fairly strong stomach to subscribe to Mr. Welch's statement that "Dwight Eisenhower is a dedicated, conscious agent of the Communist conspiracy."

Dr. Schwarz' Christian Anti - Communist Crusade, which has said nothing quite so shocking, is now busily expanding its operations from a Southern California base to national proportions. Dr. Schwarz says that 70,000 persons contribute to his organization. In point of fact, he has had some impressive endorsements, including a hearty pat on the back from C. D. Jackson, the publisher of Life, and television sponsorship by such considerable industrial firms as the Richfield Oil Co., the Schick Safety Razor Co. and the Technicolor Corp. The Crusade seems to be well-heeled and shrewdly led.

Most frenetic of the fanatics is the group calling itself the Minutemen, whom President Kennedy derided in his Southern California speech last week. They have actually organized themselves into armed bands of civilian guerrillas—waiting, no doubt, for Der Tag.

UNDOUBTEDLY the extreme Right is going to exercise a powerful negative influence in the difficult and inevitably frustrating years immediately ahead. Its weight will be thrown against Federal aid to education, against medical care for the aged, against generosity to the indigent—the municipal authorities of Newburgh, N. Y., seem to reflect its welfare philosophy —against civil liberties in general; and in foreign affairs it will strive militantly to represent any concessions to the Russians or to the Chinese as treasonable, any consideration for this country's allies as craven and any squeamishness about extermination of the human race in an atomic holocaust as subversively sentimental.

Lacking any realistic affirmative program, however, the Right is unlikely to be able to grasp the reins of political power in the United States. Genuine conservatives devoted to the nation's traditions, values and institutions will be reluctant to identify themselves with the extremists or to make common cause with them.

THE Rightists will no doubt seek to capture control of the Republican party but they are unlikely to succeed. Their darling just now is Barry Goldwater. But the Senator will be obliged before very long to choose between the support of the Rightists and the support of real Republicans who will not care to forsake the traditions of their party for a forlorn kind of fascism.

This much can be said with assurance: the American people are not about to do away with the income tax or social security or the intelligent use of their Government for the accomplishment of public purposes; they are not about to substitute military for civilian authority; they are not about to forgo self-government for the sake of some evangelistic fuehrer. The Right may make itself a nuisance; but it will not make itself into a government. It is not a wave of the future; it is a voice of frustration and despair, a wail from an irrecoverable past.

ASSAULT ON THE CONSTITUTION

Three proposed "States' rights" amendments could turn history back almost two hundred years.

By Sol Rabkin

CREEPING reaction has a long history as a phenomenon of American political life. It thrives when the glare of public attention is not upon it. It usually shrivels under the impact of public awareness.

Reaction will take a mighty leap forward, if a program to amend the Constitution of the United States, now creeping through state legislatures, is not halted by public understanding of its purpose. The program is reaction in the most literal sense of the word—a counterthrust to the series of basic civil rights decisions handed down by the U.S. Supreme Court in the past decade.

The Court's rulings in the racial segregation cases might not have been enough to start the program through the State legislatures, but the added push of its ruling in 1962 in Baker v. Carr, the Tennessee electoral reapportionment case, which struck a blow at the gerrymandering of state legislatures, was. The ruling in Baker v. Carr hit at the power of rural legislators who dominate State legislative bodies at the expense of city and suburban areas. Since legislators from rural counties are not likely to give up their prerogatives easily, the Baker v. Carr decision has forged a natural alliance between segregation-minded states and rural-dominated states.

Unhappily, the activities of State legislators and legislatures are not subject to the concentrated public attention which scrutinizes the operations of every facet of federal government. Even so important a state as New York does not keep a verbatim record of proceedings in its legislature as the Congress or the courts do. Much state legislation goes unreported by the press and unnoticed by the people. Thus, a meeting last December of a group called the Council of State Governments went almost unnoticed. But out of that meeting came three proposed amendments to the U.S. Constitution, so revolutionary in their impact, that if adopted the nation would be set back not to pre-1954, the year of the school desegregation decision, but to pre-1789, the year the Constitution replaced the Articles of Confederation as the basic law of the land.

Mr. Rabkin is director of ADL's national law department.

Actions of state legislatures often go unnoticed.

THESE are the proposals:

- A Constitutional amendment that would permit State legislatures to amend the Constitution without consideration by any national forum. Twelve states—Arkansas, Florida, Idaho, Illinois, Kansas, Missouri, New Hampshire, Oklahoma, South Carolina, South Dakota, Texas and Wyoming—approved the proposal. One house in each of seven other states—Colorado, Indiana, Iowa, Mississippi, New Mexico, Oregon and Wisconsin—has also approved.
- An amendment that would establish a "Court of the Union," composed of the chief justices of the highest court in each of fifty states, with authority to review and reverse decision of the U.S. Supreme Court. The proposal met with immediate approval by Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, South Carolina and Wyoming and by one house in Mississippi, New Mexico, South Dakota and Wisconsin.
- An amendment that would reverse Baker v. Carr by removing all federal constitutional restrictions on how states apportion representation in their legislatures. Twelve states acted at once to approve—Arkansas, Idaho, Kansas, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, Oklahoma, South Carolina, South Dakota, Texas, Washington and Wyoming. Utah's legislature approved the proposal but in different language; approval by Nebraska's legislature was vetoed by the governor; one house in the legislatures of Colorado, Illinois, Iowa, Mississippi and Oregon gave approval.

One house of the New Jersey legislature approved all three amendments, but then rescinded its action.

Such swift movement of the amendments through state legislatures was made possible only by the lack of public understanding or discussion of the consequences of their enactment. The second thoughts entertained by the New Jersey legislature is a case in point; someone in New Jersey woke up to the revolutionary impact of the proposed amendments.

WHAT are their consequences?

The adoption of the first proposed amendment would reverse the entire course of American history, would, in fact, turn the United States back to the days when this nation consisted of a group of thirteen squabbling local sovereignties, each primarily concerned with its own narrow, sectional interests.

Giving states the power to change the Constitution smacks of the thinking inherent in the Articles of Confederation: "Each state retains its sovereignty, freedom and independence, and every power, jurisdiction and right which is not by this Confederation expressly delegated to the United States, in Congress assembled."
